Roger Tracy's fears were fully realized; for, when Mike next appeared at choir rehearsal, the boys either deliberately turned their backs upon him or stared stonily at him without recognition. He was "cut" by old friends and ostracised by all his choir associates; he was an outcast among those by whom he had previously been looked up to and respected. None spoke to him but Roger; and, as Mike knew that Roger, though popular with the boys, ran the risk of a similar estrangement by anything resembling intimate intercourse with himself, he skillfully managed to give his friend few opportunities of doing more than exchange a commonplace remark now and then. Roger, however, did not misinterpret Mike's strange conduct, for he fully understood and appreciated the motives that prompted it; so, when during a lull in the rehearsal he found Mike looking in his direction, he would sometimes solemnly wink one eye in silent and unnoticed salutation to the friend who would not permit an open recognition, and then the other eye would suddenly fill with tears, and he would have to turn his face quickly away to conceal them from his friend—though, even as he did so, he felt the impossibility of hiding his feelings from Mike's sharp, discerning eye. Altogether, Mike's existence was a very trying one, and could not have been supported by a boy of less force of character; nor did the honor of his position as soloist lessen the misery and wretchedness caused by the desertion of comrades and friends. But, after that one burst of weakness in the presence of his mother, he was as good as his word, and never thought of giving up the fight or of succumbing to the trials and difficulties that beset him.

Easter came and went, and matters still stood thus, when, one day, Mr. Tracy announced that, in consideration of the excellent work done by the boys in recent months, he had decided to have a grand choir picnic and spend a day somewhere in the fields and woods. The time was set, preparations were commenced, and all the boys looked eagerly forward to a day of wild delight and unalloyed pleasure. All? Well, almost all—all but Mike; but, as no one ever held any communication with him now, he was entirely forgotten. He no longer had any part or share in their plans and pleasures; so, of course, it mattered not at all what he thought or how he felt.

During all this time Mr. Tracy had not forgotten his determination to observe and study Mike; and, perhaps, his quiet eyes saw much further and their owner knew far more than any of the boys could have imagined or believed.

* * * * * * * *

It almost seemed as if that day in early June was a special dispensation of divine Providence for the particular benefit of the choir picnic; so clear was the atmosphere, so delightfully blue the vast reach of the great dome above, without cloud or speck to break its eternal unfathomable depths.

As the cars sped meekly and submissively on in the trail of the roaring, panting monster that led the frantic flight out of the close, stuffy city into the fresh, balmy country; as the boys were whirled along—now suspended over sparkling streams, now dashing across verdant meadows and through shady groves, now toiling up and over some breezy hill, and anon rushing down into some enticing little dale or valley; as the train flew on, ever onward, away from the restraint of boundaries, away from the formalities of convention, into the freedom of unlimited space, into the restful unceremoniousness of nature—the boys grew uproarious in their enjoyment and enthusiasm, and chatted and shouted to each other in reckless competition with the roar and rattle of the thundering cars.

Seated by himself in a car that contained none of the choirboys, Mike gazed thoughtfully out upon the panorama that passed before his view; gazed until the picture grew dim and everything in his vision seemed blurred and indistinct. He winked hard, and drove back the tears that were dangerously near to falling. As he did so, some one came through the car, looking to right and left as he passed down the aisle. The searcher's face lit up when his eyes rested on Mike, and he seated himself in the vacant place beside the "coward."

Mike turned and looked into Roger Tracy's face.

It was strangely thoughtful and subdued. Usually, Roger was so full of spirits that he was generally the life of a party of boys.

"Mike" he said, laying his hand on his friend's shoulder and speaking as if to himself, "it's a beautiful day, isn't it?"

"Perfect," replied Mike.

"A great day for us boys; that is, for most of us; and yet I don't feel a bit happy, and shall get no pleasure out of this trip."

"Nor I," said Mike, moodily.

"No, of course not," replied Roger, sympathetically. "I was afraid," he ventured after a pause, "that you wouldn't come."

"Nor would I," said Mike, "but for two reasons. First, I didn't want your father to think I don't appreciate the opportunity; and, second, it would have been cowardly to stay away merely to avoid the disagreeableness of it; though," he added bitterly, "I don't suppose one act of cowardice more or less need make any difference to a chap with such an enviable reputation in that direction as mine."

Roger's face fell, and it was easy to guess from his voice that he was pained.

"Mike," he said, quietly, "you don't mean that. It isn't like you to talk that way, for you know it hurts those who care for you."

Mike grasped his friend's hand, and said humbly,

"Forgive me, Roger. No, I didn't mean it, and am sorry I said it; but, sometimes, things do seem a little hard, especially when one is trying his best to do the right thing."

"Mike," said the boy, with a little quiver in his voice, "you haven't given me much of a chance to speak to you lately, and I don't know when I shall have another opportunity, so I'd like to say now that I think I know how you must feel, and I can't tell you how sorry I am. I've always been your true friend, Mike, and always shall, I think; and I guess you'll never know how much I hate this whole business and how much it has hurt me on your account."

"I believe it, Roger," said Mike, as he looked into his friend's sympathetic face and clear, honest eyes. "I believe you, old fellow, and have always felt so of you. But, come," he added, "we're getting near our stopping place and you must go back to the boys, for I don't want them to see you with me. I wouldn't for anything drag you into my scrape."

With a shake of the hands and a sad smile the two friends parted; but, somehow, both felt better than they had for weeks.

"Yes," said Mr. Tracy, laughingly, in answer to the volley of inquiries hurled vociferously at him. "Yes, any of you who care to do so may go in bathing. We have this quiet, secluded spot all to ourselves; the water is clean and pure; the river bottom is sandy all along here; the bank has the most gentle slope imaginable, and I don't think you could possibly find a safer and more delightful place for the purpose. But, remember," he went on warningly, shaking his finger at them, "I shall time you by the watch. You may have just half an hour in the water. When I call, I want every boy to get out at once and dress as quickly as possible, for choirboys can't afford to have colds. And, boys," he added, as his eye rested upon a decayed and dilapidated wharf which jutted into the river a hundred yards further down the stream, and which had, probably, been used in some period of the history of the deserted brick-yard just below it, "don't go on that old wharf, you might be tempted to jump off it, and the water is quite deep at the end of it, and the current dangerous, even to those of you who swim."

As a matter of fact, there were but three boys in the choir who were masters of this art. These were Bertie, Roger and Mike. Bertie and Roger had been carefully taught at the swimming school in the city, while Mike had learned, as he had learned many another thing, no one knew how, and was as much at home in the water as a duck. Bertie's friend, Willie, could swim some, but was very inexperienced and fearful.

It is amazing beyond expression in what a marvelously short time a group of small boys will shed their clothes on a hot day by the side of a cool, inviting stream. One moment you see them standing on the river bank, fully dressed and talking vehemently. For an instant you look away, in order to make a murderous stroke with your hat or pocket handkerchief at a pugnacious bee that circles swaggeringly about your head with blustering buzz, intimidating bravado, and evidently evil intent, and when your eye returns to the bank the boys have vanished, though careful scrutiny may reveal some heads bobbing, cork-like, on the water beneath the blazing sun, while flashing forms may be detected, rushing hither and thither in the shallower water, shouting and shrieking at the tops of their voices.

Little Bobby Fears was afraid of the water, Gussy Chillingly thought it "too cold," and Charlie Vainser could not go in because he had on a new pair of trousers that would have been utterly ruined by leaving them on the sand in the hot sun; so these three went over to a wild cherry tree close by, which Charlie climbed. He crawled from limb to limb, and, when he had eaten the most tempting and luscious cherries he could find on a branch, he would stand upon it and considerately shake down the rest, so that Bobby and Gussy might be well supplied. He tore his trousers in several places, but it was entirely accidental and could not possibly have been avoided; and when mother had to mend them she would not scold him if he explained that the damage was done while he was getting cherries "for his friends," who could not climb trees.

Unfortunately, in reaching after a remarkably fine cluster, the sight of which almost made the water drip from his mouth, Charlie lost his balance and fell. He clutched frantically at the limbs of the tree as he bumped from branch to branch, and, when he reached the last limb, he managed to hold it for a moment, just long enough to turn him right side up, then his hands slipped and he landed on the ground upon his feet, thanks to that saving branch, with no bones broken, but very badly shaken up.

Little Bobby rushed at once for Mr. Tracy, who was strolling up and down the river bank keeping a watchful eye upon the boys in the water, and the choirmaster hurried to Charlie's aid. He soothed the frightened lad as best he could, and bathed his stunned and aching head in cool water from a spring near by, while Bobby and Gussy excitedly discussed the various phases of Charlie's fall through the tree, and argued hotly as to how many turns he had made and what branches he had struck in his descent.

As the best means of restoring Charlie's shaken nerves, Mr Tracy suggested that the boy lie down on a mossy bank beneath the old cherry tree and try to take a little nap. This Charlie was perfectly willing to do after his mishap, and the man sat patiently by and fanned him with a newspaper until he fell asleep.

Why Charlie fell out of the tree, why Mr. Tracy was thus called away from the other boys, why he was detained so long by Charlie's side it is impossible either to tell or to comprehend; but, sometimes we have to be satisfied with merely stating facts that we can neither explain nor understand. As a truthful historian, I have related the facts; and, from my knowledge of the circumstances and my acquaintance with the characters of this story, I think it no exaggeration to say that what occurred at the river during Mr. Tracy's absence will leave upon the minds of all who were present an impression whose indelibility none will doubt, whose vividness has not been dimmed by the lapse of years, and whose sadness will abide as long as recollection remains.

Moral Treatment of Epilepsy.

BY FREDERICK PETERSON, M D.,

In American Medico-Surgical Bulletin.

I cannot forbear referring here for a moment, in closing, to the moral treatment of epilepsy, which is certainly new, and which has not received until lately any of the consideration which it merited. It is only too well known to all of us how epileptics have been dismissed with a prescription, and possibly some advice as to regulating the diet, rest and exercise. But the special needs of this peculiarly unfortunate class of dependents had never been brought fully before the profession. No hospitals receive them. The schools cannot take them. No one wishes to employ them. They are ostracised from society, forbidden to take part in the recreations of their fellows, and shunned, more or less, by everybody. Untaught, idle, sick, neglected, they drift finally into the only shelter offered them—almshouses and insane asylums. But a large majority of them, were it not for their attacks, could be educated in schools, could acquire trades, could enjoy recreations, and take a part in the affairs of mankind. Thus it is that a scheme of colonizing them has been undertaken in several of the United States, following the example of Germany and France. I will only allude briefly to the plan already in operation in the State of New York, at Craig Colony. The State has here a tract of nearly one thousand nine hundred acres of the best kind of agricultural land with already some thirty to forty buildings upon it. Here the epileptics of the State already upon public charge are being congregated (there are over one thousand to be cared for in this manner) and are to be given education in the usual branches of learning, taught every kind of industrial occupation, to be treated for their malady, and be afforded a home in a sort of village life, where they will no longer feel their social isolation nor be debarred from the innumerable privileges enjoyed by the rest of humanity. This moral treatment of epilepsy is by far the greatest stride in advance taken for centuries in the therapeutics of one of the most distressing of nervous diseases.

The Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital and Colony Farm (formerly St. Clement's), is an institution on the same plan as the above mentioned Craig Colony, and is one of the first of its kind in this country.—ED.

Reunion.

Whatever the public press, or even some so-called church papers, both Anglican and Roman, may say, the cause of reunion is in reality more flourishing than ever. The Roman Catholics in England and certain Episcopalians in this country, who do not desire reunion from motives of the pettiest spite and bigotry, are trying to twist the last Encyclical of Leo XIII Satis cognitum into an utterance unfavorable to the Anglican orders. It is nothing of the sort.

Rome has practically recognized the validity of our priesthood. The best theologians and ablest scholars in Rome acknowledge that we have true Orders and not one word of authoritative condemnation can be found in the Encyclical for this opinion. The Encyclical deals with the relation of the Pope to the Bishops—an entirely different question.

It cannot be expected that an action of such vast importance as reunion can take place in a short time, and the questions involved are too great. Nevertheless the sifting of the questions and the doing away of prejudice have been begun, and by God's grace will continue. The greatest minds in the Anglican and Roman churches are engaged in a friendly conference. One point, while not yet officially set forth, has nevertheless practically been decided by Rome in our favor. The Anglican church has valid orders.

Very properly His Holiness has now suggested the next subject for consideration by the Roman Church, namely the Papal claims. Some may consider the statements of the Satis cognitum as unfortunate as the prayer to the Virgin—so distasteful to Northern habits of devotion—in his former Encyclical. The Guardian, for July 8th, points out some serious defects in this letter. But the Encyclical, of course, is not a final, but only a preliminary utterance, and now that both sides are willing to face facts, the questions suggested will doubtless soon reach an issue.

Continue your prayers for reunion.

Duties.

No person is a true Catholic who does not give to the support of his religion.

No person is a true Catholic who does not attend mass every Sunday.

The lack of interest and regularity at mass is most often a direct result of an ungenerous support of our religion. We value what we pay for. A religion that costs us nothing will never hold us long.

This is not a plea for money. It is simply the presentation of facts and principles and duties. Nothing is easier to observe than that those who give go to church, and that those churches flourish most where the word is give rather than get. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The great mass of people in want and need of assistance in this country to-day are those who never gave to the church in their prosperity, and who have, consequently, lost God's blessing. "Blessed is he that provideth for the sick and needy, the Lord shall deliver him in the time of trouble."

Repairs.

The necessary repairs have gone on during the month; the windows are finished, new glass and lead have been put in all but two of the side windows, and one of the stained glass windows has been repaired and ventilators opened. The effect has been to make the Church very much brighter, and in other ways has made an improvement. The upper parts of the windows have been cleaned, as have also the round ones at the ends of the Church.

The pointing of the stone work has gone on, and is almost finished. It has made a great change in the appearance of the exterior, and it does not now look quite so much as if it would tumble down. The outside wood-work has been painted, and altogether the appearance of the Church is quite satisfactory. Some other repairs have been found necessary. The best of the whole matter is that we shall not have to incur any debt, although the amount is quite large for us. The additional work may bring the cost up to $1,200.

During the month we have received $266, making in all for this purpose $890.09. We hope that those who have not given, may do so, as it is a matter in which all are concerned, and all ought to be interested.

The Religious Life.

The revival of the religious life in the Anglican Communion goes on unchecked. Both in England and America the efficiency and success of communities of women for religious and charitable works have long since been assured. Most of the older communities continue to grow and new ones are being formed. It is stated that there are, at the present time, more women Religious in the Church of England than there were before the Reformation. The orders for men, both priests and laymen, are steadily and healthily increasing. The fact that at Cowley the first Conventual Church built in England since the Reformation has been publicly dedicated by dignitaries of the Church is well-known. In this country the Order of the Holy Cross is growing gradually; it is an indication of the times also; and now it is announced in the papers that a new American order is to be founded in Philadelphia. The good religious orders of priests can do is limitless. Whether in the missionary field, in parochial missions, in preaching, in conferences, in teaching, in presenting a high model of spiritual life, in giving retreats, or in writing books, it is in their hands to determine the future of the Church, to be the advance guards, the knights errant of the Catholic religion.

Success to the new order.

Parish Notes.

The Rev. C. C. Quin is assisting in the work of the clergy.

The Rev. W. C. Clapp, the Rev. H. Parrish, and the Rev. E. Wright are away for rest and recreation.

The members of St. Vincent's Guild spent the Fourth of July in camp, near Croydon, Penna. From all accounts they had a very good time.

It has been decided to be advisable to give the members of the choir two or three Sundays holiday; they have worked so faithfully that we feel they well deserve it; on those Sundays we shall depend on the congregation to sing hymns at 11 and 8 o'clock.

A short service for children has been held on Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock; very few children have attended, but we hardly expected they would; two or three teachers have been very regular. It is well, sometimes, to try to keep along all summer, even if it does mean extra work for those who are in the city.

The children of the catechism and of the infant school had a day's outing at Burlington, New Jersey, on Wednesday, July 1st. The use of the grounds of the college was kindly given to us; the day was spent in a very enjoyable manner.

The chapel lamps have been furnished with balance balls, that the former awkward arrangement for lighting could be done away with.

Flowers for the Altar.

Some of our parishioners have not forgotten our needs, and have sent boxes of flowers for the adornment of the altar. We desire to thank them for their kindness.

The Sea-shore Home.

The house has been full ever since it was opened on the arrival of the first party, and all accommodation is bespoken until the time of closing in September. The situation in many respects is very much better than that of the former house; it is nearer to the beach, nearer to the village and to the church; this alone is a decided gain. One other advantage; it has been possible to have a daily mass in the temporary chapel; this has been arranged through the kindness of some Priests, who were willing to take their holiday at Point Pleasant and to be responsible for it.

The Right Reverend, the Bishop of Chicago, celebrated on one of the Sundays. The Rev. Jesse Higgins, of Westminster and Rev. C. M. Murray, of Baltimore, have taken the week days.

The Mother Superior of All Saints gave the use of the furniture in the chapel.

Any one who has seen the happy looks of the children and the relieved faces of the women does not need to be told how beneficial the outing is for them.

Certain of the members of the Guild of the Holy Cross have helped the Sisters in the care and management of the children.

Money is needed that the season may close without debt; bills have to be paid, rent and food are not given, and railroad tickets cost money even at reduced rates.

There are some curious inscriptions on a few of the tomb-stones in the burial ground of Old St. David's Church, Radnor, where "Mad" Anthony Wayne is buried. Following are two which seemed especially curious.

"This modest stone,
What few vain marbles can,
May truly say:
Here lies an honest man."

The second is:

"Here beside her lies her mother and her
Sister, by whom she set great store.
God called her home to rest with them
And never part'no more."

A PLAIN STORY.

Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys.

By A Plain Choirman.

At the request of Willie Smith, who, as he expressed it, wanted to "learn to be a fancy swimmer," Bertie and Roger performed many of the tricks they had acquired at the city swimming school, while the rest of the boys stood looking on—a group of admiring and envious spectators.

"I tell you what, Charlie," said George Carter as he threw a handful of sand upon the back of a boy in front of him and then turned innocently to his friend and continued his remark, "I tell you what, Bertie and Roger can swim; can't they?"

At this moment, a mischevious youth glided up behind Charlie and tripped the latter's feet from under him. With his mouth opened and the first word of his reply upon his lips, Charlie sat suddenly and unexpectedly upon the sandy bottom, while the water closed over his head and flowed into his mouth and up his nose.

For a moment there was a wild commotion, not unlike that which one might imagine would result from a combat of sea monsters, and then, amid a swaying of limbs and many marvelous contortions of the body, Charlie arose, spluttering and coughing, vowing vengeance upon the perpetrator of such "a mean, sneaking trick," and looking fiercely but in vain for a guilty countenance.

"You said Bertie and Roger were good swimmers, Shorty," he coughed, turning to George Carter, who had been nicknamed "Shorty" because he was the tallest boy in the choir, "but"—here he paused to dash a spray of water into a laughing face whose twinkling eyes made him conclude, upon general principles, that the owner had a certain knack of knocking people's feet from under them, "but you ought to see Mike in the water if you want to know what swimming is. My, he can swim!"

"Good?" inquired Shorty, tersely and doubtfully.

"Fine!" answered Charley, with an emphasis and inflection that implied all sorts of things.

"Where is he now?"

"Over there, under that tree on the bank. He's been lying there watching us ever since we came in, and I'll bet he wishes he was in the water with us, but he's too proud to come in when the boys won't speak to him. I wish he was here, though, just to take the conceit out of those two fellows and show them that they don't know as much about swimming as they think they do."

This was said through no feeling of personal ill will towards Roger and Bertie; but partly because, being unable to swim himself, Charlie resented the superiority of the two boys and had a vague desire to see them "taken down a bit." Then, too, he cherished a great admiration for Mike; and, whilst he had not the moral courage to stand out openly in support of his convictions, he felt, as did many other of the boys in their secret hearts, that Mike was being unjustly treated and that the charge of cowardice was untrue.

"Oh, I'm tired of this," exclaimed Willie at length, when he found that the "tricks" were not as easy as they seemed. "Let's have a long swim, from here to that old ladder that's nailed to this side of the wharf out there. See it? You fellows swim one on each side of me; and then, if I get tired, you can give me a shoulder."

Off they started, amid a strange mixture of jeers and plaudits. The distance was not great, probably not over a hundred yards; but to Willie's fearfulness and lack of skill, it seemed a dangerously long swim. When they reached the wharf, he was panting and exhausted.

"Let's climb up the ladder and rest a bit on the pier," suggested Bertie.

"Tracy said we musn't," gasped Willie.

"Oh he didn't mean that," said Bertie confidently. "He said he didn't want us to jump off the end of the landing because the current is so swift there. He wouldn't mind our sitting here for a few minutes to get a breath."

The ladder was a rough, clumsy affair fastened to the wharf about twenty feet from the end.

"I'm not at all tired," said Roger, "so I'll just hold on here by the bottom round until you fellows are ready to start back again."

Realizing what a delicate and embarrassing position Mr. Tracy would be in should his son become involved in any of the misconduct and mischief in which the boys sometimes indulged, Roger was at all times extremely careful to observe to the letter all his father's injunctions; yet he did this so skilfully and with such quiet tact, and withal, displayed a spirit of such good-fellowship, that few boys in the choir were more popular than he.

"I'm going up, for I'm nearly done for," panted Willie. "Move to one side, Roger, so that I can get up the ladder."

Roger did as requested, and as he turned his back upon Willie, his gaze wandered off to the shore and fell upon a solitary figure reclining lazily under the shade of a big oak tree and watching the boys at the wharf.

"Poor old Mike," thought Roger sorrowfully. "He would enjoy this swim immensely; but, after all, I guess he's right not to come in, for the pain would spoil all the pleasure."

He waved his hand, and the figure under the tree took off its hat and shook it in acknowledgment of the salutation.

So absorbed was Roger in his own reflections, and so much engrossed in watching his friend, that he was utterly oblivious to what was occurring behind him. He did not see Willie begin his ascent of the ladder; was unaware that his foot slipped from the first round, causing a sharp blow upon his leg; did not notice him involuntarily grasp the injured limb with one hand; did not see the other slide from its slimy hold, causing the boy to fall backward and disappear in the water; in fact, he saw and heard nothing until his attention was attracted by a gurgling shout of "Help! Help, Bertie! Hurry, I can't keep up!" Then he turned.

Willie had risen a couple of yards from the ladder, and that much nearer the end of the wharf. The current, as Mr. Tracy had said, grew swifter toward that point; and the boy, too exhausted and frightened to make any effective effort, was being carried rapidly out to the extremity of the old landing.

He continued to call wildly upon Bertie for assistance, but the latter seemed paralyzed with terror. With pale face and wide, startled eyes, he gazed down into the agonized countenance below him.

"Jump, Bert!" cried Roger. "Jump, at once, before he gets into the swifter current! I'll go with you; and between us, we'll swing him into the wharf. Now then, together!" and with a spring, Roger plunged from the ladder to Willie's assistance.

Roger's clear voice, full of indescribable anxiety, reached the ears of the crowd of boys further up the stream, and caused them to turn startled-faces toward the old pier, where Bertie still stood, statue-like, watching Roger's gallant effort.

Willie's frantic exertions seemed to result only in carrying him further from safety; and, when Roger at last succeeded in reaching him, they were almost at the point of the wharf.

Willie grasped Roger by the shoulder with a convulsive force that caused the latter a twinge of pain, and was on the point of throwing his arms about his preserver, in what would undoubtedly have been a death embrace, when Roger restrained him by saying calmly:

"There, you have enough support to keep you afloat. Just rest on my shoulder and give me free play or you'll drown us both."

Fortunately, Willie realized the truth of this, and the fear of death enabled him to comply with Roger's directions.

The current here was so strong that Roger, burdened as he was, could make absolutely no headway against it; so, seeing that his only hope lay in grasping a timber or some projection of the pier as the current carried them past its extremity, he calmly ceased all effort and husbanded his strength for the crisis.

As they floated within reach of the corner of the wharf, Roger made a lunge forward and clutched desperately at a great spike. He touched it with the ends of his fingers and hooked them partially around it. Their bodies swung out beyond the pier into the swiftest part of the current; and, with a feeling akin to despair, Roger felt his fingers slipping from the slimy surface of the spike, and then—then, he and Willie were clear of the landing and were being carried slowly down stream and away from help, in spite of Roger's desperate struggle against the powerful current. He felt that, alone, he could make sufficient headway to regain the pier, but he realized with a feeling of agony that it would now be impossible to save both himself and Willie without prompt and spirited assistance. Yet he did not once think of deserting his comrade, but threw all his energies into the hopeless struggle, and put all his power into the stroke that seemed so feeble and puny in comparison with the strength of that relentless current. He could not even cry for help, for all his faculties were concentrated in the single effort of regaining the wharf.

When Roger's grasp was torn from its hold upon the great iron nail, Bertie's tongue was loosened, and cry after cry rose upon the still summer air. In his torturing fear and utter helplessness he rushed wildly up and down the pier; and, as his eyes fell upon Mike; he forgot his enmity; forgot the bitter contempt with which he had treated Mike; forgot all the wrong he had done him; forgot that he had no right to call upon him for aid—even forgot that Mike was a "coward," and that, therefore, no assistance could be expected from him in sudden and terrible danger like the present.

"Mike," he shouted, "help! Bertie and Roger are drowning! Don't you hear me? Hurry, I say, or you'll be too late!"

Mike, as he lay indolently upon the grassy bank waving his hat to Roger, had seen Willie slip from the old ladder, had heard his frightened appeal to Bertie, had beheld Roger plunge bravely to the rescue, expecting Bertie to follow; and, almost in the same instant that he realized what had happened, Mike's coat and hat were dashed upon the ground and his nimble fingers were rapidly freeing the lacings of his shoes with a dexterity that knew not how to bungle.

Of the group of boys who stood breathlessly watching the struggle of their comrades in the water, Charlie Goodhart alone preserved his presence of mind, and nothing seemed to escape his sharp eyes.

"Look!" he exclaimed, laying his hand upon George Carter's shoulder. "Look at Roger and Willie. They have been swept out beyond the wharf into the current. And, see," he added, and the hand upon Carter's shoulder trembled with excitement, "Mike's going to the rescue."

His words had been overheard by the others, and they all turned to watch the brief and rapid preparations of the figure upon the bank—a figure that had now lost all trace of the easy indolence it had previously displayed.

"Say, Shorty," cried Charlie suddenly, his face lighting up with what was really an inspiration, "there's going to be trouble out there. Run and get the rope we brought for the tug-of-war. You'll find it right up there on the bank under the willow. Then get down to the wharf with it as fast as you can. I'll go for Tracy and have him here in a jiffy. Hurry, old boy. Run as you never ran before, for something in my bones tells me that everything will depend on that rope."

Realizing the value of the suggestion and the importance of instant action, Shorty was off like the wind. Along the beach he tore like a madman, his long legs seeming fairly to devour distance.

Scarcely had Charlie reached the beach on his way to Mr. Tracy, when the choirmaster appeared on the brow of the bank and came hurrying down to the shore. He was just in time to hear Bertie's wild appeal to Mike; an appeal that was entirely unnecessary, but Bertie's frenzy of excitement made him utterly oblivious to the fact that Mike was acting with all the rapidity he could command.

And the choirmaster was also just in time to see a lithe form, without coat, hat or shoes, flit with the noiselessness and speed of a spectre down the long, dilapidated pier.

Bertie ceased his cries for help as he saw this apparition approaching. So Mike would listen to him, would forget how shabbily they had all treated him, would save Willie and Roger. Bertie was oppressed by a vague, undefined consciousness that, but for his own disobedience in clambering upon the wharf, Willie would not have been tempted to follow. Then, everything might still have been well and all this terrible danger and horrible fear avoided; and, somehow, as he saw Mike spring forward, he felt an inexplicable feeling of relief, a sense that everything was now all right and that there was no cause for further anxiety. Dimly, he saw Mike's form flash past him, and two flying, stockinged feet planted upon the string piece of the old wharf lightly, yet with a firmness and force that made the ancient timber tremble; vaguely, he beheld a dark body shoot suddenly forward, describe a graceful curve and sink, head foremost, into the water in a manner that made one think of a huge javelin hurled into the river from the hand of a giant. There was half a minute of suspense, then a head rose above the surface at quite a distance from the pier and close beside the well nigh exhausted Roger and his helpless burden.

As through a mist, Bertie sees that figures are flitting all about him; that some of the larger boys are now upon the wharf, having rushed thither to be of what use they could; that Shorty Carter is dashing wildly down the beach with the tug-of-war rope dangling from one long, bony arm; faintly, and as though at a great distance, he hear voices urging Shorty to greater exertions and still more frantic haste—hears Mr. Tracy shouting directions from the point of the wharf in a voice which, though outwardly calm, has an unmistakable ring of agony.

It is said that actions speak more loudly than words, but there are times when eyes speak more effectively than either—times when eyes can express thoughts and feelings that can be communicated in no other way; and, as Roger and Mike approached each other and eyes met eyes—clear, honest, fearless eyes—looks were exchanged which were destined to linger forever in the memory of the owner of two of those eyes.

Slowly, and with inconceivable labor, the boys at length came within reach of the rope which Mr. Tracy flung to them.

"You take it, Mike," panted Roger, "and help Willie out. When you reach the wharf you can fling it to me. I'm not strong enough to hold him up any longer."

"But," suggested Mike rapidly, "hadn t I better pass the rope around him and stay with you until it's thrown again? You're nearly spent, while I'm almost fresh."

"No, no," gasped Roger, almost impatiently. "If he should slip away, we'd never be able to do the thing over again."

This was true; and, seeing that, in Roger's exhausted condition, time was precious, Mike wasted no more words, but, passing his left arm about Willie and grasping the rope in his right hand, he was hauled quickly toward the landing. He knew that Roger, even if unable to make headway against the current, should experience no great difficulty in at least keeping afloat, yet he had observed a pinched, haggard look upon his friend's face, a compression of the mouth, an expression of desperate determination—amounting almost to positive suffering—that gave him a feeling of vague uneasiness and caused him to throw a look of such entreaty toward the pier that the choirmaster unconsciously increased the tension of his straining muscles, and soon Willie and Mike were standing in safety upon the wharf and Mr. Tracy was preparing to cast the line to Roger for whom he felt no great fear, as he knew him to be an expert swimmer.

And yet, in spite of his confidence in the boy's skill, the father's face suddenly grew so white and rigid, and the arm that poised the rope trembled so violently, that Mike, startled and dismayed, glanced quickly out at Roger and was horrified to discover that something was evidently seriously wrong with his friend, for Roger was making desperate but vain efforts merely to keep his head above the surface of the water, and the expression of mingled despair and resignation upon the set features was pitiful to witness.

Like a flash, there recurred to Mike the inexplicable look of pain he had observed upon Roger's face; he recollected his friend's strange impatience and his undisguised anxiety to have Willie placed in safety; and, with the remembrance of all this, came a sudden comprehension of the situation. He understood it all, now. Roger's violent exertions after his long stay in the water had brought on an attack of cramps. The boy had, probably, been struggling with this dread enemy when Mike reached him; but, with lofty courage, he had fought back the torturing pain; with noble self-sacrifice, he had accomplished the rescue of his helpless companion and, at the same time, secured the safety of his dearest friend. Now, with limbs paralyzed and body racked with suffering, he was hopelessly sinking. At this very moment his face was submerged and his eyes were set in a great, blank stare.

Sometimes thoughts occur to us at what seem to be strangely inopportune moments; and, as Mike stood there, he felt a profound shame, a sense of deep humiliation, for there came hazily into his brain a comparison of Roger's quiet, unobtrusive courage with his own resentful, impatient spirit in bearing the troubles that had come upon him. It did not occur to him that it sometimes requires greater endurance and higher courage to toil steadily on under continually vexing burdens than to make a single heroic effort.

With an expression the like of which Mike had never seen upon his choirmaster's face, Mr. Tracy threw down his hat and tore madly at his coat and vest.

But his movements were arrested by a hand laid lightly upon his arm.

He looked down into the face of the boy below him, a face that was transfigured by the light of a high resolution. For an instant they gazed into each other's souls, and knew one another suddenly but thoroughly—as we occasionally do in times of dire extremity, or when hearts are wrung with mortal anguish.

"I can be of as much use as you in the water," said a quiet voice, "but I can't do as well here, nor take your place should anything happen," and the next moment Mike was again in the stream, swimming vigorously toward his friend.

Several times Roger sunk before Mike reached him; and once he did not reappear.

With frantic haste, Mike swept down upon the spot where the face had last been, but his friend did not again rise.

Rev. Doctor Pusey's Day.

Remember September 16th. It is the day on which died Edward Bouverie Pusey, Saint and Doctor of the Church. No saint since the apostolic days is worthier of commemoration.

He was a Doctor of Divinity, not only in name but in learning. His scholarship was as great as that of the greatest theologians of Christendom. In Biblical Criticism, in Hebrew, Arabic, Ethiopic, Greek, Latin and German he was a master. The Fathers, the Schoolmen, the Controversialists, he knew thoroughly. At times he studied from fourteen to sixteen hours a day. His treatises on the "Minor Prophets;" his lectures on "Daniel;" his works on "Baptism," "Absolution," the "Eucharist" and the "Church" are monuments of research. Even the enemies of the Catholic Faith have expressed respect for his learning.

Moreover, he was a saint in the holiness of his life and in his devotion to the Saviour; given to prayer and charity and the edification of the Church he expended all the strength of his gifted nature and all the means at his disposal upon the religion of God; amid persecution and slander he lived a life of perfect humility and truthfulness and charity and self-denial and penitence—a living sacrifice to God.

Few saints in history equaled his learning; few equaled his piety; fewer still equaled the miracle of his works; through Doctor Pusey God revived the Catholic religion in our Church, Catholic doctrine, Catholic Sacraments, the Religious life, Confession, the Sacrifice of the Mass, all of our Catholic heritage he revived, restored, and gave back to a Church robbed and desecrated by the Protestant heresy.

Dr. Pusey shines as a burning light in the lists of Catholic saints.

In Memoriam.

Miss Hannah Smith died at Atlantic City, N. J., on Thursday, August 13th, 1896.

The above announcement will be read by many with a shock, as the parishioners of St. Clements had come to look upon "Miss Hannah," as she was familiarly called, as part and parcel of our parish, and it seems, therefore, only fitting that a few words of loving remembrance should mark her passing away, leaving it to other and abler pens to do justice to her life and works.

Miss Smith was a woman of marked character, of strong personality, warm affections and unusual force of will. But it matters little now and here to speak of her as of rare mental ability—high cultivation and a fine linguist—the crowning grace of her life, to which only we care to allude, was her unswerving devotion to the Catholic cause, to further the interests of which she would gladly have laid down her life, and above all her intense love for the blessed Sacrament.

Her early training was at St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, then the most advanced parish in churchmanship in the city, and there, in her heart and soul, were sown the first seeds, which ripened later in the rich and abundant harvest of full Catholic truth in her later and much loved parish of St. Clements.

Those whose privilege it was to work with her in that parish in those days can testify to her earnest and faithful work amongst the poor, ministering to both their temporal and spiritual needs, especially to the colored people, to whom through life she devoted herself chiefly, and who have lost in her a warm and firm friend.

It is surely scarcely necessary to mention amongst ourselves how long and true her service has been here. We who have watched that figure through winter's cold and summer's heat kneeling before the altar, where she daily sought and found her Lord, need no words to tell us how, with sadly failing health, she still gained strength for every duty and grace for every need.

Her vacant place will be most keenly felt when once more we gather for our winter's work, but we pray that her example may nerve us all to greater love and more earnest efforts to live and die for that dear Lord she loved and served so well.

What Our Church Has.

1. Our Church has the Catholic Faith. This Faith is found in the Creeds.

2. Our Church has the Catholic Sacraments. We are born in Baptism; we receive gifts of the Holy Ghost in Confirmation; we receive the Body and Blood of Christ in the Holy Eucharist. The Sacrament of Penance heals the sickness of sin. Our Priests have the power to anoint the sick with oil. Holy Matrimony and Holy Order also are ours for the building up of the Church.

3. Our Church has the True Priesthood. By the Sacrament of Order our Bishops, Presbyters and Deacons have received their authority from Christ Himself.

4. Our Church has the Holy Bible. The Inspired Word of God, the life, works and teachings of Christ and His Apostles is "a pearl of great price," and cannot be too highly valued.

5. Our Church has the Catholic Worship. The Sacrifice of the Mass is the only worship Christ Himself appointed in the New Law, and this is the central point of the Church's life. "What the center is in a circle, what the heart is in a man, what God is in the world; this almost is what the Eucharist is in the Church of Christ."

6. Our Church has the power of God the Holy Ghost, Who enlightens, strengthens, purifies, sanctifies each one who will use His grace.

A Warning.

Any parent who does not see to it that his children attend God's appointed worship on Sunday, and who does not himself set them an example by attending, thereby breaks the commandments of God. He is heaping up wrath against the day of wrath.

When such a parent's children, through lack of religious training, turn out badly themselves, it is more than likely that they will either turn against him to his harm, or else leave him comfortless in old age.

It is a grave sin to neglect the appointed worship of God's Church.

"Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day."

Parish Notes.

The choir holiday includes August 23d and 30th, and September 6th.

Money is very much needed that the Sea-shore Home may be closed without debt; any sum, however small, will be gladly received.

The repairs of the Church are completed as far as we have money, except some small matters. What a gain if we could have the heating arrangements put into good condition.

The floors of the Parish building are much improved by the oil and varnish.

The attendance during the hot weather has been very good, and the offerings have been very encouraging.

We ought to be thinking seriously about ways and means of paying off the ground rent at the next opportunity; it amounts to $13,000; the Trustees of Sinking Fund have about $1,000 invested for that purpose; at the very least we ought to raise $5,000 more; we can do it if all do what they can; the money given so willingly and cheerfully for the repairs leads one to hope that the greater number of the people need to have their privilege and duty brought before them.

The Abbé Portal on Unity.

The Abbé Portal, the French Roman Catholic priest, who has been so prominent in demonstrating the fact to Roman Catholics that our Church has a true priesthood and true sacraments, and who has been so anxious to bring about reunion between the churches of Rome, Russia and England, recently made an eloquent speech in England. He said, among other things, that the claim made by Roman Catholics to be "converting" England was unfounded. Whatever increase among Roman Catholics there might be in England was due, he declared, to the Irish immigration. "The progress of the great religious revival within the Church of England is stronger than ever," he remarked. "The English Church seems to be growing stronger every day. Her members find in her services and sacraments and in the revival of the religious life the satisfaction of their spiritual wants."

In his opinion the Roman Church could not succeed in making many "converts," and members of the Church of England should not be subjected to such methods. He suggested the folly of Anglicans asking themselves whether the graces they have received are real graces or the illusions of the devil—whether the Holy Ghost has been acting on the soul or whether the soul has merely been the plaything of its own imagination. Anglicans in the future should be spared such torments. If reunion was to come about it should be a corporate reunion. He declared that Pope Leo's Encyclical Satis cognitum was not unfavorable to the Church of England; it was not meant "to give a back-handed death-blow to the hopes of those who are endeavoring to promote corporate reunion." "Corporate reunion is possible," he exclaimed, "because it is necessary." A true understanding, not a compromise, could be effected between the churches. He pictured also the advantages to the cause of Christ if the Roman, Greek and English Churches were once more united visibly.

"When Leo XIII did me the great honor of admitting me to an audience," said the Abbé, "he asked me what, in my opinion, were the obstacles to reunion? I replied: 'Holy Father, strictly speaking there are but two obstacles; one an obstacle having to do with doctrine; the other one relating to practice. The doctrinal obstacle concerns yourself, Holy Father.' This I said smiling. 'The practical obstacles are—' But, gentlemen, it is perhaps better not to name them here. Human passion, human feeling and human rivalries are facts which cannot be ignored."

The Rev. Father Puller, of Cowley, spoke at the same meeting.

He said that speaking as one who has been baptized and brought up in the English Church, and who is thoroughly convinced of her Catholicity, the Vatican decrees seemed to him a great stumbling block in the way of reunion, but that there are very learned theologians in the Roman Communion who, if they had to explain the Vatican decrees to us, would, he thought, give a very different complexion to their exposition of what they hold about the rights of the Pope from that which appears on the face of the Encyclical Satis cognitum. The present tendency among Roman theologians in favor of the conscientious and candid study of Holy Scripture and of the history and antiquities of the early Church, he suggested would probably modify the current interpretation of the Vatican decrees. Of course there could be no hope of reunion if Rome denied the validity of our orders and sacraments, or persisted in maintaining her present views on the claims of the Pope, which cannot stand in the face of a candid investigation of the origines of the Church.

Father Puller said in conclusion: "Nobody has, I suppose, ever imagined that reunion could be other but a work of time. So long as we are able to hope we have the basis for prayer and work."

Broad Churchism.

Broad Churchism is simply a form of worldliness. In one way or another this world is always trying to blind men's eyes to the religion of Christ. In some places and at some times worldliness may take the form of persecution, or of low moral standards; at other times and in other places it takes the more subtle form of intellectual pride. Broad Churchism is simply intellectual pride in its essence; or, in other words, mental conceit. Broad Churchism is the special interior foe of our Communion. It is attractive in the world's way. It spreads a mist of meaningless words with literary rainbow tints between its followers and the true light of the Gospel, "great swelling words of vanity," the Apostle calls them. Broad Churchmen seem to think that the Church has waited for them to come and discover all truth—such is their conceit. They use poetical language as a bait.

In the place of Catholic doctrine they substitute the merest moonshine of fancy; they deny the plainest facts of philosophy and history and the Gospel, and follow instead hair-brained theories; they cannot endure exact definitions; they are dishonest; they use the Creeds and take the vows of Ordination, but pervert and deny the plain meaning of both. In place of the grace of God they think that human wisdom is the only salvation. Sin with them is but a lack of culture. The ideals of virtue in the Gospel they reverse. For works of mercy they have only humanitarian theories. The Sacraments to them are meaningless ceremonies, God they identify with our fallen nature, and in so doing open the gates of all this world's immorality. The divinity of Christ they consider all men share in essence, and so they make their God their belly.

Broad Churchism cannot last long. It is but a passing cloud. Sooner or later it will work itself out into the immorality which logically results from its tenets. At present it pretends honesty, and has deceived even good and well-meaning men; but time will show its true colors.

San Clemente, Rome.

Father Puller, in a letter from Rome, describes the mass on Whitsun Day at San Clemente, Rome. We quote from Cowley, Evangelist, "After our petit déjeuner we went to San Clemente, where we had another very helpful and interesting service. San Clemente, more than any other Church in Rome, has preserved the arrangements of an ancient basilica. St. Barnabas, Oxford, gives a very good idea of it; only the high altar is more in front of the apse, and not so much within it, and there is a throne at the east end behind the altar, and the Celebrant stands east of the altar when he celebrates, looking across it at the congregation; moreover, there are ambons on either side in the marble screens which mark off the Chorus Cantorum; on one side there is a large ambon for the singing of the Gospel, and on the other side two smaller ambons, one for the Epistle and the other for the Prophecy. The Church is served by Irish Dominicans, who sang the plain-song very well. The singing of the Gospel and Epistle in the ambons was very primitive and beautiful, and it was delightful, having the Gospel sung in such a way that the Deacon who sang it faced as many people as possible, instead of its being sung into the wall, as is too often the case. There were also signs of good and intelligent ritual. The Celebrant, for example, stood at the altar during the singing of the Creed, instead of finishing the Creed quickly by himself, and then going to sit down in the sedilia. Again, the Celebrant and Deacon very properly sat while the Epistle was being sung, and once more, though this was a minor point, the Celebrant offered the Chalice and Paten, together per unum at the offertory; then the Benedictus was said immediately after the Sanctus, as it ought to be, and complete silence was kept by the choir during the act of Consecration. It certainly makes all the difference when a liturgy, like the Roman, which in its main part dates from early times, is performed in the way in which it was intended to be performed by those who drew it up, and who very eminently possessed the liturgical instinct. It is so often marred by the stupid mistakes of later times which set one's teeth on edge, and which have been brought in by unintelligent people, who from sheer ignorance have failed to see the beauty and appropriateness of the right performance of the different parts of the service."

A PLAIN STORY.

Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

He waited a moment and then dived. Those on the wharf saw him come up, gasping and breathless. Many times he repeated this, but at last, reasoning that the stream had carried Roger with it, and making a careful calculation of its force and direction, Mike again disappeared. When he rose this time, he held above the surface a still, white face which yet wore that look of desperate courage. As he glanced upon it, his heart sunk within him; and, exhausted, hopeless, but determined, he struggled toward the pier. The form he supported did not move, except as the current swayed the limp, nerveless limbs; the arm that had in some manner fallen about his neck was icy cold, and made him shiver till his very blood seemed to freeze; the face that lay against his shoulder had a terrifying fixedness; the mouth, which only that morning had been such a sweet comforter, speaking words of loyal and affectionate friendship, looked stern and grim in its straight line of determination; while the eyes—eyes which Mike knew were true and clear—eyes which had but recently looked into his so bravely, and yet with mysterious, shadowy suggestions that he could not understand or interpret—those eyes were closed; the white lids were laid peacefully over them, sheltering their secrets from prying gaze but giving to the countenance such a weird, ghastly expression that Mike turned faint and sick, and was fain to keep his own face resolutely toward the wharf and away from the white, upturned one that lay against his shoulder.

If he should be too late! Terrible thought! He must not be—he would not be. No, no; God could not be cruel enough to allow such a thing to happen. Ah, there was comfort in that! If God had desired to punish any one, He would, in His justice, have visited His wrath upon Bertie, who deserved it, and not upon Roger—dear Roger!—noble old Roger!

A wet coil fell across his face. Instinctively he grasped it.

"Get inside the loop, Michael," shouted a voice, which appeared to resemble Mr. Tracy's, but which, somehow, seemed husky and hollow, and far away.

Mechanically he obeyed. When the loop was about his body he passed both arms around his beloved burden and drew it to him, gripped it close lest it should slip from him. The cold face fell against his own, the water dripped from the streaming hair down into his eyes; but he did not care, for they were both safe now—he and his friend. He knew they were safe, for he could feel the rope tightly about his body and see that they were being drawn swiftly through the water.

"Roger," he whispered, "dear old fellow, don't look like that; it's all right now, and we'll soon be on the wharf beside your father."

He felt warm hands about him, and knew that he and Roger—the friend he had saved, the friend for whom he would willingly have died—were at last upon firm ground.

It seemed to him that he stood shivering upon the wharf while Mr. Tracy got upon his knees and bent over Roger; but he was not quite sure, for his vision was faint and blurred. How quickly the day had flown! It seemed to be getting quite dark already. Why didn't Mr. Tracy hurry and wrap Roger up, so as to make him warm and comfortable? Why did he kneel there and stare off into the gathering gloom with that queer look upon his face? Surely, night was coming on, and he felt as if he must get to bed. He was so tired and weary he could scarcely stand. He wondered if his mother would be worried at his being so late; wondered how long ago Tessie had gone to bed, and why didn't Mr. Tracy do something! Hark, he was going to speak—going to speak to Roger! But he, Mike, was so sleepy! Would he be able to hear? He would try. He leaned forward, listening intently. Oh, he need not have been so anxious, for there was no trouble in hearing that voice—such a great, deep, solemn, awful voice that it seemed to penetrate every fiber of his being; and the words were so strangely deliberate, so crushingly and unbearably calm, yet so wildly plaintive, that they appeared to take complete possession of him.

"Boys, Roger is dead!"

The choirmaster's bowed head fell forward on the white, bare breast before him, the darkness seemed to grow more intense, and the last thing Mike remembered was standing there upon the old pier, repeating drowsily:

"Boys, Roger is dead—Roger is dead boys, Roger is dead."

The great Choir picnic was over! The day had come and gone; its sun had risen and set; and, between the rising and the setting, many things had happened. It had been shown, for instance, who was the bravest and who the most cowardly of all the white-robed choristers who sung praises to God each Sunday before the great altar in St. John's; so that there could never again be any doubt or question upon that subject in the minds of the boys.

As Mike lay, day after day, upon his cot—the same cot we have before seen—tossing in feverish unconsciousness, Tessie was kept continually busy, trotting patiently to and from the door, answering the eager and anxious inquiries of the constant procession of boys who trooped thither at all hours of the day and evening.

"How's Mike, to day?" asked one. "Won't you hand Mike these flowers?" requested another. "Please give Mike this agate," said a third. "I'll bet he never saw such a beauty. Tell him I won it from Charlie Vainser. Oh, you can't tell him that if you don't know my name, can you? Well, just say, Guss Chillingly—that's me—you know."

One day little Bobby Fears came to the door and presented a square box. "It's my new humming top, what Pop bring'd me last night from Chicago," he explained. "It's the greatest hummer you ever saw. You'd ought to see it spin; and maybe it 'aint a beauty? I've only spin'd it three times. I'll leave it for Mike to play with, and fetch it away to-morrow." And off he marched, as stiffly as if he was not leaving his heart behind in the box that held the "hummer."

And every evening there came to the house a tall, sad-faced man, whom Tessie called "Mike's Kiremister," and who patiently sat by the cot through the long nights, and cared for the sick boy while Mrs. Jones secured the rest she so much needed, and without which she must soon have broken down after her busy days of sewing and nursing.

* * * * * * * *

For twelve years succeeding the events narrated, I was absent from my native city, located in another part of the country where business interests held me; but one bright Sunday I again took part in divine service in my own Church. Time had, apparently, worked no changes in the building itself. St. John's was precisely the same in all outward appearances; but as my eye wandered over the congregation, it fell upon comparatively few faces that I recognized. There, everything seemed new.

In the midst of my reflections and observations, I was aware that the organist crossed the chancel, took his seat and began the prelude. Mr. Tracy had always been considered a very good organist, but he had certainly improved wonderfully during my absence. The throb and pulse of the great instrument seemed to set my whole being in sympathetic vibration. Surely, a great change must have come over the performer; for never had I heard him play with such deep feeling, such subdued passion, such dainty delicacy of expression. Then I recollected the crushing sorrow that had been stalking by his side for so many years; and this, it seemed to me, explained the change. But even as I reached this conclusion the music slowly gathered itself together, as it were, like a giant awakening after gentle slumber and lazily stretching himself preparatory to the serious exertions that awaited him. Deeper and fuller grew the mighty refrain; wilder and more passionate, like a great wail of deadly sorrow; louder and higher, till the majestic chords echoed and reverberated through the Church and made the old walls quiver and tremble in solemn awe; till the flood of harmony penetrated every crevice and cranny, rolled into the corridors and passages, fled away into the streets, and then seemed to be tossed back again to fall upon the ear like some wonderful death chant—irresistible in its tender pleading, its vast sorrow, its agonized yearning—as it died away in a great sob.

Little by little, piece by piece, there an outline, here a figure, there arose in my mind a vivid picture of a flowing river; an old wharf; a white, motionless form; a crowd of awe-struck faces; a scene of wild sorrow. The picture was all about me, filling the whole range of my vision, and the music enveloped me till I could hear nothing else; one belonged to the other; the two were inseparable—the halves of a perfect whole. And, as this idea flashed upon me, the strange conviction grew within me that the wondrous music was painting in my sympathetic mind the picture that already existed in the mind of the gifted performer.

The choir had long since entered and the service was well advanced when I returned to a realization of my surroundings. The organ was beginning again. I felt that I must leave the Church, that I could not listen longer to music that affected me so strangely. As I arose, my eyes fell upon the organist. I started. It was not Mr. Tracy's face upon which I gazed; it was the face of a young man of twenty-six or seven—a strange face. And yet there was something vaguely familiar about the expression of the calm, thoughtful eyes, about the lines of decision around the handsome mouth and the light of nobility that illuminated the whole countenance. As I turned about to leave the pew, another face met my glance. This time it was Mr. Tracy's—there could be no doubt of it—little altered except for a certain air of suffering endured. His eyes were, at the moment, resting upon the young fellow at the organ with a gleam of pleasure, almost of happiness. Several pews behind him was another face that attracted my attention, the face of a woman; and there was no mistaking the look of pride, the light of intense happiness that shone from her eyes upon the young organist, whose face was turned towards her with an expression that seemed to answer her beaming gaze.

Out in the corridor I met the verger, the same faithful old fellow who had been there since I was a boy, who had always taken a sort of paternal interest in me, and who, I distinctly remember, had made a characteristic remark to me upon the night of my confirmation.

"Now, Master Jack," he had said, "ye've just entered good society, like, and y'er all dressed up spick and span and fine and new for the occasion; so see if ye can't always keep yerself as clean inside as ye look to-night outside."

He walked now to the vestibule of the Church with me.

"William," I asked, "who is the new organist?"

"Ah, Master Jack," he replied, smiling, while there came into his face the same gleam of pride—though less intense—that I had observed upon Mr. Tracy's features, "if I answer that question once a day, I answer it a dozen times. Who, indeed? Who, but young Master Michael, as used to sing so beautiful and was such a hero when Mr. Tracy's poor little Roger was drownded on that miserable picnic? There would 'a' been two drownded that wretched day, sir, instead of one, but for Master Michael; and Mr. Tracy couldn't do enough for him. He gave him a whole musical education, and learn'd 'im to play the organ; and now they do say as Master Michael is fit to learn Mr. Tracy, for he's reckoned the finest organ player in the city, and Mr. Tracy says as how he has a great future before him. It's wonderful how them two took to one another, too. I'm quite sure that, next to his good mother and pretty sister, Master Michael loves Mr. Tracy better than any one else in the world. And you should see Miss Tessie, sir. Why, you'd not know her.

She's quite a young lady now, and puts her hair up and wears long dresses. She's away on a visit at present, but—"

"I think I shall drop around and see Mike," I said, interruptingly. "I don't suppose he has forgotten me. Do you recollect the number of the little house on Clark street?"

The verger laughed softly.

"Why, sir," he replied, "you might search Clark street from stem to stern from now t' the crack o' doom, without ever finding the Joneses. They're no longer poor folks. Mrs. Jones laid down her needle forever years ago; Miss Tessie got her schoolin' at the most expensive accademmy in the city, and they live next door to Mr. Tracy himself. Why, sir, Master Michael don't have to count his dollars as he spends 'em, for he has more pupils—high-toned ones, too—than he knows what to do with, so Mr. Tracy helps him; and I tell you, sir," and garrulous old William laid his forefinger impressively upon my shoulder and leaned forward to place his mouth close to my ear, "I tell you, sir, it do cost more than one dollar, sir, to take a lesson from Master Michael. He certainly have provided handsome for his mother and sister. Perhaps you saw Mrs. Jones up there towards the front of the Church, just back of Mr. Tracy. Maybe she don't love that boy of hers! Why, sir, she fairly worships him. But he's a good boy, and I think he deserves it. Don't you, sir?"

A soft strain from the organ came stealing out upon us—a strain touched into life by fingers of marvelous skill.

"Yes," I replied, "I think he does."

"Good by, William—till next Sunday."

"Good-by, Master Jack. And don't forget, sir—next door to Mr. Tracy's."

St. Clement's Stones.

A description of the stones given to St. Clement's some years ago by Mr. Armour, of Chicago, may be interesting to readers of the MAGAZINE.

They are three in number and came from the ruins of old St. Clement's Church in Chirsoness, in the Crimea, the place of St. Clement's martyrdom. They are authenticated by the "Chancery of the Oberprocurator of the Synod," "the Bishop of the Taurida," and the "Archimandrite Innocent of St. Vladimir's Monastery."

They were sent to this country for St. Clement's Church, Chicago, but owing to various circumstances were never made use of.

The first is 2 feet 10 inches long, 1 foot broad, 9 inches thick, and weighs 320 pounds, and is of plain marble.

The second is a piece of a round marble column 10½ inches in diameter, 7 inches high and weighing about 58 pounds; this has a cross cut in the column.

The third is a small slab from the old Iconostasia, flat on each side and on each side remnants of crosses. The height of this is about 1 foot, width 9 inches, thickness 2½ inches, weight about 26 pounds.

Up to the present time no use has been made of these valuable and interesting treasures. Perhaps some time they may be built into some altar, or form part of the base of a statue of our Patron.

Dean Church on the Mass.

"The honest Protestant," says the late R. W. Church, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, "shudders at the very name of the Mass, knowing only the abuses—often intolerable—connected with it; knowing nothing of what the service is in itself, or its words, or its history; not knowing, or forgetting, that it is the perpetual, the daily memorial which has kept up for centuries the memory, the consolations of the Passion, before the thoughts, and hopes, and love of millions." (Cathedral and University Sermons.)

Parish Notes.

The Rev. C. C. Quin will continue his work in the Parish.

Mr. Ritter has resigned as Sacristan after very faithful and efficient service. It is a matter of regret that other duties prevent his continuing.

The Accounting Warden will be in the vestry-room on Monday, October 5th, from 2 to 4 P.M., when pew rents may be paid and pews or sittings rented. Pew rents are due October 1st.

The choir returned on Sunday, September 6th to their duties, to all appearance the better for their holiday. In this connection we would like to ask again, as we did last year, for subscriptions to the Choir Fund.

A payment on account of principal of mortgages of $2,500 has been made during the month. The amount of them now is $8,000.

The Mission House, 2036 Cherry street, has been kalsomined, and now looks clean—a decided improvement. It has cost a very small sum, and the money has come from persons not members of St. Clement's congregation.

The annual subscriptions of members of St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., were due June 1st. They should be paid to Mr. E. S. Holloway, the Secretary.

This month the meetings of the various Guilds are resumed.

The attendance at services during the summer has been very good, as well as the number of communions made.

Our grateful thanks are due to those friends who have supplied flowers for the altar during the summer.

The House of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, Twentieth and Race streets, has been opened after extensive repairs.

The Church of the Atonement, at Seventeenth and Summer streets, has been closed, and the corporation have transferred the work to their chapel in West Philadelphia.

The Bishop of the Diocese is expected back about the end of September.

The Holy Cross Magazine reprinted one of the articles from our August number. We regret to learn that they may have to suspend publication, owing to lack of sufficient number of subscribers to pay the cost.

The cost of heating the Church and Parish buildings with steam would be about $2,500. Estimates have been prepared and a scheme of distributing the pipes. The matter is under consideration of a Committee of the Vestry.

We would like to see a league of men in the Parish bound by some simple rule as to the performance of the three notable duties—prayer, fasting, almsgiving—so including their whole devotional life and helping one another in the way of perseverance. This would cover and mean regular confession, communion and attendance at mass. Such a league would be a power and strength unseen, but felt.

Let every communicant of the Parish make definite arrangements as to their burial, that their bodies be brought to the church and the Holy Sacrifice pleaded. Sad to say connections too often disregard even expressed and known wishes, and without reason make arrangements in accordance with their own convenience.

It is wise to make two copies of instructions—one to be given to the family and one to be filed with the clergy.

The Sea-shore Home.

The house at Point Pleasant has been closed for this year, and we think we can say the time has been a happy one in spite of the fact that it has been full of hard and anxious work for those who have had charge.

It is difficult to understand the indifference felt by all except a few of the congregation for this part of the work; they do not give anything for its support. Another year we expect this to be different. The house has closed without deficiency, although the amount received was less than last year.

St. Lawrence Guild Notes.

The Guild wish to acknowledge with much gratitude the many donations of cancelled stamps. As they are so often handed in with no mark to indicate the donor, it is impossible to make a more particular acknowledgment. Some have been at great pains, not only to collect the stamps, but to arrange and count them. If any wish to do this, and are in any doubt as to what method will be most acceptable to the dealers to whom the stamps are sold, the treasurer of the Guild, Miss Heylin, will gladly give information on the subject.

The Guild most earnestly asks for volunteers who will faithfully give a portion of their time to systematic district visiting and work. The districts are not large, and the work ought not to be irksome. Methods, within certain limits, are left to the discretion of the individual. The chaplain would be very glad to learn of ten or fifteen who would coöperate with those already in the field.

The cleaning and adornment of the church and grounds have been aided in several instances, this summer, by the laborers of the Guild's beneficiaries, in return for food, shelter or articles of clothing.

As cooler weather comes on there will, doubtless, be numerous requests for cast-off clothing. The Guild, as a rule, does not intend to give away clothing, but to require some return in labor or money. This is necessary, if for no other reason, to preserve the self respect of the recipients. Donations of clothing of any sort will be gladly received.

If it is found feasible, it is hoped to have a series of mission services, illustrated by the magic lantern. But we have no lantern. Possibly some friend can help us in the matter.

Without wishing to complain at all, for some have contributed most generously to the Guild's funds, the officers find it necessary to consider how to prevent the exhaustion of the treasury. Perhaps the revival of some of the "Jeremiah" methods would be the best way.

It is hardly to be expected that everybody will be satisfied with what has been done. Some people have a genius for criticism and fault finding; their only happiness consists, apparently, in making others feel uncomfortable; they, no doubt, now have an opportunity. Those upon whom the work and worry has come have done well, while others have been idling and renewing health which has never been seriously impaired.

The number of members of the congregation who have risen to their responsibility and duty has been all too small, had all who could and ought responded as God had prospered them much more would have been received.

No very large amount has been given by any one person, but generous offerings have been made by many when it has meant real self denial. It is a cause of gratitude that at a time of general financial trouble we have been able to meet all our expenses; it is characteristic of a good many people to begin their economy in the charitable and religious parts of their life; this is sinful and wrong. But such people do not care; they make a gain of godliness; they live for the world and self, not for God and eternity.

It is pleasant to be able to state that all bills have been paid. The cost has been:

The Sunday-school Library.

We want good, well-bound entertaining books for this library. If money is given it will answer as well. But the library is in a sadly run-down condition. The present books are old, worn-out, and a generation behind the children's stories of to-day. A number of new books have been given recently and several books have been purchased. The library is open for children before and after the Children's Mass every Sunday morning.

Mr. David Coles is Librarian.

Parish Limits.

There are no Parish limits, but there ought to be. That is, it must be evident to every thinking Christian, that such a degree of organization as would enable the Church in a given place, as for example, Philadelphia, to cover all the ground to the best advantage and with most economy of money and energy, is highly desirable. It is not necessary to point out, in detail, the evils of the present system; neither is it required to enter upon a discussion of the reasons which, for the time being, prevent the adoption of anything like legal parochial boundaries. It may be useful to remark that we believe those reasons to be gradually becoming somewhat less potent. As in the natural world, so in the ecclesiastical, the tendency is undoubtedly toward a leveling of irregularities. We are glad to add, however, that in the case under discussion we can observe only a leveling up and not down. There is, occasionally, to be sure, a bitter word and a show of horns, but it is pretty well understood that these are dying thrusts, and they do little harm except, perhaps, by reaction. On the whole there is much to encourage those who desire to see the Faith taught everywhere in its fullness, and every Christian blessing accessible to all. Just in proportion as the realization of this progresses, can steps be taken toward a system in which parochial boundaries would not overlap, and in which pastoral responsibility would be rightly defined—not that it would be possible or even desirable to prevent all passage beyond such bounds. The subtleties of personal attraction and influence are often inexplicable, but we have to recognize the peculiar genius of men for particular kinds of work; and so long as this is true, it is natural and proper that the faithful should exercise some discretion. But to say this, is not to remove the responsibility which rests upon the church in general to cover the ground by her aggressiveness and watchfulness, and upon the particular Parish to cover some definite part. Work of this local and circumscribed sort, systematic yet earnest, is mission work of the truest kind, because it recognizes what "mission" means—the being sent by divine authority to labor in a particular portion of the great field. It is the first and ordinary work of a Parish and a Priest, in a normal state of things; and all else, whatever would tend to specialize the character and work of a Parish or attract persons from beyond its bounds, is either extraordinary in character, or indicates an abnormal state. We have already intimated that we think our condition to be an abnormal one. If so, let us work toward the normal. We cannot impose a law upon others, but we can reasonably undertake a definite work ourselves. And so we propose to mark off on the map a definite district surrounding the church, and in our aggressive work consider that our ordinary mission is specially to the souls thus embraced. It will be our aim, according to the help that may be given by volunteers, to be actively solicitous for the spiritual welfare of this district. Of course, this territory will be much smaller than that from which St. Clement's communicants are drawn. Toward all who have been admitted to spiritual privileges here, whether by baptism or any one of the subsequent sacraments, the Parish feels a responsibility and the clergy try to fulfil it as best they can, until released by the formal act of the persons in question. But the obligation toward those whose interest in the church has kept them or brought them near it, is many times greater.

Religious Theories versus Religious Living.

Theories about religion are very different from actual religious living. Hence it is easy for a book to bring forward some new doctrine, some revised and adapted Christianity, so-called, and work it out beautifully in the hero's life. Heretics and fanatics may thus show forth apparent beauties in systems which have no Creed or Sacraments; but all but the Catholic Faith fail when tested by practice. On paper, the theories may seem more attractive than the Catholic Faith, for the latter exists not to be gazed upon and admired but to be lived, and is willing to sacrifice the ideally inviting if the homely is more real and useful, but there is but one theory which has stood the test of centuries, the theory put forth by Jesus Christ Himself.

The Children's Mass.

A new choir of girls has been formed for the Children's Mass at 9.15 on Sunday. Miss L. Kean is directing its practice. At present the choir numbers about fifteen, but it is intended to have at least twenty-four.

Woodward's Mass is being rehearsed and some part of it will be ready for singing in a few Sundays. The rehearsals are held at present every Thursday evening in the parish building.

Improvement in the music at this Mass is already noticeable.

The Recent Rumor.

By many, both within and without our Anglican communion, the announcement made in the paper, Saturday, September 19th, that the Pope had corroborated the decision of his predecessors in affirming the invalidity of Anglican ordinations, was noted with interest. It is known, of course, that a commission has lately been investigating the subject of Anglican orders at Rome; that the Pope himself has spoken most favorably of the Anglican cause; that a powerful opinion for the validity of our ministry was advanced by theologians of first rate ability. It was at least believed that, although we might hardly expect outright recognition, yet no positively adverse decision would be made. At the present moment it would be premature to discuss the matter; for the experience of the past has taught us that despatches from Rome may be kept for some time before using, that is, if they are to be used in the interest of truth. We do not yet know just what the Pope has said. If it should turn out that he has said he cannot see his way clear to any different practical treatment of Anglican ordinations, it would not much surprise us. The whole question is very complex, but it is easy to see how difficult it would be, practically, to reverse or even seriously to modify Rome's attitude toward our ministry. We ourselves would desire that any approach should be very gradual. Wounds do not heal in a night; so that a decision of this nature might well coexist with a very decided gain on the whole. A school of thought has been awakened, weighty in authority, making toward the recognition of our orders. Continental scholars, who have never thought it necessary to go into the subject before, are espousing one side or the other. Now, if the Pope's words are not of such a character as to put a final and effectual quietus on all the thought that has been aroused—and we can think of no one less likely than Leo XIII. to smother honest inquiry—there is cause, not for discouragement, but for much cheer. Of course, the fact that the Pope has said anything at all will be taken to mean something very final by multitudes of people. This is probably quite as true of many outside the Roman Church as within; they have an exaggerated notion of what the papal powers are held to be. Infallibility is thought to be attached to every formal utterance of the Bishop of Rome. This is not so, and it only needs to turn to any theological treatise to find it out. It is only in the formal exercise of the office, which he claims, of pastor and teacher of the whole church, and in a matter of faith or morals, that infallibility is predicated. While the Pope's decree upon a given subject will generally be regarded by his faithful subjects as the best practical dictum on that topic up to the date of its issue, and will be respectfully received and acted upon, this is not the same as holding it to be infallible. And if they do not, surely we must not think that Leo's word closes every door of hope. Not the word of a decree but the circumstances of its issue, the nature of the subject, the state of the church —these and many other elements are taken into account in judging of its binding character. It was held most firmly, at one time, that one of the Popes had decided, for good and all, that the delivery of the instruments was essential to a valid ordination. But now theologians agree that of course it could not have been intended as a final settlement of the question, but only a judgment in a particular case; of course, because, forsooth, the Greeks have no such ceremony, and it would not do to deny their orders!

On the whole, it will be best to wait without nervousness or impatience. Truth will prevail. God has wonderfully blessed and renewed the life of the Anglican communion, her enemies being her judges. Our position is one which tells us to look constantly to Him and His Holy Spirit, and not to the constraining force of any preconceived idea of what the church ought to be for the guidance of our steps. Our conception of unity is a different one from the Roman; sacramental through the participation in the Divine Life, as contrasted with what seems to us mechanical and despotic, and forced from without rather than growing from within. To give up belief in our orders would to us seem like a sacrifice of truth, and we should then feel that we had lost unity with God, which is, according to our notion, the basis of all unity. This is safe ground surely. Meantime let us look with interest for something better than scrappy despatches from Rome, and then be sure that our interpretation of them is not more rigid than even the Vatican requires.

"If a man has reported to you that a certain person speaks ill of you, do not make any defense to what has been told you, but reply: 'The man did not know the rest of my faults, or he would uot have mentioned these only.'"—EPICTETUS.

"When you have decided that a thing ought to be done, and are doing it, never avoid being seen doing it, though the many form an unfavorable opinion about it."

"As we are responsible for every idle word, so we will be responsible for every idle silence."—FRANKLIN.

Judge Not.

Judge not; the workings of his brain
And of his heart thou canst not see;
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
In God's pure light may only be
A scar brought from some well-won field,
Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air, that frets thy sight,
May be a token, that below
The soul has closed in deadly fight
With some internal fiery foe,
Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace,
And cast thee shuddering on thy face.

The fall thou darest to despise—
Maybe the slackened angel's hand
Has suffered it, that he may rise,
And take a firmer, surer stand;
Or, trusting less to earthly things,
May henceforth learn to use his wings.

And judge none lost, but wait and see
With hopeful pity, not disdain;
The depth of the abyss may be
The measure of the height of pain,
And love and glory that may raise
The soul to God in after days.

Notes on the Catechism.

The Catechism started on its second year Sunday, September 14th.

All the teachers who have not yet reported for duty ought to do so as soon as possible.

Among the new teachers this year are the Misses Janney.

Mr. Harold Balsley is in charge of the organ.

The Rev. Herbert Parrish and the Rev. Erskine Wright are the first and second Catechists. A third Catechist has not yet been secured.

So far this year the attendance has been very satisfactory. Several new classes of boys have been started.

The subjects of the Catechism for the months of October and November will be the Commandments. Prizes will be given for the best diligences.

It is hoped that the Rev. W. C. Clapp will give the Catechism some magic-lantern exhibitions during Advent.

The infant school will be opened in a few Sundays, under the direction of Miss K. Smith. In the meantime the infant school is attending the sessions of the Catechism.

The Catechism closes each Sunday with the singing of a solemn magnificat.

Lord Salisbury on Philanthropy.

As a simple layman he must look more at the mundane and less exalted considerations that are attached to this work, and must ask the meeting to remember that after the highest sympathies, the purest teaching, and the most exalted motives had been provided, there yet remained the less elevated and necessary duty to be performed, and that was finding the means for supporting and nourishing those by whom this great work had to be done. It was a part which, he thought, specially belonged to the laity, and he could not help, in urging it upon them, reflecting on the strange aspect which Christian liberality presented to-day in this country, and especially in this metropolis. All recognized the claims we had on each other, and especially the claims that the poorer have on the rich—all recognized it in words, and most, he hoped, in some degree in deeds. But it was a strange thing that bare appeals to high and spiritual considerations or of pure philanthropy failed to extract from the supporters of good works sufficient means to enable those works to be carried on; and some more mundane attractions had to be employed before the necessary support could be obtained. It was a strange sort of compromise that before men would support a great hospital they required to eat a bad dinner and to listen to indifferent speeches (a laugh); that before men would support some great work of beneficence, dealing with the sorest maladies of humanity, they must have a ball or a garden party; and so it went on. There must always be some secondary machinery, by means of which Christian benevolence was invited to buy worthless articles at ridiculous prices. (Laughter.) He could not help feeling that there was something wrong among the Christian laity which made this state of things necessary. He could not help feeling that his own presence on that platform was a sign of the same weakness. It was a strange contrast to what happened in the earliest and brightest days of Christianity. When you read St. Paul's exhortation to the Corinthians to send relief to their suffering fellow Christains in Jerusalem, he was not addressing to them a more stringent exhortation, or holding before them a higher ideal, or requiring a more necessary work than was required from the laity by the Bishops and clergy who were set over them in this Metropolis to-day; and yet we did not read that St. Paul found it necessary to hold a bazaar, or a public dinner, or even a public meeting, with a Roman magistrate to make a speech. (Laughter.) There was no doubt that money was needed for such societies as this; but he did not think that the best way of getting it was by all these illegitimate means to which he had alluded. He believed that the laity of the Church ought to organize themselves sufficiently to take a large part of this collecting business out of the hands and off the shoulders of those who had to do the higher and more spiritual work. (Cheers.) In the Middle Ages there were the great societies of the Mendicant Friars. He was afraid that they only begged for themselves; but if we could have mendicant friars and sisters in these days whose business should not be to beg for themselves, but to collect money for the great works of the Church and charity, it would relieve those who were borne down to the earth by the pressure of the work they had to do in this direction. A bazaar, or dinner, or ball might furnish a portion or even all of the money that was required, but it satisfied no self-discipline, it left no feeling of devotion, of gratitude, or of benevolence after it; it did the largest amount of material good with the smallest amount of moral and spiritual improvement. There was no need for him to dilate upon the need which was presented by the work of this fund. The need consisted in that strange dislocation which the working of natural causes had produced in this vast community. The problem was not only difficult, but was constantly increasing in severity. Some ingenious statistician had computed that a very fair-sized congregation was added to the population every month; and for that means had to be found at the hands of the laity. He believed that politicians and statesmen had a great stake in the success of these efforts, and for the lowest of reasons they had every ground for desiring it. We were surrounded, crowded in, embarrassed, by the number of social questions that beset us. Many remedies that were suggested might be wild, might represent much emotion but little thought; but they all pointed to this, that there was great need, that there was a terrible amount of moral and spiritual destitution in our midst. The sole hope that we really had of ever solving these great social problems was in the action of religion. Parliamentary arrangements and devices might do much to remove obstacles, and to encourage men in the right path; but, after all, if the welfare and happiness of the masses of men were to be increased, if the rising tide of misery was to be kept down, it could only be by the power of the Christian religion. (Cheers.)—Church Times.

Southey.

Christe Sanctorum.

Christ, of the Angels praise and adoration,
Ruler and Maker Thou of every nation,
Graciously grant us all to gain a station
In Heaven's high glory.

Angel all peaceful, to this temple send us
Michael, who cometh quickly to befriend us,
Prospering all things, still may he attend us
Ever and ever.

Angel most mighty, that old serpent quelling,
Hither let Gabriel fly, the foe expelling;
Oft in this temple may he make his dwelling,
Coming to guard us.

Angel, Physician, health on us bestowing,
O send forth Raphael, who before us going
Shall guide our footsteps, safest pathways showing
And sick ones healing.

Let Mary, mother of our God, be o'er us;
All round about us be the angel chorus,
And let the heavenly army go before us,
Guiding and guarding.

O may the Godhead, endless bliss possessing,
Father, Son, Spirit, grant to us this blessing!
All His creation joins, His praise confessing
To endless ages. Amen.

By the will of Miss Hannah P. Smith, her books were left to the Clergy House as a nucleus of a spiritual library; they have already been given into our care. Also, $500 to the Rector of St. Clements for Parish purposes; the disposition of this has not been determined as yet. Also, $100 for the expenses of a solemn requiem for the repose of her soul. As her friends know, her body was not brought to St. Clements, but a requiem was said on the day of her burial; the solemn requiem will be sung, probably, on November 13th.

St. Clement, Bishop and Martyr.

The recurrence of St. Clement's Day and our Patronal Feast turns our attention once more to the Saint whose name we bear as a Parish. St. Clement was, probably, the friend of St. Paul spoken of in the Epistle to the Philippians, iv. 3, and he was one of the earliest Bishops of Rome. Two Epistles of the Corinthians bear his name; the first was probably written by him, and the date of its composition is put down at about A. D. 97. The other epistle was probably of much later authorship. Of these, the genuine one is considered the more valuable, and, indeed, in early times it was printed in collections along with the sacred books, and was regarded as almost on a par with Holy Scripture. It breathes a beautiful spirit of humble Christian piety. "Take heed, beloved," he says, "lest God's many kindnesses lead to the condemnation of us all! For thus it must be unless we walk worthy of Him, and with one mind do those things which are good and pleasing in His sight. * * * * Let us reflect how near He is and that none of the thoughts or reasonings in which we engage are hid from Him. It is right, therefore, that we should not leave the post which His will has assigned us. Let us rather offend those men who are foolish and inconsiderate, and lifted up, and who glory in the pride of their speech, than offend God. Let us reverence the Lord Jesus Christ, whose blood was given for us; let us esteem those who have the rule over us; let us honor the aged among us; let us train up the young men in the fear of God." It is noticeable, also, that the authority to which Clement defers, in the matter of Holy Orders, although he was a Bishop of Rome, is "the consent of the whole Church." (Chap. xliv). This is the position of our own communion as distinguished from modern Roman teaching regarding jurisdiction and order; and the fact has a peculiar interest just at the present time.

Tradition relates, concerning the martyrdom of St. Clement, that in the time of the Emperor Trajan he was arrested to quiet an uprising of the rabble against the Christians, was banished to Pontus or to the Scythian Chersonese (the Crimea), and there, after laboring in the marble quarries, he is said to have been again apprehended on account of his continued zeal for souls, and drowned in the sea with an old anchor attached to his neck. Allusion was made, in last month's number of THE MAGAZINE, to the fact that we have, in the possession of the Parish, three stones from the ancient Church of St. Clement at the place of his martyrdom.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

The death of Archbishop Benson has been received with expressions of regret and sympathy on all sides; that is, in all places where true feelings are not prevented by ignorance or smothered by prejudice. For the late spiritual head of the English Church, and in some sense of the whole English-speaking Catholic Church, was a man of power. He was not a man of greatest brilliancy. He was not a violent partisan. In literature, he might not be called a hero. His was the heroism of fixed principles and far-sighted conduct, such as is sure to encounter at times the severe criticism of men who demand quick results, and who are impatient to force an issue.

With calmness and singular dignity, Edward White Benson sat upon the throne of Canterbury, not doubting for an instant that he was the legitimate spiritual successor of Augustine, and as he looked out from the highest Episcopal chair in the foremost nation of Christendom, he felt a deep but not a nervous sense of the responsibility which his position implied. He was content to allow others to flutter in the public eye. He planned thoroughly and wisely. He firmly resisted the Erastian spirit in high places, which saw in the Catholic movement an enemy to civil predominance over the Church, and, in the celebrated Lincoln Judgment, he vindicated the supremacy of spiritual authority in spiritual matters. And yet he was no mere stickler for ecclesiasticism. He loved the Church, and labored for her, because she is the Body of Christ, the Saviour of the world, and his extensive use of organization was always supplemented by an energetic enthusiam and earnest piety which prevented the dry rattle of ecclesiastical machinery. He could find common ground with even the suspicious Celtic Wesleyans of Cornwall, so that his friendship won more of them back to the Church than a policy of lofty disapproval could possibly have done. He died, as he had lived, a true Catholic, a real Evangelical. He bore within his breast the Blessed Sacrament. His knees were bent in humble acknowledgment of Christ's mercy in the remission of sins. May he rest in peace.

Fr. Puller writes in a private letter: "The opinion here in England is unanimous that the argumentative section of the Bull is incredibly weak. I do not think that it will have any effect in producing perversions to Rome. Hitherto its effect has been rather the other way. It has checked and steadied some people who were given to playing about the edge."

The Papal Bull.

By this time the Pope's Bull "condemning" Anglican Orders is an old story. It has been the cause of much jubilation among Roman Catholics of the Ultramontane school, who doubtless felt that the recognition of Anglican Orders would be a backward step in the centralizing policy to which the decree of "Infallibility" has committed modern Romanism. The newspapers manipulated by Romanists have endeavored to make some capital out of the Bull, and have been especially active in trying to create the impression that Anglicans themselves had asked for the decree—a statement absolutely false. Several of our Bishops have not hesitated to criticise the Bull in vehement style, and to comment on the insolence and arrogance, as well as the ignorance, which this labored but inexact document contains. In England Father Puller and Mr. Lacey, in the Guardian and Church Times, respectively, have accurately pointed out the errors of the Bull; while in America the Church Standard, of Philadelphia, has published an able refutation of the Papal position. Otherwise one might say that the Bull has had almost no effect on the public at large, the Armenian question and the election campaign absorbing popular interest. Above all, so far as it is possible to ascertain, Rome has gained no "converts" by this action, nor is it likely that she will.

Nothing is more clear than that the idea of the Priesthocd is not the opinion of a mere party in our Church. The indignant criticism of Bishop Potter on the Bull in his convention address ought to convince anybody that the validity of our Orders and our Sacraments is not the idea merely of "High Churchmen" or "Ritualists." It is the plain and unequivocal teaching of this Church. And as for the Bull's assumptions, it is enough to remember the recent remark of the most learned Roman Catholic, the Abbé Duchesnè, after his investigation of the subject, that if the Anglican Church has not Orders, then there are no Orders. On the Pope's own grounds it is clear that if the Anglican Church has no Orders then the Roman Church has none either. This our Church papers have proved beyond a peradventure.

The effect of the Bull, of course, is to defer the possibility of reunion until such time as the Papacy is reduced to the limits of its lawful position. The bull will be most injurious to the Papacy itself, since it shows the world clearly that in the view of the Papacy truth is subservient to policy. It cannot but be a matter of regret that the See of Rome, so noble in many ways, should fail in these last days to rise to a just dealing with historical facts, and to the courageous attitude which Leo XIII's earlier utterances expressed.

Meantime there is no reason, as Lord Halifax has said, why prayers for the reunion of Christendom should not continue. In God's own good time no doubt, when the Papal errors are swept away, the Roman, Greek and Anglican communions will be joined in bonds of sympathy and love. Is it not to Rome that Ezekiel (xvi, 61) speaks in prophetic reference to the Greek and Anglican Churches?

Notes on the Catechism.

Sessions of the Catechism seem to run more smoothly from Sunday to Sunday, but the attendance should be larger.

There will be a Catechism Festival in St. Clement's week.

Many of the diligences are very praiseworthy, and their number is increasing.

Rewards are to be awarded on a new system. For every good recitation, and for every diligence, a ticket will be given; a certain number of tickets will entitle the scholar to a book.

The library is to issue a new catalogue at once, which will be a great convenience to all.

The girls' choir at the Children's Mass is becoming more efficient from week to week.

There should be more attention paid to the correct singing of the Magnificat at the afternoon session.

Guild of the Holy Child.

The Guild meets every Saturday afternoon. On Saturday, the 17th ult., the monthly service was held in chapel. The attendance was good, and the conduct of all was exemplary. Mrs. Cunningham is the organist. Sister Mary Gladys, with the assistance of Misses Fryer, Wright, Wetherill and Lytle, is in charge.

Keep Right On.

It is related of the Superior of a religious society in our communion, that he made the announcement of the secession of a member of the order to another part of the Church, while the community were at table in the refectory. "Father X—— has gone to Rome," said he; "Brother Y——, will you kindly pass the butter?" Possibly the story is not true; but it might be. At any rate, it expresses the right spirit of faithful perseverance. So far as we have observed recent events in the ecclesiastical world have roused interest, but they have not unsettled any minds or hearts. Anglican Catholics intend to keep right on.

Parish Notes.

Rev. H. Parrish is Chaplain of St. Martha's Guild.

Rev. E. Wright is Chaplain of Guild of Holy Child.

The clergy are glad to see any men of the congregation on Monday nights at the Clergy House.

The ward of the G. F. S. has been discontinued.

Photos of vestments may be obtained from the Warden of St. Vincent's Guild.

A Requiem Mass will be said each weekday during November not otherwise occupied, at 7.30.

Certain members of the Guild of St. Mary have volunteered to keep sanctuary and choir clean.

Special offerings for the Sinking Fund (which is being accumulated to pay the ground rent) are asked from each member of the congregation on St. Clement's Day.

Plans, etc., for heating the church with steam are being prepared.

Members of the confirmation classes of 1895-1896 may obtain their certificates by applying to the clergy after any service.

The clergy are always glad to receive names and addresses of people who attend the services and desire to be visited.

The increase in attendance at all the services is gratifying, especially the number present at week-day masses.

Quite a number of people have asked for envelopes this fall; are there not a good many who fail in their duty in this respect? They do not trust God, nor love their religion, nor care for their own souls.

A play is to be given in the Parish building on Wednesday, November 18th, for the benefit of the Sea Shore Home.

Special attention is called to No. 1 of St. Clement's Tracts. It is hoped to publish additional ones from time to time.

Subscriptions are asked for the Extra Music Fund.

Every devout Christian man and woman in the Parish ought to join St. Saviour's Ward C. B. S.

Lecture of Dr. Wells.

Instead of the usual address at the Mothers' Meeting, on October 26th, there was a lecture in the hall up-stairs by Dr. W. H. Wells, lecturer at the Polyclinic Hospital, on the subject of "The Food and Care of Children." The lecture was full of practical hints, the outcome of the extended experience of one who is an authority on that subject.

Loyalty to the Prayer-Book.

Loyalty to the Prayer-Book does not mean that one is obliged to follow those false interpretations of the rubrics and articles which Protestants have adopted. The Prayer-Book is a thoroughly Catholic volume. It was the principle of those who translated the book from Latin into English out of the ancient sources that while some mediæval abuses of ceremony and doctrine were to be abolished, all truly Catholic teaching and practice were to be retained. The Church made her appeal to antiquity The religion we want is the religion of the Apostles—what has been used by all Catholics at all times and in all places. If in the storm and stress of the sixteenth century, as the Archbishop of York says, some of the precious lading of the ship may have been cast out, this much is certain, that nothing essential to true Catholicity was abandoned, and also that it is our privilege and our duty to reclaim and use all of our Catholic heritage which may have been neglected.

It must be understood, then, that the Prayer-Book articles and rubrics are always to be interpreted on an historical and Catholic basis. That is the law and principle of this Church. To take one special case, Protestants have claimed that the rubric at the end of the Mass, directing that the sacred elements be consumed, is intended to forbid reservation for the sick. But we know from Bishop Cosin, who wrote the rubric in question, that this rubric was intended to apply only when there was no need of reservation, being written for the sole purpose of preventing the desecration of the sacrament by careless Priests; it was understood that the primitive and Catholic practice of reservation was to continue, and the direction to reserve was contained in the authorized Latin Prayer-Book used by the clergy. "Then shall the Priest reserve (at the open communion) so much of the sacrament of the body and blood as shall serve the sick person," etc.

This method of interpreting the Prayer-Book is the only loyal method. It is the one adopted by the House of Bishops, and appears in the special case referred to in their last pastoral, where it is said that permission to reserve the sacrament may be given by the Ordinary.

More Frequent Communions.

The life in Christ must be an ever advancing one; movement forward and upward must always be chief characteristics. This is suggested to our minds, if we did not know it otherwise, by what we see in natural plant and animal life all about us. And the analogy is kept up when we come to think about the subject of food. The body cannot live and grow without eating, neither can the soul; and God has provided for each its proper nourishment. The food of the Christian soul is preëminently the Blessed Sacrament, our Lord Himself hidden under forms of bread and wine, and coming to us in a great mystery. All this is plainly enough taught us in the Catechism and other parts of the Prayer-Book, and one would suppose that earnest Christians would need no urging to induce them to come frequently to the altar, after due preparation, of course, there to receive the meat and drink which they need for spiritual life and growth. But experience shows that such is not the case. We are not speaking now of uninstructed Christians, or untrained novices in spiritual matters, whose zeal may sometimes need a cautionary word. We have rather in mind many persons whose outer and inner life are consistent, quiet, regular and devout, but who come to receive the Blessed Sacrament hardly more frequently than when they were confirmed. No doubt their communions are better ones than they were at first; no doubt they have advanced in grace; but that is not the point. Have they grown as much as they would have grown if, with increasing faithfulness in other matters, there had been a drawing closer to their Lord in the Sacrament of His Love? It is a great mistake to think that fulfilment of the obligation to attend Mass every Sunday is a sufficient fulfilment of the divine precepts concerning our worship. It is good so far; it is the least that a Christian should do. But mere attendance always falls short of the full privilege of sacrament added to sacrifice, although for convenience, and as a concession to modern habits of life, the two aspects of the Holy Eucharist are often separately emphasized. If the love of God is more to us than a meaningless and unwelcome phrase, surely our ideal of communion with Him who is our life will not end with monthly or even with weekly reception. In the earliest days of Christianity daily communion was almost a rule. That was when love was fervent, and when the contrast between the Church and the world was sharp and strong. Signs are not wanting to indicate that something like the struggle of the first ages is in store for Christians of the times upon which we are now entering. Religion must be real if it is to win. It can only be real in proportion as it is the outcome of grace. Union with Christ through faithful participation in His appointed sacraments is the merciful provision by which we obtain grace. Such are the steps which give a Parish like St. Clement's a logical reason for being. We believe in Sacramental Christianity, for through the sacraments we believe we have the touch of God. Let us touch Him more frequently. Not all are ready for daily or even weekly communion, but some are, who, through a strange feeling of fear, now hold back. Many should consider the duty of making a higher ideal for themselves in this matter. May not the Parish Festival and the opening life of another Church year be the fit occasion for a step forward into nearer relationship with Him who has blessed us so much in the past?

St. Lawrence Guild Notes.

The visiting lists are being issued as rapidly as they can be arranged. It is hoped that, with the aid of several new volunteers, there will be enough workers to cover the field.

Several parcels of clothing have come in during the past month. Some clothing has been sold for money, some for work. Gifts of men's coats, and especially of men's underwear, are needed.

The Chaplain would be glad to hear from any of those formerly known as "The Master's Workers." Possibly some of them might find in the work of the Guild a congenial sphere for effort.

Several plans are suggested, but none matured, to provide funds for the year's use. Individual enterprise, neighborhood parties and entertainments, the proceeds to be given to the Guild, are suggested.

Members of St. Lawrence Guild please notice that the annual meeting is to be held on Tuesday morning, November 3d, at 10 o'clock. A full attendance is requested.

After the medical lecture on Thursday, October 26th, the new lantern purchased by the Parish, was tried for the first time. The mothers were glad to see some faces on the screen which have not been seen at St. Clement's for many a day. The Welsbach light was not entirely satisfactory, but another trial may show better results. Thanks are due to Mr. William Brown for his kindness in managing the lantern and showing a good number of his fine collection of slides.

The Invocation of Saints.

There are some people so selfish in religion that they wish to deny to others the privileges which they themselves do not enjoy. Invocation of Saints has never been regarded as necessary to salvation; but why people should object to a practice so pious and so beneficial is difficult to understand. To be sure there have been injurious caricatures of the practice in some parts of the Christian Church, but that is no reason why the Catholic doctrine underlying the custom, as well as the custom itself, should be abandoned.

In his recent book on "The Invocation of Saints," the Rev. H. R. Percival, D.D., of Philadelphia, has shown very clearly that this pious practice is a laudable Catholic custom, most edifying to devotion, keeping before our minds the continuity of the Church, the permanence of individuality after death, our unity in Christ with the blessed dead and the power of the prayers of the just men made perfect. He points out that the "Romish doctrine concerning the Invocation of Saints," condemned in our Articles of Religion, is quite another thing from the Catholic doctrine which the Church has never condemned. The shocking perversions of invocation popular in the Roman Church are plainly demonstrated, while the catena of quotations setting forth the true doctrine is admirable.

All Saints and All Souls.

Remember the All Saints Sisters and their works in their festival; perhaps some people would like to give groceries, etc., for the poor on that day; the need is great and the cupboard is empty.

All Souls.—Send in names of dead friends (especially those who have died within the year), for mention on All Souls Day. Offerings are asked for the black vestments, dalmatic tunicle and cope; the cope is to be a memorial of "Miss Hannah," given by the Parish.

Special offerings are asked on All Soul's Day for the black vestments. Perhaps some would wish to pay the whole cost, including embroidery of one article.

A short service of "Bona Mors" will be said each Monday in November. It is hoped that this may lead to the organization of a league for this object. We ought to have some kind of a burial guild in connection with the Sodality of St. Clement. A portion of ground in which to bury our dead is needed, and money to pay the expense of burial, in case of needy and devout communicants.

Christian Philanthropy.

In his speech in support of the East London Church Fund, last week, Lord Salisbury put his finger on a bad flaw in our so-called Christian philanthropy. It is true enough, as it has been urged in newspaper comments on his Lordship's remarks, that human nature is a queer compound, and that some people will not contribute to worthy objects without getting something for their money in the way of excitement—a dinner, a ball, or a garden party. But the question still remains whether it is legitimate to take advantage of such machinery when asking help for "some work of beneficence, dealing with the sorest maladies of humanity," to use Lord Salisbury's words. Is not the sense of duty of almsgiving blunted by the practice in question? Every one knows that the old hospitable practice of giving dances in private houses is fast declining, and excuses have to be manufactured for bringing people together in public assemblies. The fashionable craze for "slumming" bred a spurious philanthropy, which is now used by caterers for public gaiety as a means of allurement. The sorrows of the poor, the sufferings of the sick, are adroitly made use of in a fin de siecle sense, "to make a Roman holiday." But the saints who gave their lives for Christ's poor, what must they think of our latter-day Christians who make beneficence a mere pretext for indulging their thirst for mundane pleasures!

In a forcible letter addressed to the Times Canon Barnett warns the benevolent public against a most undesirable, even harmful, form of charity. The Canon is convinced that children's monster day treats are positively pernicious. They fail as a means of health, owing to the length and heat of the journey to and fro, excessive indulgence in unwholesome food, and undue excitement. As for pleasure, such as it is, it is "that which is given by drink. The children lose their self-control, they shout and scream, they quarrel and fight for the best places in the carriages, they ill-treat the donkeys, the frogs and the crabs, and they return home disheveled, cross and ashamed. They do not by their day in the country accumulate memories which will draw them to a country life, and they do not get pleasures which will furnish their imagination with new scenes in which to act." All this we can readily believe, and we quite agree with Canon Barnett that it is far better to send the children of the really poor for a fortnight's stay in the country, lodging them with cottagers, and giving them a chance of playing in wood and meadow and rambling through leafy lanes; but in spite this, we believe that those Parish Priests who have as great, and even greater, experience of the poor as Canon Barnett, have found all attempts to break away from this annual outing a matter of the greatest difficulty. It would be interesting to find out how many Sunday-schools depend for their very existence on this annual bribe to their scholars and teachers.—Church Times, London.

Saints on the Church House.

The Church House, at Twelfth and Walnut streets, is now completed. It is a witness to the Catholic religion in every respect, but it is especially gratifying to notice the carved images of the Saints of the Church which adorn the graceful exterior of the building. They tell the story of the Church's life from the time of the Apostles to the establishment of the Episcopate in this country.

First, there are the Holy Apostles, Peter and Paul, with the sword and keys; then S. Athanasius comes, properly vested as the Archbishop of Alexandria; then there are SS. Alban and Austin, Columba, Patrick and Augustin, showing the history of the Church of England, as deriving its life from the Celtic Church and the Roman Church. The statues of Bishops White and Seabury, who were the first American Bishops, are not yet erected. It is a satisfaction to notice that the figures are properly vested, the copes, mitres, chasubles and croiziers being, in all cases, properly represented.

St. Clement's Tide.

The Fête of the Catechism on Sunday afternoon really ushered in the festival; but at night it began in earnest. The rooms of the Parish Building, soon after seven o'clock, were alive with members of the different Guilds; at eight the church was crowded; nearly all of the pews in the center aisle were filled with those of us who belong to Guilds, the men and boys wearing medals, and the women and girls wearing veils, after the old, and not after the modern, fashion. The First Vespers were solemnly sung. The priests in copes were Revs. G. H. Moffett, W. C. Clapp and H. Parrish. The sermon by Rev. Dr. Clendenin had for its subject the message of the Catholic Church to men and women of our times; the old answers of God to the old questions of mankind—"What St. Clement's stands for." The procession of Guilds followed immediately after the sermon, and a glorious sight it was to see so many bearing witness, publicly, to the courage of their convictions. Two thurifers, crucifer, each Guild, with its banner, the choir, acolytes and clergy. At the close of the procession a solemn Te Deum was sung unto the Lord, all standing before the altar. Five early Masses were said at our altars, 191 Communions were made (many made their Communions by anticipation on Sunday), and many hoped to come during the octave. At eleven the solemn Mass was sung; Celebrant, the Rev. W. C. Clapp, Deacon; the Rev. H. Parrish, Sub-Deacon; the Rev. C. C. Quin; some of the city Clergy were in the choir; the Rev. Dr. Mortimer, the Revs. D. I. Odell Manning, Steele, Willing, and many others were in the congregation. Schubert in G was sung with orchestral accompaniment. The Rev. Arthur Ritchie, of St. Ignatius, New York, preached, and we hope he will permit us to have the sermon printed. He said St. Clement's had always stood for the "unworldly spirit." May God keep us true to this principle. During the morning a message came from Father Field, in his usual happy vein, conveying the good wishes of our good friends, the Fathers of St. John Evangelist. Many others of the Clergy sent kindly greeting, or gave them in person. The other services will be spoken of in the next number of the MAGAZINE.

The Parish Tea.

The Parish Tea on Tuesday evening was very well attended, indeed. The hall was crowded. Mr. Remont had arranged for an orchestra, and this added much to the success of the evening. Father Longridge was present and made a few remarks.

Mr. Clapp spoke of the Mission work, and the Rector had something to say about a crusade for the ransom of our holy place. If you want to join, write your name on a piece of paper, put it in the plate at the time of your communion; it is a sign that you will give something for the Sinking Fund each month, until the whole amount is raised; please put the money in an envelope.

Dr. Mortimer promised to be present, but he was unable to do so.

Notice to a Correspondent.

If the person who sent an anonymous letter, enclosing stamps for one year's subscription to St. Clement's MAGAZINE, will please send name and address, the stamps will be promptly returned.—EDITOR.

The receipt of marked copies of ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE for November, 1887, and September, 1889, is acknowledged. From all appearances the object and method of the sender is not to be commended; it betrays a very low grade of spiritual aim and effort. In this connection we would like to say that the clergy are always glad and willing to afford every reasonable opportunity to all for counsel and help. G. H. M.

"Not Such a Fool as He Looks."

This comedy was given in the Parish Building, on Wednesday evening, November 18th, for the benefit of the Sea Shore Home. Perhaps it ought to be said that the proceeds are not to pay a deficit, but to provide funds for next summer. If a considerable number of the people took as much trouble, or showed as much interest, as those who took part in this play, the raising of the needed fund would be accomplished with only the average amount of labor. There was a good audience present, and the interest was maintained until the end. One almost forgot that one of the characters, owing to insufficient time, had to read his part. The music between the acts was also enjoyable. It is to be hoped that a satisfactory sum was realized.

A False Witness.

Some time ago a man attended the 11 o'clock High Mass at St. Clement's with a friend, both being strangers. This man was a low Churchman, and he was heard telling his friend that at St. Clement's "they never used the Prayer-book." Throughout the Mass he sat up in his seat, refusing to kneel, and rapidly turned the leaves of a Prayer-book, which he frequently showed to his friend, apparently in order to convince him that his assertion about St. Clement's and the Prayer-book was true.

"There, I told you so," he remarked, quite audibly, at the end of the service, "I told you so. They never use the Prayer-book here in this Church. It ought to be reported to the authorities," at the same time he pointed to the end of that part of the Prayer-book where he had been trying in vain to follow the service. It was done so ostentatiously that a parishioner behind them could not help observing the place. The man had been following in Morning Prayer!

The moral is that if low Churchmen would go a little deeper into the Prayer-book and familiarize themselves with something beyond the part nearest the cover, they would be able to recognize the communion office, commonly called the Mass, when they hear it sung. We have Morning Prayer at 10.30 Sundays.

Fourth Annual Report of the Clothing Club.

The object of this club is to help mothers to buy clothing for their younger children, by taking care of such small sums of money as can be saved each week for that purpose. Money may be brought to the school on Sunday afternoons. A card, marked with the amount sent, will be given to each child bringing it.

Shoes, clothing for boys, hats, etc., will be bought for club members, and sold to them at a discount. The clothing will be sold in the school-room every Thursday evening.

The ladies in charge of the club desire to thank all those who have helped and encouraged them by donations of materials, half-worn garments, and the making of new garments. Thanks are also due to STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER, and to the Eastern Penitentiary, for all goods purchased from them.

Donations of money, materials and half-worn garments will be thankfully received, and may be sent to the Parish Building, 2024 Cherry street, in care of Miss Katharine Smith. Coats for little girls are much needed—ladies' dress skirts of woolen materials can be utilized for the purpose.

The benefits of the club were originally intended for the members of the Infant School only; but we have been obliged to depart from this rule, having found it necessary to clothe the older children in order that they may bring the younger ones to Sunday-school.

KATHARINE SMITH,
MARY P. GORDON.

During the past season we have given away 121 pieces of clothing.

The Library.

The Library is open once more, and many new books have been added. We have now about four hundred and fifty volumes. They can be taken out after the children's Mass Sunday mornings. It is hoped to issue a catalogue soon.

New up-to-date books are always welcome at the Library, and any one who wishes to contribute to the amusement and taste of the children of St. Clement's may hand such books to Mrs. David Coles, the Librarian.

Marriages.

On Wednesday night, October 28th, at 8 o'clock, one of our acolytes, Mr. Percy T. Kneale, was united in holy wedlock to Miss Elsie Mehl. Mr. Wm. Goodwin, an old member of St. Vincent's Guild, was organist; Mr. Wm. H. Hutt was best man and Messrs. Ritter, Goodwin and Linton, all of the Guild, were ushers. A Nuptial Mass was celebrated in the church early in the day.

On Wednesday, November 11th, at the Church of the Ascension, Mr. F. J. Prior, Jr., (of St. Clement's), was united in holy wedlock to Miss Florence E. Smith. The Rector of the Ascension was assisted by The Rev. G. H. Moffett. A Nuptial Mass was celebrated for the bridal party at St. Clement's early on that morning.

The Last Judgment.

Spohr's "Last Judgment" will be sung in St. Clement's Church on Tuesday evening, December 15th, at 8 P. M., by the choir of the Church of the Epiphany. The use of our church building is granted to our neighboring parish at the request of The Rev. Dr. Tidball, the edifice in which they are permitted to hold services until next spring, by the courtesy of their other neighbors, not being entirely suitable—our permission is gladly given. Of course there will be no charge, but a collection will be taken for charitable purposes.

Solemn Requiem.

A Solemn Requiem Mass was sung in the church on Friday, November 13th, at 7 o'clock, for the repose of the soul of Miss Hannah P. Smith. This was done in accordance with her own wishes, and afforded an opportunity for many friends to show their affection and respect for her memory in a truly Christian and Catholic fashion. The black cope, intended as a memorial on the part of the Parish, was not finished in time. The service was dignified and solemn. Our choir and acolytes, even at that early hour, were present in full force. The legacies have not been received; their purpose has not been decided on as yet.

"May she rest in peace."

A Public Disgrace.

A certain Protestant institution which calls itself a church recently advertised that it would hold a "show"—admission ten cents. The feature of the exhibition was called a "Bicycle Wedding." The bridal party was to appear in the building on wheels and ride away after the ceremony. We were glad to note that the public indignation at this travesty of the sacrament of matrimony was so great in Philadelphia that the proposed "show" had to be given up, as far as the church was concerned. The newspapers deserve much credit for their denunciation of this scandalous affair.

Our Persecutors.

Philadelphia means Brotherly Love. This city was founded to be a place of absolute religious liberty. But nevertheless the clergy of St. Clement's are at present enjoying the Beatitude of persecution from two opposite quarters.

For years the children of the Cathedral schools on Logan Square have annoyed the priests of St. Clement's in many ways. It is a small matter, of course, to endure the jeers of a mob of rather untidy youngsters who follow one half a block calling out nicknames according to their taste, besides other language too indecent to mention. But it does seem rather strange when boys of from 12 to 16 years of age, who, although Roman Catholics, are still presumably taught the principles of Christain charity, from a safe distance fling at the clergy of St. Clement's stones large enough to be dangerous. And lately the church windows have suffered considerably from the same children, who seem to be trying to carry out the inherited controversial methods of other countries into the somewhat subdued conventionalities of American civilization.

Our other would-be persecutors are older and Protestant. We are almost ashamed for them when we tell on them. The fact is they have not yet learned that the Episcopal Church is a Catholic Church. They write annonymous letters of an amusing and recognizable type, under the impression that by such foolish methods they can stop God's work at St. Clement's Church. The letters themselves are harmless, but the dishonesty of the author appears chiefly when he issues communications under other people's names.

More Preaching.

"There is too much preaching," is a remark sometimes made by thoughtless people.

The fact of the matter is, there is too little preaching. The Apostles preached every day when they could gain a hearing. There were no once-a-week, fifteen minute sermon-essays in those days. Some of the Fathers preached every day. The volumes of writings of St. Augustine and St. Chrysostom are for the most part the reports of their sermons on the Holy Scriptures. The great mediæval preachers, St. Francis, St. Dominic, and the others, who created such wonderful revivals of religion in the Europe of their time, preached sometimes many times a day to thousands of people. There can be no doubt that the want of faith to-day is due to too infrequent preaching of the Gospel.

Parish Notes.

The Rev. G. H. Moffett preached for Guild of All Souls, at St. Mark's Church, on Eve of All Souls.

The Rev. W. C. Clapp conducted the Parochial Retreat at St. Andrew's, Baltimore, on November 27th.

The Rev. H. Parrish preached for Guild of All Souls, at Mount Calvary, Baltimore, on November 2d.

The Rev. C. C Quin is now formally attached to the Parish.

The amount of money received to complete our set of black vestments (cope, dalmatic, tunicle, stoles and maniples) is $60 40. The cost of materials so far has been $84.13; the dalmatic and tunicle were ready for use on November 13th.

The Guild of St. Vincent has promised the cost of materials for a green cope as a memorial of a departed member.

Over 300 names were read out on All Souls' Day; a Requiem Mass was also said on November 3d, 4th, 5th, 7th, 9th, 10th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 16th, 18th, 19th and 21st.

The various activities of the Parish are again in operation—guild meetings, services, etc.

The Bishop of the Diocese, with his usual kindness, licensed the collect, epistle and gospel "for use in St. Clement's Church during the octave of the anniversary, 1896." He also sent the following: "I pray that the blessing of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost may rest upon you and your congregation in all the services at your approaching festival, and that you may, indeed, worship Him in spirit and in truth."

Father Field was in the city for two days and baptized a child in the chapel on November 4th.

The preparation of plans for heating the buildings by steam has been more difficult than was anticipated—to provide sufficient radiating surface, with least discomfort to those sitting near, has been one of the obstacles.

Our finances are in a more satisfactory condition—we are meeting our expenses and have no floating debt.

The demands of the needy and poor during the coming winter will be very great. For the love of God, enable us to do our share, "especially unto them that are of the household of faith." There are no provisions in the Mission House cupboard.

Twenty-three communicants have been transferred to St. Clement's since May 1st, and seven dismissed to other parishes. Will not regular attendants here present their letters of transfer, that we may know those for whom we are responsible?

The Companions of the Holy Saviour have, after a preliminary retreat, gone into residence in St. Elizabeth's Parish; they have the cordial approbation of the Bishop of the Diocese. Our Parish clergy were responsible for the Masses at St. Elizabeth's during the retreat and the Superior of the congregation kindly preached for us on Thanksgiving Day.

It is matter of great gratitude that attendance at services during the past month has been encouraging, and the number of communions greater than last year—what a tremendous force if all were working enthusiastically for the building up of St. Clement's Parish!

Make good use of Advent to prepare for Christmas Communion. Come more frequently to church on week days; make more communions; add Wednesday as a day of abstinence.

Father Puller has published in pamphlet form his articles on the Pope's Bull, which appeared in the Guardian. They are a very complete answer to the arguments of the Bull.

The appointment of the Bishop of London to the See of Canterbury is very favorably received in England, as is also the translation of Bishop Creighton to London.

The House of Bishops, at a meeting in New York, elected a Missionary Bishop for the new jurisdiction of Duluth.

The Rev. J. G. Ewens, formerly one of the clergy of this Parish, has been elected rector of St. Alban's Church, Erie, Pennsylvania.

The clergy are always willing to arrange for special Masses at the request of members of the Parish. Several have taken place during the past month.

The rector of the Church of the Annunciation, and St. Lawrence's Guild (for acolytes), arranged for a special service on Tuesday evening, November 24th, to which they asked the clergy and acolytes of other parishes. On account of Parish Tea, we were not able to accept the invitation.

The gallery of the church is not open for the congregation. Any person desiring permission must ask the Clergy and give some sufficient reason.

The St. Clement's stones have been taken out of the cellar and the boxing removed; they are now in the church near the font.

Shakespeare a Churchman.

William Shakespeare, the world-famous poet and dramatist, was a true and loyal member of the Church of England. Born in 1564, after the Reformation, he was baptized in the Parish church of his native town, Stratford, three days later. When he died, in 1616, his body was interred in the chancel of the same church. In his will, made a few weeks before his death, he wrote: "First, I commend my soul into the hands of God, my Creator, hoping and assuredly believing, through the only merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting."

As a member of the Church of England, Shakespeare expresses, in his writings, very clearly the historical attitude of his Church. On the one hand he pictures the position of the Church of England in relation to the Church of Rome. The trickery and scheming methods of the Italian cardinals and legates are represented especially in his historical plays. The words of King John to the Pope's legate Paudulph,

> "and from the mouth of England
> Add thus much more, that no Italian priest
> Shall title or toll in our dominions," shows the attitude of England in Shakespeare's time, as now, toward Rome.

On the other hand, as a loyal Churchman, Shakespeare had no admiration for the crabbed theology and narrow prejudices of Protestants and Puritans. Shakespeare was a thoroughly Catholic Churchman. He knew and recognized that the clergy of the Church of England were Catholic Priests and that they heard confessions and said Mass—he always uses the word Mass. The worst fate he can picture is expressed by saying "unhouseled" at death, i. e., not having received the Blessed Sacrament. He frequently used the words "shrift" and "shrive," also, meaning the Sacrament of Penance. But for the Protestant Puritans, at that time just rising into prominence, with their long faces and sour looks and horror of plays and players, he has only a smile of amusement, and in fact seldom mentions them at all.

Unscrupulous Romanists have tried to claim Shakespeare as a member of the Church of Rome, and some ignorant critics who did not know the fact that the Church of England is a Catholic Church, have fallen into their trap. But Shakespeare's grave in the chancel of Stratford Church is conclusive proof that he died in communion with the Church of England; and Shakespeare's writings clearly show the Catholic character of the Church of England during the reign of Elizabeth and James I.

Clothing Wanted For Sale.

The Guild of St. Lawrence has decided to adopt a plan which is being successfully used by Church workers in other cities, namely, to sell at very moderate prices to buyers whose worthiness is known, any garments that may be sent to the Guild with this understanding. Experience proves that those who boldly ask, or rather demand outright, gifts of one kind or another, are not the ones who really deserve to be helped. It is rather those whose timidity and whose sense of justice prevents them from doing this, who would rather do all in their power to pay for what they get—these are the ones who have the first claim upon us. Care will be exercised in order that this charitable feature of the plan may not be abused.

As the work of the Guild requires almost no expense for maintenance of organization, all the proceeds from these sales will go toward the charitable fund. Donors of discarded clothing are asked to continue their gifts and to extend the notice of this plan among their friends as widely as possible. All kinds of garments, under or outer clothing, shoes, etc., will be acceptable. Packages will be sent for if it is desired. Should any one donate articles and express a preference that they should not be sold but rather given to the poor, such a wish will be respected; this applies as well to any garments which have been recently given and which may still be on hand.

Notes on the Catechism.

The Fête in honor of St. Clement was kept on Sunday afternoon, November 22d. Billets on the subject of St Clement, his life and times, were recited by William Blue, Florence Downey, Edith Smith, Lizzie Duff, Arthur Greenfield, Jennie Johnson.

To those whose custom has been to give donations to the Sunday-school, we would say, that such gifts would be very acceptable just now, in order to defray the present expenses, and to provide for the Christmas entertainment.

Are the children who do not attend the catechism (but whose parents are communicants of this church) properly and regularly instructed at home? If not, they should be sent to the church on Sundays, at 3 P. M. The session of the catechism proper takes about one hour.

The Advent of Our Lord.

The recurring seasons of the Church's year are chiefly valuable, because they vividly enforce, each in its turn, some side of Gospel truth. During the great festivals, thoughts run high and hearts beat exultant in contemplation of the glorious things of our religion. But as the flower can only compound its brilliant tints from plainer juices, so the festivals have their strength in the thoughtful periods which precede them. Easter must have its Lent, and Christmas its Advent. Before we can rightly rejoice in the blessed truth of God's nearness and presence in the Incarnation, it is wholesome to consider what a dreadful thing it is to have God near us at all, whether at the Day of Judgment, openly manifesting His majesty and glory, or now hiding Himself by spiritual presence and under sacramental veils. The Christian, living in the world and touching with every sense of body and faculty of mind the secular and material, needs to be brought, needs to bring himself, to face spiritual realities and to deliberately acknowledge the responsibility which God's presence brings. It will be quite possible to spend the coming Advent, with due conformity to the outside requirements of Church attendance, without advancing one step in true religion. It will be equally possible for every member of this Parish to make use of this opportunity offered to enter—it may be for the first time or it may be a reëntrance—upon the realization of God, His truth, His love, His justice. The routine of Church services will not do it; there must be the individual effort and the individual gift of self.

> My God, I give myself to Thee,
> Thine ever, only Thine, to be.

Archbishop Benson and the Pope.

ADDINGTON-PARK, CROYDON,
October 20th.

SIR:—I venture to enclose for publication some paragraphs written by my father, the late Archbishop of Canterbury, very shortly before his death. On Saturday, the 10th of October, the day following his passage from Ireland, he traveled with my mother from Carlisle to Chester on his way to Hawarden. In the train he wrote the first draft of the document; my mother copied it out for him, and on the Sunday morning, after the early service, he put his last corrections to it, shortly after which he left the house to walk to the morning service. It is possible that later additions and corrections were to have been made; but I have felt it a duty to publish, exactly as it was left, the last public pronouncement that came from his pen.

I beg to remain very faithfully yours,
ARTHUR C. BENSON.

"Some letters which I receive expect (I believe mistakenly) that positiveness of assertion may still have an effect on some who mistook the kindliness of a personage for the thawing of the frozen Church-policy to which he is committed. If there remain any such, after the strong disavowals that have been made, they ought not to be thrown over, they are the very persons to be treated with tenderness.

"I write these to say that a statement will shortly appear which may, I hope, comfort any who think it is required. Infallibility has, happily, this time ventured on reasons. But the subject of orders, as needful to a perfectly constituted Church, has been as jealously scrutinized in England as by Rome, and with much mere knowledge of facts. Authorities of theirs have till lately, at any rate, taught more ludicrous fables about English orders, and the late Papal document exhibits ignorances of which their own scholars and critics are as well aware as we. The result of scrutiny with that fuller knowledge was, and is, to establish that our Holy Orders are identical with those of the whole Catholic Church. They are in origin, continuity, matter, form, intention, and all that belongs to them, identical accordingly with those of the Church of Rome, except in the one modern point of subjection to the Pope, on which point at the Reformation we deliberately resumed our ancient concurrence with the whole Catholic world besides. There is not a break anywhere in our orders, sacraments, creeds, scriptures, spiritual gifts, in all that compacts and frames the 'holiness' of the 'one Catholic Apostolic Church' of the ages.

"And, as it would be an evil unfaithfulness to saddle with foreign allegiance the gifts that we derive from Christ, so now this remarkable challenge, with its accompanying offers, undoubtedly moves Churchmen to consider what we are exposed to through our unworthy separations, to be really in love with unity at home as well as abroad, not to be deceived by pretensions to unity and assertions which have historically created the widest and deepest of all separations, but to draw closer together in faith, firmness, and forbearance."—Church Times.

The Committee of Management desire to call the attention of the members of the Parish to the fact that the care of the vestments has been given to the members of the Altar Guild, and it is their duty to keep all vestments in the proper repair and to furnish new ones when needed. This they cannot do without financial aid. Contributions to the Vestment Fund, no matter how small, will be most acceptable, and may be given to the Rector, or to the Treasurer of the Guild.

GOOD MORNING!
HAPPY NEW YEAR!

With this number we begin our fourth year of the new series.

We have grown from six pages, which could be crowded into two of our present pages, and our subscription list has kept pace with the growth of the paper.

It is gratifying to know that our efforts are appreciated, and we hope we will be criticized as freely as we have been praised. It is only by criticism that we can learn our faults.

We ask our readers to patronize advertisers whenever possible, as advertisements will not be accepted from persons about whose reliability we have any doubt.

Christmas-tide.

Many do not consider how much loving and cheerful work has to be done before a festival. They come and see and criticise, without offer of practical advice or help. For five nights the members of St. Vincent's Guild worked on the screen; the choir has worked hard since September; members of the Guild of St. Mary gave many hours; other workers gave their time and labor. Through these willing efforts the preparation is made. We would not thank them; it was done for God and religion. We only desire that others may know a little.

We have much to be thankful for: a very considerable evidence of real and penitent preparation; 359 communions and generous offerings were made. The music at eleven o'clock is a further indication of what we are going to do. There is a true loyal spirit about our choir that shows we have much to expect. The orchestra was a great addition to the voices. Some of us really know and appreciate all this work, and we do not hamper or hinder it by unkind crit cism.

The music was repeated on the Sunday in the octave.

Dedication Festival.

On Wednesday night the children had a magic lantern entertainment. On Thanksgiving day Father Longridge sang the High Mass, and Rev. Wm. McGarvey preached. On Advent Sunday Father Sargent preached both morning and evening.

The offerings during the Festival were for the Sinking Fund; they amounted to $723.76.

The whole octave awoke the enthusiasm of all. Rev. Arthur Ritchie's sermon has been printed and is on sale; every one ought to buy a copy.

The Last Judgment.

On Tuesday evening, December 15th, Spohr's oratorio was sung in St. Clement's by the choir of the Church of the Epiphany, under the leadership of Mr. J. E. Ackroyd, their choirmaster. The church was well filled, in spite of the bad weather. The collection, which amounted to $36.36, was given to the Poor Fund, managed by the All Saints Sisters.

The Crusade.

Purpose.—The Ransom of St. Clement's Church by the raising of sufficient money to pay the ground-rent.

Membership.—Write your name on paper and place on Alms basin.

Pledge.—To pay "Ransom money" each month.

Recommendations.—Pray for the "Purpose." Interest others.

Quite a number of people are using the following prayer in their private devotions and at Mass:

Antiphon.—The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts.

V. In this place

R. Will I give peace.

Almighty God, who in former times didst, by Thy Servants, ransom Thy Holy Sepulchre from captivity to the infidels, mercifully grant that Thy people in this place may be so moved by the love of Thy Holy Name and by the Spirit of Thy Cross that this Temple of Thine may be delivered from the burden of debt and made worthy of Thy living Presence; through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

"Ransom" envelopes may be found in the corridor.

One hundred and three persons have enrolled their names.

The ground-rent now amounts to $13,000; the Trustees of the Sinking Fund have $3,000 invested and $840.40 on deposit; "Ransom money," in addition, $752.69; this includes Christmas Day.

In old times it used to be said that St. Clement's people were always "joining things," and those who were not ashamed to be earnest and enthusiastic were called "joiners." We want some more of it; the "Ransom" is a great attempt; we want "strugglers," not "stragglers."

The encouraging part of the Crusade is the fact of the real enthusiasm it has created. The members of the classes of the Catechism determined to make an effort in the way of Advent self-denial, and they each offered to God "Ransom money" on Christmas Day.

The little children of the Guild of the Holy Child gave their Christmas gift to God and for the Holy Place. This is not the first time for them; it amounted to $4.25. Many of those who have willingly pledged themselves have counted the cost and charged it to self-denial. It seems to be worth while. It has not yet been decided whether names will be published or not.

On December 12th, the year's mind of Stewart Stone, priest and sometime vicar of the Church of the Holy Comforter, a Solemn Mass was sung in St. Clement's for the repose of his soul.

George Washington a Churchman.

George Washington, the hero of the American Revolution and first President of the United States, was a churchman.

Born February 22d, 1732, in the Province of Virginia, he was brought up as a loyal member of the Church of England, which was by law the established church of Virginia in colonial days. He was baptized by a priest of the church and became a communicant, although he never received the Sacrament of Confirmation, because there were no Bishops in America to administer it until the year 1789, when Samuel Seabury was made Bishop of Connecticut by the Bishops of Scotland. In the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington, D. C., is a large painting of a Colonial Priest in Virginia administering the Sacrament of Baptism, in surplice and stol at a font and with the prayer-book.

George Washington's pew is to be found in nearly every pre-revolutionary Anglican Church in the colonial cities where he stopped in his frequent journeys along the Atlantic coast from Virginia to Boston. In Philadelphia, both before and after the war, and during his residence as President, he worshipped at Christ Church and at St. Peter's, where his pews are still to be seen. The picture of George Washington kneeling in prayer during the hard winter at Valley Forget on the banks of the Schuylkill, is familiar o every school-boy who studies history.

It is said that at Cambridge, Mass., he was engaged in his devotions one day when a raw, young subaltern interrupted him by hastily entering the room without knocking. The General promptly arose, picked up his scabbard and flung it at the head of the frightened intruder—and then knelt again and continued his prayers!

The Church was established in Virginia at a period when the Church of England was at the very lowest ebb of her spiritual life. But it is a satisfaction to remember the long list of historic names, like Washington, Lee, Harrison and Jefferson, who however imperfectly, have still exhibited something of that nobility of character which comes from a devout belief in the great mysteries of the Catholic Religion.

Dr. Paret and Fasting Communion.

Dr. Paret, the Bishop of Maryland, has published a visitation sermon on "Fasting Before Communion." To receive the Holy Communion before taking any other food or drink has been the custom of the whole Church from the earliest times. It is true that Our Lord instituted the Sacrament "after supper;" but this "supper" was the Jewish Passover, and Our Lord and the Apostles were fasting when they received it (Edersheim "Temple Service," p. 203), having eaten nothing all day. It is true, also, that for a few years after the ascension, the Eucharist was celebrated in connection with the Agapæ or Love-feast. But the abuses of this custom caused the Love feast to be given up, and fasting communion became the rule, probably by the authority of the Apostles themselves.

Certainly, from the close of the first century until the Reformation, a period of 1,500 years, Fasting Communion was the general rule of the Christian Church. (See Father Puller's pamphlet, "Concerning the Fast Before Communion.") And the Anglican Church never repudiated this law. Bishop Jeremy Taylor says, "He that despises this custom gives nothing but the testimony of an evil mind." The only exception to the rule of receiving fasting, would be in the case of a person in extremis, or specially dispensed for valid reasons.

St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, says, "It has seemed good to the Holy Ghost that in honor of so great a Sacrament, the Body of the Lord should enter the mouth of a Christian before other food; and it is for this reason that the custom referred to is observed throughout the whole world." [To Januarius, Epist. I.]

St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, and St. Chrysostom, Bishop of Constantinople, are equally clear as to the universal custom of fasting before receiving the Sacrament. The 28th Canon of the Council of Hippo also enforced this rule.

It is a satisfaction, therefore, to see that the law of Fasting Communion is being so widely observed and taught in the diocese of Maryland. The diocese is well named—the land of Mary—and ought, indeed, to show a good example of pious reverence to so great a Sacrament as the Body of Our Lord. One regrets the more that Dr. Paret should again put himself on record as an advocate of a custom which every saint and scholar of the Catholic Church, since the time of the Apostles, would have regarded with profound disgust. It is scarcely likely that, even in his own diocese, any instructed priest or layman will hesitate to accept the teaching of Bishop Augustine, or Bishop Jeremy Taylor, as to the practice of fasting before the Communion, rather than the untenable opinions of Dr. Paret. Reverence and learning are, unhappily, not always synonomous with the word bishop. And, surely, Dr. Paret has not yet reached the point of belief in his own infallibility, has he?

Some will remember that last year one person, not of the congregation, we believe, gave $250 for extra music expenses. It was spent for instruments at the greater festivals. This gift has not been renewed, but it has been thought well to have the instruments, and we rather hoped that there might be sufficient interest among those who appreciated, to give money to meet the expense. Many people in this city give much more than this for maintenance of opera or other music, just to keep up appearances, or maintain their place in the fashionable set. What a wonderful evidence of true Philadelphian spirit it would be to devote money for the proper worship of God in the beauty of holiness setting forth glory.

Choir Notes.

On Christmas morning the members of the choir presented Mr. Remont with a handsome, gold-mounted baton.

A friend presented the choir with a barrel of fine, large apples, and if the way they disappeared is any evidence, they were enjoyed. One gentleman was sorry his pockets had such a small capacity.

On Christmas morning Mr. Remont presented each member of the choir with a box of candy, but he wisely waited until the last note had been sung. No reflection on the candy is intended; quite the contrary, as it would have received entirely too much attention.

Answers to Questions.

Persons, out of respect to God's Temple, ought not to speak unnecessarily while in the church after service or in the corridor before service.

Our Blessed Lord is verily and indeed present under the forms of bread and wine after the words of consecration, and is to be adored. Talking, laughing and looking around, show lack of true and proper devotion; no one who realizes would do so.

If you meet a priest carrying the Blessed Sacrament, some mark of reverence ought to be shown to our Lord.

Women ought always, according to ancient rule, wear some head covering when receiving the Blessed Sacrament during illness, also any who may be present.

If you have to wait in choir it is more seemly to kneel.

After Communion, do not wipe your lips, but cleanse any particles by means of your tongue.

Men with moustaches ought to prevent, if possible, contact of them with the sacred species, and absorb any moisture by means of the lips.

The Sunday-school Fund, which some members of the congregation kindly sustain, together with the offerings of the Catechism and Infant School, pays all the expenses of this part of the work; the Christmas treats, the summer outing, the music at the 9.15 Mass and the catechism, together with incidental expenses.

The Bishop of the Diocese, of his gracious charity, ruled that the Feast of the Circumcision should not be observed as a day of abstinence. It is a comfort in these matters of uncertainty to be able to appeal to proper authority.

A bond of Consolidated Traction Company (par value $1,000.00) has been received for "Ransom Fund."

The "St. Clement's Stones" were described, with cuts taken from photographs, in one of the city papers since our last issue. Part of the stones have now found a place in our sanctuary.

An article in the Forum, recently, gave an interesting account of the entertainment plan of supporting the worship of Almighty God. The past year has been fertile in the growth of novel energy in this field of Christian activity. But is such a religion worth while? Is it worth keeping up?

The Benediction of the Altar in the Lady Chapel of the Church of the Holy Innocents, Hoboken, took place on Holy Innocents' Day. The Bishop of Newark officiated. Just a year ago the completed edifice was consecrated. It is hoped that the All Saints' Sisters may resume work in the Parish at Easter. Rev. G. E. Magill, and the other clergy associated in this work, are doing an important work for God and the Church.

The Little Directory of Worship.

Particular attention is called to this book of devotions, which has been compiled by one of our Clergy, and is soon to be published—perhaps in February. No doubt many will find it useful.

Guild of St. Lawrence Notes.

Not infrequently applicants for aid call at the Clergy House and say that they were sent by somebody—a member of the congregation, or a neighbor, or someone who had heard of the Guild's work, and the charitable disposition of the Clergy of the Parish. Every applicant is given a hearing as attentive as the circumstances permit, and where cases seem to be probably worthy they are investigated still further, especially if they reside within our quasi parish limits, and are assisted whenever it is possible. But it would be a help, if, in sending such people to us, the senders would make known their own names. It might in many cases shorten the labor of investigation, and it would always be gratifying to know who are so far interested in the Guild's purposes as to make it their almoner.

An "Employment Bulletin" has been started under the editorship of a committee of the Guild. The object is to make known the cases of persons who are out of work. Those who receive copies need feel no obligation to respond, unless they can directly or indirectly further the work of securing places for the unemployed. If any are in need of domestic service of any sort, sewing, dressmaking, house cleaning, window washing, gardening, coachman, furnace care-taker, general jobbing, etc., will aid the work by making wants known to Mrs. Freeman, 3275 Sansom street. Incompetent persons will not be recommended.

Peace With the Sword.

Father Ritchie has kindly permitted us to have the wonderful sermon he preached on St. Clement's Day printed. The work was done by the publishers of the MAGAZINE, and is a pleasing bit of workmanship. Many of the friends he made will be glad to possess, in this more permanent form, his kind and loving words.

The screen suggests how desirable it would be to have a permanent oak screen extending all the way across the church, with a spacious loft in which musicians could be placed at festival times, together with a dignified rood. The sanctuary also needs decoration; mosaics would be preferable, but some scheme of tiles might answer. We realize these things must wait the generosity of some wealthy lover of God and religion.

Experiments to soften or absorb the southern light are being made—so far without any apparent success. The glare is so very great something must be done, but not in a hurry.

If you want to read a reliable church history, get "History of the Church of England," by H. O. Wakeman.

"Church Historical Society Lectures," vol. I., are valuable on the Roman question, of course not if appeal to history is treason to the Church, as a certain dignitary was said to hold. "Petrine claims" are different from Catholic doctrine.

Eleven hundred and five communions were made during the month beginning St. Clement's Day and ending December 26th.

Parish Notes.

Our thanks are due to the police officers for their prompt and successful efforts in stopping the breaking of the windows. It is very unfortunate when small boys think that such mischief is a merit in religion; they may not be taught to break Church windows, they surely can be taught it is wrong to do so.

The executor, on December 15th, sent a check for the amount of Miss Hannah Smith's legacy to the Church. The further legacy of $100 has not been paid.

The Tuesday night instructions for men did not seem to meet any need.

The Sunday Bible class, at 4 P.M., was not interesting enough to attract many people. The subject was "Acts."

A men's Bible class meets in vestry each Sunday at 3 P. M.

The December number of the Parish Magazine, of the Church of the Annunciation, contained a kindly reference to our Parish. Several other papers have quoted some of our magazine articles.

A mission is to be preached at St. Mark's Church, by Rev. Arthur Cocks, vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Brighton, England. It is to begin on January 31st.

The Altar Guild are working hard to get the new dossal ready for Epiphany. There is enough work on hand to keep them busy all the winter.

The Sunday night congregations have been very large during Advent. The Mission Service, with its familiar hymns, is a decided inducement. The sermons have been on the Bible.

Notes.

The Choir Boys' Recreation Club reopened early in November with thirty boys on the roll, and an attendance of twenty-two boys on the first evening. Since then three boys have left the choir, but more than twice that number of new boys have been taken in, so that the club is larger than ever before.

Fine picture books, made in the Choir Club during Lent, were sent to the Children's Hospital, in the early summer, and received with grateful thanks.

The Choir Club wish to thank their kind, unknown friends who subscribed to the magazines which have given them so much pleasure for months past. They have been thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated.

Work of the Choir.

Mozart's Seventh Mass, as sung with orchestral accompaniment, on the first Sunday after Christmas, was a fitting climax to the perseverance of our choir, and the zeal and labor of the choirmaster.

Mr. Remi Remont is a young man whose life has not been devoted to the study of music; but aside from his duties as choirmaster he is engaged in business the same as are ordinary mortals.

When he assumed the direction of the choir, about three or four years ago, there were in it not more than six or seven boys and about as many men. Then, such simple, easy Masses as Woodward's had to be sung, and it was a very difficult matter to attain anything near perfection even in those. Very small and inadequate appropriations, discipline unknown, and a half-hearted let-it-take-care-of-itself sort of a feeling on the part of the congregation, were obstacles which a person of less indomitable will would have been unable to surmount.

The appropriations even now are far from sufficient to meet all requirements, and it is therefore very uphill work to sing in a creditable manner, such Masses as Mozart's and Schubert's. The members of the congregation no doubt give their sympathy to the choir and all concerned in its success, but fine music cannot be sung unless something tangible is given with the sympathy.

MR. SMITH.

St. Vincent.

St. Vincent was a deacon of the Church in Spain, where he was martyred in A.D. 304. He was trained and ordained by Valerius, Bishop of Saragossa, a man of venerable piety, but who labored under an impediment of speech. When the governor of Spain, in accordance with the edict of the Emperor Diocletian, laid hands on all the Christian clergy and brought Valerius and his deacons before him for examination, Vincent, on behalf of his bishop, made an eloquent and courageous defence of the Christian Faith. Hunger and attempts at bribery failed to induce them to worship the imperial gods, so the bishop was exiled and Vincent was taken to prison, whence he was to pass painfully but speedily to his crown of martyrdom. His body was stretched upon a machine called the rack, and torn with iron hooks, but nothing could shake his resolution or calmness. He was taken to "The Question," which was an iron frame with bars running across it sharp as scythes. Beneath a fire was kindled, which made the whole frame red-hot. The martyr walked on this with willing step, and, as he lay bound on this bed of torture, his eyes were fixed on heaven, his lips moved in prayer, and a smile, at times, flitted over his face. Cruelty could do nothing. The love of Christ conquered. There is one thing which no power can thwart—the desire to be a saint. Taken back to prison, he was thrown in a dark dungeon, strewed with broken pottery, to tear his already wounded body. But God was mindful of his servant, and sent angels to comfort him, so that the keeper saw the cell illumined, and heard voices chanting hymns of heaven, Convinced, at last, that nothing could daunt Vincent's constancy, the governor ceased to persecute, and gave him a soft bed on which to lie, and upon this he was no sooner laid than he yielded up his soul to God, January 22d, 304. His body was cast into a field, whence it was taken to the sea, into which it was thrown. Afterward it drifted ashore and was deposited, finally, in a church in Valencia. The faith St. Vincent died for is the faith we teach.

The Scripture League.

A Scripture League has been formed among the children of the catechism. Each one who joins is presented with a copy of the Gospel of St. Luke, and signs his or her name to a paper on which is written a promise to read at least one verse of Scripture every day for a certain definite number of weeks. So, we may hope that the younger members of the Parish may daily read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest some of that wondrous Book which has been the inspiration of the Saints of God's Church, and which, to-day, is much talked about, but, alas! little read. Any one can join the League who so desires.

An Open Letter.

PHILA., Saturday, Dec. 12, 1896.

Editor ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE:

Dear Sir:—Deeply interested in all that concerns the progress and welfare of our choir—working in it, with it and for it as an active member of a number of years' standing; hearing the remarks of the boys and mingling in the conversation of the men; possessing the confidence of the organist; familiar with the ideas of the choirmaster—it is, perhaps, not surprising that I crave your editorial indulgence for the purpose of placing before our people, through your columns, a few facts which, it seems to me, merit the careful consideration of each parishioner whenever circumstances chance to bring the choir prominently to his notice.

There is in the choir a restless spirit of ambition and an anxious determination to excel which might not, perhaps, be suspected by those familiar only with the unvarying placidity of our Sunday countenances. But appearances are proverbially deceptive, and our countenances—being trained, like our voices, to churchly effects, and not permitted any unseemly violation of ecclesiastical decorum—afford small and unreliable clue to the thoughts and feelings secreted in the depths of those immaculate vestments.

Possessed of this progressive spirit, it would be very discouraging to us to contemplate the present condition of the choir abstractly; to compare it with what we desire and covet, and then to realize the great distance and comparative unattainableness of that for which we work and strive. Therefore, we must remember that this abstract method is an unfair and unphilosophical one, and that the true and proper method is to study the possibilities of the choir in the light of its past. We must strive to read its future "retrospectively," if we may so put it. Viewing the situation thus, we find the prospect not only far from discouraging, but actually cheering and inspiriting. Three years ago we had upon the rolls—exclusive of choirmaster, organist and librarian—seven men and fifteen boys; many of the latter, by the way, anything but desirable acquisitions. To-day we have fifteen men and twenty-two boys, with not a single voice among them that can be termed useless. At the former time we were compelled by our limited capabilities to restrict ourselves entirely to the plainest music; singing, for instance, on Christmas, 1893, Woodward's simple Eb Service in unison—a composition that would scarcely tax the resources of the most uncultivated provincial choir. Now, none of the great festivals of the year are celebrated without the rendition of an elaborate work by one of the masters of Mass composition.

This encouraging retrospective view of the matter has been quite a factor in preserving in the choir the spirit which alone has rendered our progress possible. And, inversely, this progress and improvement tend to foster and increase the very spirit that creates them. The principle is illustrated in the automatic clock which, once started, is wound and kept running by the very motion that makes winding necessary. This vigorous spirit of ambitious progressiveness has supported us through many trials, through many disappointments and humiliations, and has enabled us to surmount difficulties which, at times, seemed well-nigh insurmountable; it has carried us triumphantly through periods of doubt and uncertainty and has placed us at last on a firm foundation upon which we can soon begin to build a superstructure of fairer proportions, of finer quality, of more pretentious appearance. And yet, through the very results we have accomplished by conscientious, unremitting labor and rigid fidelity, we are now subjected to an injustice that is really the primary cause of this communication to the MAGAZINE. The character of the work we have done has brought us, in the minds of parishioners and visitors, into active competition with many other choirs; and, as St. Clement's always occupied in the past a leading position among church choirs, it is but natural that the best trained, best equipped and most prominent choirs of the city should be selected by our own people and by strangers for purposes of comparison with ours. It is at this point that the injustice referred to arises; for the choirs with which we are most frequently compared are organizations belonging to wealthy parishes that lavish upon their music large sums of money, amounting to from three to six thousand dollars annually. Choirs that have such amounts at their disposal are, of course, in a position to secure the choicest material, engage the best talent, carry a large corps of singers, and thus obtain the most effective results in the least time. Whilst we desire no odds granted us, whilst we are perfectly willing to have our work rest purely upon its own merit or demerit, whilst I wish to make no apology for our choir, yet I do think that we should not be compared unqualifiedly with choirs so vastly our superiors in equipment and resource—pecuniary and otherwise. I consider somewhat unjust, for instance (even though they are usually in our favor), the frequent and unqualified comparisons of our choir with a close neighbor whose annual allowance, so far as I can learn, is about $6,000, and the personal salary of whose choirmaster, I am credibly informed, is at least equal to—and possibly exceeds by several hundred dollars—our entire appropriation!

It seems to me that consideration and regard for our excellent corps of choirmen, who understand and appreciate the condition and the burdens of the Parish, who have volunteered their services and attended in fair weather and foul, hot and cold; who have put their shoulders to the wheel with a will and stood faithfully by us through periods of hope and times of discouragement; who have been the bulwark and backbone of our choir; who remain steadfastly upon our rolls, without inducement of any kind, when they would gladly be received into more successful, more prosperous, more fully equipped and provisioned choirs where many attractions are held out—it seems to me, I say, that mere justice to these men requires that our people should endeavor, when comparing our choir with others, to recall a few of the facts I have mentioned and apply them (as the case may be) in extenuation of our shortcomings or in swelling the credit of our achievements.

After what I have said in recognition and praise of the work, conduct and fidelity of our volunteers, it seems to me proper and becoming to state that I myself am one of the few paid men of the choir. But facts are facts; and exclusion from the volunteer corps does not in the least prevent me from appreciating and freely admitting the importance and value of that body of singers, to whom I have always felt that some statement of this kind was imperatively due.

Offering, therefore, Mr. Editor, nothing more than the equity of the subject as an apology for consuming so much of your valuable space, I remain, sir,

Very respectfully yours,
A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

The Real Presence.

Some people behave at Mass as though they had no idea of the Real Presence.

At the Consecration, the bread and wine are truly and really made the Body and Blood of Christ. St. Paul says: "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come."

Speaking of the Priest who officiates at the Mass, St. John Chysostom says: "And whenever he invokes the Holy Spirit and offers the most dread sacrifice, and constantly handles the common Lord of all, tell me what rank shall we give him? At such a time angels stand by the priest; and the whole sanctuary and the space round about the altar is filled with the powers of heaven, in honor of Him who lieth there on the altar."

At no time is talking in church and looking about irreverently, so out of place as at the Mass. No person who had any idea of the doctrine of the Real Presence could possibly behave so.

Courtesy.

"Be courteous," said St. Paul. Courtesy is the mark of the true Christian. The true Christian belongs to the court of the Great King. It is his privilege to reflect upon earth the perfect manners, the elaborate politeness of the city of God.

The courtesy of the Christian is not confined to the Ritual of the church services, where the "good manners" of heaven are pictured in our conduct of devotions, but Christian courtesy should be seen in every relationship in life. Our Lord turned water into wine to cover up the embarrassment of a wedding party.

Sourness, harshness, glumness, rudeness, a lack of sympathy, a lack of considerateness, vulgarity, unresponsiveness, unkindness—these things should never obscure the joyful sunlight of the Christian soul.

The most refined and elegant manners in the world are none too good for the most obscure member of the family of God.

Burying the Poor Who Die in the Almshouse.

The annual report of the Mortuary Guild of St. Vincent is about to be published, setting forth the worthy work and present needs of the Guild. To bury the dead is one of the corporal works of mercy, and it is the aim of this organization to take care of all Church people who die in the Almshouse, providing a reverent funeral service, a proper interment, and a remembrance of each soul at the Holy Eucharist. Without the help the Guild supplies, the best that can happen to these unfortunate people is a hurried interment in the potter's field; but the ordinary end for them is the dissecting-table. Persons who take no interest in the burial of God's poor are like those who have no interest in saying prayers for the departed—they deserve like treatment when they have passed away. We hope that all former subscribers to this work—and many who have not yet given their support—will extend now any financial aid possible; for, during the past year, the income for the work has not equaled the expenses, and in the coming twelve months the work will be more extended in its field than ever before.

Altar Guild.

The members of the Altar Guild are very busy with work to be sent to various parts of the country. The stole and maniples for our black set are finished. The red burse and veil which were promised for the Church House; the orphreys for the cope, and the new dorsal are almost finished. Apparently, members of the congregation either do not know, or they have forgotten, that vestments for the parish are always needed. Donations, large or small, will be very acceptable.

The congregation should realize the missionary nature of the work of the Altar Guild. Thousands of dollars' worth of work has been done and given to parishes and missions in many parts of the country. This is just as important, to say the least, as preparing boxes of cast-off clothing, much of which is unsuitable, or new garments that are not useful when they arrive at their destination. It does not appeal to the imagination or create an unhealthy and unreal sentiment, but is for the honor of God and the glory of His worship. We ask St. Clement's people to support struggling missions in this way, leaving to other parishes what they are most interested in doing. A true priest much prefers to have proper furnishing for the altar than personal luxuries or even comforts. It is well to encourage and help such as we are able. Earthly knowledge does not always lead to heavenly wisdom. The Church exists to teach men about God and bring them to baptism and penitence, and so build them up in the principles of a true Christian life. Whatever adds to the dignity of the Church and aids the worship of the people is true missionary effort, although it may not be acknowledged in the "spirit of missions." It is all the better for being unnoticed and unknown.

A Boys' Guild.

A new Boys' Guild is being organized for boys under sixteen. The Guild meets every Tuesday night in the Parish building. It has for its object the social and religious improvement of its members. George Clash has been elected President, and Adam Preston, Secretary.

The boys are anxious to learn the dumb bell and Indian club exercises, and have secured the promise of an instructor to teach them as soon as they can procure the instruments. Anybody having dumb bells or Indian clubs to contribute will be heartily thanked by the boys.

The club has about a dozen members.

Parish Notes.

A kind friend has given nine amethysts for use on vestments.

The choir men had a supper at the Clergy House on Tuesday, January 5th, and the evening was pleasantly spent in conversation, singing, etc.

Mr. Horace Sellers has completed his plans for heating the church by steam, and he is now obtaining estimates of the cost. It is probably too late to do the work this season.

Various experiments have been made to remedy the glare of light on the south windows. We hope some result may be reached soon.

The money received for children this year was $127.50; we missed the kind subscriptions of some who gave last year, in this and other ways.

A lecture, the first of a course, has been delivered before the Church Club of the Diocese. In other places the Church Club exists for building up men in our faith, but this was not the apparent purpose of the distinguished lecturer who inaugurated the course at the Church House. He had, as far as we could judge, not been retained on behalf of the Church.

The Clergy would be very thankful if parishoners would notify them in writing of changes of address; in cases of sickness, sending word when they desire to receive the sacraments. A little thought in these matters would save much unkind feeling as to neglect and many misunderstandings.

All credit is due to the Vestry of St. Peter's in electing as Rector a priest who believes in "the Divine Character of the Church, and the necessity of its Sacramental System." The Rev. Richard H. Nelson is a distinct gain to the Diocese, and a worthy successor of the brilliant and holy priests who have "tended" and "fed" the "sheep" and "lambs" of the flock of Jesus Christ, who rejoice in St. Peter as their Saintly Patron. The prayers of St. Clement's people are asked for his guidance.

St. Peter's was, we believe, the first parish in Philadelphia to have the daily offices said publicly; this and other devout customs were due to the teaching of Bishop Odenheimer. Many have learned first in its curious pews to love the Catholic Faith and to desire to live in the strength of sacramental grace.

Mission at St. Mark's begins on January 31st. An opportunity for many to learn about God; for others to renew their old zeal and earnestness.

A very interesting and devotional memoir of the Mother Foundress of St. Mary's Sisters has been published by Rev. Dr. Dix.

The Little Directory of Worship is soon to be published.

"Catholic Faith and Practice," by Rev. Dr. Mortimer, is a most complete and valuable book for the instruction of all; not the least important part is the last chaper on "The Rule of Life."

On Sunday morning, January 24th, the Right Reverend Thomas F. Gailor, S.T.D., Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee, said the eight o'clock Mass in the church, and preached at eleven o'clock.

The daily papers tell us that Bishop Paret, of Maryland, closed the Mission at Mount Calvary, Baltimore, a day before the time appointed, for no given reason. Evidently the "True Catholic" is not at the present time a recognized or tolerated person in this poor diocese.

Copies of St. Clement's Tract. No. 1, "Catholic Priests;" No. 2, "Catholic, not Roman;" "Peace with the Sword," a sermon by Rev. A. Ritchie, may be obtained from the Clergy.

Five hundred and thirty communions were made from December 27th to January 23d.

It is an old custom to bless candles on February 2d, and so it is called "Candlemas." Those desiring may leave candles, with names, by February 1st, and obtain them afterward.

A library of spiritual books is open on Saturday afternoons; books are always welcome that may be of use in this library.

Christmastide.

The Mothers' Christmas supper, on Wednesday, December 29th, was a very happy time. The gentlemen who carved the turkeys had a busy time and so did the ladies who tried to keep the plates supplied. Shadow pictures were given through the kind interest of some good friends. Mother Goose and her friends were much appreciated.

The infant children had their treat in the afternoon of Monday, December 28th, and they were given toys, dolls and candy. The little ones seemed quite satisfied. The children of the catechism had their entertainment in the evening, books, candy and a wonderful series of tricks made them happy.

The Guild of the Holy Child sang their office in Chapel, Saturday, January 2d; after the office they had ice-cream, cake, etc., in the school-room.

St. Mary's Guild had their Christmas office and entertainment on Monday, January 4th. Miss Wolfe, assisted by some friends, kindly arranged the entertainment.

Festival of the Guild of St. Vincent.

The 22d of January is St. Vincent's Day, and with it, every year, comes the Festival of the Acolyte's Guild. On Sunday, the 24th, at the 7 o'clock Eucharist, the Guild made a Corporate Communion. On Thursday evening the annual supper was held in the Clergy House, and the evening was most pleasantly spent by both clergy and acolytes. Several members were absent, unfortunately, but, notwithstanding, those who attended kept up the repute of the organization, in its ability to have a pleasant social time whenever opportunity offers. May every year find the Guild thoroughly one, thoroughly sociable and thoroughly earnest.

Guild of St. Lawrence.

Donations of clothing are urgently needed, especially underclothing for men, and men and children's shoes.

EMPLOYMENT.—Many poor men and women are out of work in this city. Not a few are entirely destitute and on the verge of starvation. Charitable societies, exercising every caution and using the results of long experience, are at their wits' end to supply the actual needs of those whom they find to be worthy. The truest charity is to give remunerative employment. All honor to those great establishments which are running with little profit, or even with considerable loss to the owners, for the sake of the men and women who would otherwise be without home and without food.

Our Guild is trying in a small way to do something toward making known the needs of the unemployed The following is a brief and incomplete summary:

MEN.—Gardeners or country work, care of horses, cart driver, clerk, jeweler, electrician, type-writer, stenographer, collections, jobbing, stone mason, experienced plumber, coachman or stable work, machinist, public or private waiter.

WOMEN.—Work by the day, washing, cleaning, scrubbing, machine sewing, dressmaker, housework, to go home nights; plain hand-sewing, light housework, office cleaner, chambermaid, matron or housekeeper in institution, companion.

BOY.—Office work.

The true Christian is always doing missionary work.

The time has not yet come for St. Clement's to settle back on its ancient history.

There are thousands of people yet unconverted to the Catholic faith. It is not an easy job, but you can, at least, try to convert some of these.

Some people need to begin by converting themselves first, though.

Every parishioner ought to be doing some missionary work.

Every member of St. Clement's Church should be a subscriber to ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE. We would rather have a hundred new subscribers than a present of $75.00. Subscription price is 50 cents a year.

Correspondence.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—Just a word for the purpose of thanking Mr. Plain Choirman, through you, for his full and clear statement in the last issue of the MAGAZINE. Being myself a musician, though in a very small and unpretentious way, I am, perhaps, more interested in the choir and its work than the majority of our parishioners, and give more thought than they to its difficulties and its conditions; yet I must frankly confess that I was totally ignorant of several things mentioned by Mr. Plain Choirman, and regarded the matter, consequently, in a manner very different from that set forth in his letter. I now unreservedly adopt his view of the situation, and think it only fair that I should thus publicly acknowledge my obligation to him for setting me right in a matter upon which my ideas, though honest, have certainly been heretofore somewhat at fault, as I have frequently been guilty of the very comparisons of which he so clearly explains the injustice.

Very truly yours,
AN OLD PARISHIONER.

Choir Gossip.

As many inquiries have been made about Mr. Hawkins, the young basso who, until recently, rendered the solo parts in our services, it might be well to state that he is away upon a lengthy and indefinite leave of absence for the purpose of vocal improvement and voice cultivation. He is studying carefully and systematically with a well-known singing master of this city who, however, will not permit his pupil to do any choir work for the present. We hope, though, that it will not be very long until Mr. Hawkins will again be with us. In his absence, all the solo work devolves upon Mr. Wentz. This gentleman is also a hard student. He has been studying for several years with Mr. Paul Kirchner, a well-known vocal teacher and prominent choirmaster, and has conscientiously met the heavy demands made upon him. This, however, is not surprising, as few men could be more faithful in the performance of their duties than is Mr. Wentz in the discharge of his choir obligations, and he stands in the front rank of our "reliables."

We regret to announce that Master Walter McMullen's voice has "broken" so completely that it has been absolutely necessary for him to stop all singing, until the "change" has been affected.

Walter possessed an excellent voice, held the position of second soprano soloist, was a good worker and very regular in his attendance. Such a boy we are, of course, more than sorry to lose; but this "breaking" of voices is one of the difficulties of boy-choir work that cannot be overcome, and must, therefore, be endured. However, in this strange and uncontrollable process, there is some consolation to be derived from the hope that Walter, and many other boys whom we lose in a similar manner, will, in a comparatively short period, return to the choir as bassos or tenors to strengthen and reinforce our corps of men.

While printing this report, it may not be amiss to give some details. The Mission House, 2036 Cherry street, has a mortgage of $4,600, and the interest is $230 a year. For this the Sisters are responsible, and it must be made up out of the poor fund. Repairs to the building must be made from time to time, and heat and light must be paid for. The Vestry pay the taxes only. It would be a decided gain if those interested in the mission work would give each year, and so avoid the need of the sale every two years. Perhaps some plan might be arranged.

A Rule for Lent.

It would be well if, before making a rule for Lent, each member of the Parish would realize that the benefit of Lenten observance is chiefly seen in the after-fruits of a Christian character and life, which have been made higher, and deeper and broader. For instance:

1. Make some definite rule about days and times of abstinence from flesh food. At least abstain on Wednesdays and Fridays, and eat only once on other days. This will cultivate a temper of obedience to the mind of the Catholic Church, and respect for tradition. It is a thing quite apart from whether one likes fish as well as meat or not.

2. Make some rule about more frequent attendance at services of the church, especially the mass, and try to so use the season that you won't desire to go back to your old practice—the love of Christ will constrain you to go on.

3. Especially make some rule about more frequent communion, and see that the remote and immediate preparations are correspondingly careful.

4. Make some rule about recollecting the presence of God during the day—perhaps a mid-day prayer, or a little time given definitely to meditation or the thought of God.

5. Make a rule to cultivate the acquaintance of two or three people at least, in a humbler state of life than your own. Don't merely condescend to them, but learn how to sympathize.

6. Make a rule about definite devotion to God the Holy Ghost. The Church needs this; you need it yourself.

7. Repeat the threefold vow of your baptism on your knees every day.

8. Make all these rules bear upon your Easter confession and communion; but remember, that your life is to be lived for God after Easter as during Lent.

The Moslems took Damascus in 634 A. D., and captured the great Cathedral of St. John. The rebuilding destroyed all the Christian features, except that which (above the south portal) preserves this prayer and prophecy. "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom, and Thy dominion endureth for all generations."

Learn to Meditate.

Many people think they cannot meditate, but it is generally because they do not try. It does require a definite effort, but not the same kind of effort that one reaches in study. The essence of it is the attitude in which we place our minds toward God, and some portion of His truth, and the benefit of it comes largely from this.

Here is an incident in our Lord's life, carefully recorded by the Holy Spirit. It must have a message for me; how shall I get it?

First, kneeling down, I will remember that I am God's child. I will tell Him how unworthy I am to have Him speak to me, yet that I believe in Him, hope in Him, and desire to love Him wholly. Then I will read once carefully what I have taken to meditate about. What it tells me is dim at best, but I will trust God to help me. I then say carefully the "Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire," and then I think again of the incident, and try to picture to my mind how things looked, what Jesus said and did, what the others replied, or how they took it.

Then most probably something will suggest itself—no, I must remember that God is speaking to me now—something as to how that scene represents a larger and universal truth, something in life to-day, in the church, in my home, my place of business, yes, even in the deep recesses of my own heart. One, two or three or more special points come out clearly. As the result of this, and while it goes on, my feelings are touched. I take sides for God and the right, and against evil. I call out, in my thoughts, to Christ, or to some one of His holy companions, words of sympathy and invocation; and almost without intending it, I am making a resolution that this day, at all events, I will do thus and thus, avoid this fault and practice this virtue. I think a moment further, realizing my weakness, and I ask God to help me in my good purpose. I rise from my knees, and perhaps five, ten or thirty minutes have been passed. I have made a meditation.

It is not so hard, really very simple. Try it yourself. Follow it up, even if there are some discouragements. In time it makes your Christian life fuller and deeper. Spiritual things will be more real; Heaven nearer the world and all its opportunities more sacred.

The Hegira.

The fashionable Lenten exodus to Atlantic City has begun. By a strange inconsistency "Society" judges it to be bad taste openly to violate Lenten conventionalities in the city, but in order not to be bored by city life without balls, theatres and gay amusements, "Society" betakes itself to the sea-shore for six purple weeks. The care of health is always an easily obtained excuse in modern life, and Lent makes just a convenient rest after the winter's dissipations.

From now on, therefore, Atlantic City will be filled with females eager to be in the fashion. The boardwalk will be spinkled with women wrapped in furs and emasculated young men in golf suits. At the hotels a crowd of over-dressed people, bursting with health, will sit for an hour with eyes glued upon the door of the dining-room, waiting for the opportunities of gluttoning to begin. There are other deadly sins at Atlantic City, but gluttony and sloth lead during lent.

Dives in purple and fine linen faring sumptuously every day, is only a type of an innumerable throng of those whose god is their belly and whose end is destruction. "In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." St. Luke, xvi.

Renewal of Pledges.

Lady Day (March 25th) is the beginning of the financial year of the Parish, it finds us in a thoroughly healthy condition, no bills to be paid; this has not been accomplished without care and caution on the part of those who have had the responsibility. One hundred and fifty members of the congregation use envelopes, are there not other attendants at the services and sacraments who could afford to give in a regular way? All are welcome. To each one of us belongs the responsibility of deciding whether we are doing our duty in this respect, the duty would seem to be one-tenth of income for religion and charity. Many give more than this, others give very much less. To grow in grace and the knowledge of God we must endeavor to fulfil all God's will, not only fasting and prayer but also alms giving; this to be of benefit must be regular and bear an exact relation to our ability. A cheerful giver is not one who gives what he never misses, but one who lays apart conscientiously as God is blessing him. Packages of envelopes will be sent to all who made use of them last year, at least as many more might contribute, will they send their names? The same measure of faithfulness and generosity on the part of these would add much to our income. There are very few delinquents on our present list, it is to those who give that we are indebted for the payment of expenses. The spiritual life of some is hindered because they fail to give. Some might be able to give each month; to any such, envelopes would gladly be sent.

Parish Notes.

The attendance at the Tuesday afternoon Bible class is very small.

The latest experiment for preventing the glare of the sun through the south windows of the church seems to be successful—green cathedral glass with an enamel burned in placed over the windows.

The mission of St. Mark's was a blessed opportunity for many people, many miracles of grace were accomplished. We hope it may be possible to arrange a mission at St. Clement's; it was partly decided on for last November but the plan had to be given up.

A new book by Fr. Maturin on the "Parables," is announced by Longmans, to be ready early in Lent. It will be useful for many during Lent.

A number of books, very useful for the work, have been given by Mrs. Cope.

A "non-parishoner" is a generous contributor to a burial fund for our poor.

Incense was introduced at St. Mark's at the Thanksgiving mass, closing the mission.

Several church papers, parochial and others, have referred to and quoted some of our articles. As many know, we have not a sufficient number of subscribers to pay expenses, therefore a deficit has to be met each year and paid. Sometimes this has been done by means of an entertainment, but the expenses of an entertainment are high, and for that reason the plan is not satisfactory. This year we are again in debt, and a report of the receipts and expenditures, from Feb. 1st, 1894, to Feb. 1st, 1897, will be published in the April MAGAZINE. As we have no guarantee fund the money must come from another source.

We hope after Easter to publish another tract in our series. An old friend of St. Clement's has promised to write it for us.

Order copies of Fr. Maturin's new book at the Mission House, 2034 Cherry street.

One promise toward the payment of the interest on the mortgage of 2036 Cherry street has been received, this house is used for various parts of the Parish work. For years the burden of the maintenance has fallen on the Clergy and Sisters, with occasional assistance from a few friends. The various calls on the Clergy and Sisters in connection with the carrying on of our work, amount to several hundred dollars a year. We are told that in times past money used to be given to the rector to meet these demands; each year the needs grow and the amount given decreases, the kindness being confined to three or four individuals. We are very grateful to the parishioner who values the work of the Clergy and Sisters sufficiently to offer to share the expense.

Certain members of the S.S.J.E. and of All Saint's Sisters are ministering and nursing victims of the plague in India. Pray for them.

Five hundred and eighteen communions made from January 24th to February 21st.

Priestly Absolution.

It is to be hoped that many confessions were made at the mission recently held in this city. In a practical way that is the immediate object of a mission—to call on people to repent.

It seems strange, at this late day, to see objections raised against the teaching of confession and absolution. It is so clearly the doctrine of the Church, and the teaching of Holy Scripture, that any one opposing it must realize that he opposes the will of God. Moreover, wherever any real spiritual work is being done, and wherever there is any true pastoral relationship between priest and people, confession is recognized as a practical necessity.

We are the more surprised to see that a well-known church paper manifested a disposition to quibble over the subject. But some church papers, apparently, do not exist for the purpose of advancing the highest interests of the kingdom of God.

Christ himself gave the apostles power and commandment to remit sins. "Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whose soever sins ye remit they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain they are retained." The Prayer-book teaches that this power and commandment have been given also to the priests of the Church.

The form of absolution, and the manner in which confession was made, have differed in different ages of the Church; but there is no doubt of the historical fact that the detailed confession to a priest of sins committed after baptism, has been customary in God's Church always. Even Origen speaks of the sinner "who blushes not to confess his sin to the priest of the Lord, and to seek a remedy for the ills of his soul."

In the case of John the Baptist (St. Matthew, iii:6), and in that of the apostles (Acts, xix:18), it is seen how inevitably the detailed confession of sins follows a true conversion. It is a spiritual law. The evidence of sincerity and real penitence is confession. And there is no greater proof of the love of God than the provision He has made by which penitent sinners may confess their sins to the priests of the Church, and receive in turn the medicinal healing touch of the accredited physicians of the soul.

Retreats.

The parochial retreat, as usual, on Ash Wednesday.

The retreat for the outer Sisters of all Saints will be held at the mission house, beginning March 9th and ending on the 13th.

Father Benson expects to give the retreat for Holy Cross Guild on Sunday, March 14th, at the mission house.

St. Vincent's Guild will have their retreat on Passion Sunday.

The men's retreat will probably be given on Palm Sunday.

The mothers' retreat will be held in Passion tide.

Some Interesting Facts.

Queen Elizabeth's chapel contained an altar on which stood "a silver crucifix, with images of the Blessed Virgin and St. John, and gift candlesticks, lighted during the service. The chapel was served by a surpliced choir and priests in copes; the service was sung, not only with the sound of organs, but of cornets, sackbuts, etc., on solemn festivals." (See Bright's essay on "The English Church in the Reign of Elizabeth.")

Bishop Andrews, in the reign of James V., "was accustomed to use copes and lights and incense, and the mixed chalice and wafer bread at the celebration of the Holy Eucharist, and an altar duly furnished with different colored altar-cloths, besides linen and silk veils for the chalice." (See Wakeman's "History of the Church of England.")

Sir Walter Raleigh made his confession to a priest of the Church of England and received the Blessed Sacrament on the morning of the day on which he was beheaded. (See Stanley's "Memorials of Westminster Abbey.")

Archbishop Laud was the confessor of the Duke of Buckingham, the favorite of Charles I, and "developed in his giddy nature whatever seriousness and purpose he had acquired."

After the Restoration, "copes were worn, the candles lighted and incense swung at the celebration of the Holy Eucharist" in some places, e. g., Durham Cathedral. And people went to confession regularly and naturally. "It would be interesting to know when and why this habit of going to confession dropped into desuetude. Before the Restoration, as well as after, the habitual use of confession seems to have been usual among those who were trying to lead religious lives. Jeremy Taylor, we know, acted as confessor to Evelyn, Bishop Gunning to Mrs. Godolphin, Bishop Morley to the Duchess of York, and Archbishop Sharp to Queen Anne." (See "Wakeman's History," p. 407.)

Broad Churchism.

It is said that the so-called broad-church party in Massachusetts is breaking up on account of internal dissentions. That is not surprising. The broach-churchman, like the Unitarians, have no definite standard of truth. Each one believes (or rather disbelieves) as he pleases, consequently they cannot long be united.

The so-called low church party which existed formerly in Philadelphia and Virginia, and which is now passing away, merited, if not admiration, at least respectful pity. The low church party tried to be honest. It took its peculiar position because it believed that was the teaching of the Prayer-Book. It did not know any better. It had never had any real training in church history, theology or Catholic faith and practice. And so one could merely feel sorry for it and wait for it to read books.

But the broad church party merits only contempt. It is patently dishonest. It does not even pretend that it believes that what it teaches is the teaching of the church. The broad-church priest takes ordination vows of the most solemn character, and then deliberately proceeds to break them on the expressed ground that they were made in old times when the church did not know as much as she does now. At this ordination he signs a paper, stating that he believes "the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the word of God," and then he reads a lecture before some church club or other, denying the authenticity and veracity of half the books in the Bible. He says the Creed and uses the Prayer-Book in the church, and then gets up in the pulpit and tries to explain away the doctrines he has just professed. If the broad-churchman were honest he would withdraw from the ministry he profanes and seek his living elsewhere.

The Missioners in Maryland.

The two priests from England, who have recently held so successful a mission at St. Mark's, Philadelphia, held a mission also at Baltimore. It was said to have been a great success in all respects, especially in regard to the large number of first confessions heard.

Not the least proof of the success of the Baltimore mission, however, was the fact that Bishop Paret was so disturbed by the teaching of the mission priests that he abruptly closed the mission before the appointed time. The mission priests were true Catholic gentlemen. Bishop Paret's character is well known.

Our Mission Work.

During the last summer the mission work of the Parish was systematized, and when the return of the greater number of the visitors made it possible, the new plan was put in operation under the auspices of the Guild of St. Lawrence.

The following is a list of the Wards, their boundaries and their visitors. A distinction is made between Wards in which it is intended to work aggressively, and those where the aim is simply to look after our own, not, however, discouraging those who have the desire and energy to be connected with St. Clement's, even though they may live at a considerable distance:

Church History.

It is of supreme value to read Church history. "The History of the Church of England," by Wakeman, published by the Macmillan Company, cannot be too strongly or too frequently recommended. It reads like a novel, and makes even the darkest and dullest periods entertaining. Once well started, the book can scarcely be dropped without reading to the last page.

If more churchmen read the history of the church, there would be no difficulty about the progress of the Catholic movement. The miserable narrow Puritanism which now chills the life of the American Church, would soon give way to an enthusiasm for the devotion and spiritual beauty of earlier ideals. The lies of unbelievers have robbed the church of many Catholic practices, of a wealth of artistic beauty of valuable and desirable features in religion.

Mothers should remember that most of the history books used in American schools are written by unbelievers or by Protestants prejudiced against the Catholic faith. These books are full of poisonous lies and misrepresentations. The church is nearly always caricatured in them. Nearly every history used in the public schools is especially unjust in its account of the Church of England. You could not do better than to get your child really interested in the true history of the church, both to preserve faith and to develop intelligence.

Guild of St. Lawrence Notes.

Acknowledgment is made in another place for the contributions to the work of the Guild since the last issue of the MAGAZINE. During the month the applicants for aid have been very numerous, and the number of cases whose circumstances are well known to us, living in our own vicinity, has proportionally increased. This has been because of no easy and careless giving on the part of the Guild. Many deserving persons have to meet with refusal, or can be helped by only an insufficient minimum, simply because the Executive Committee must discriminate in favor of those who are nearer at our doors. The amount of hardship and suffering among the poor is extraordinary.

Small photographs of objects suitable for Easter cards and greetings may be had from Miss Heylin; proceeds for the Guild's work.

The Clothing Committee are glad to get gifts of garments for men, women and children. They are in the Sunday-school room on Monday afternoons at 4 o'clock to sell any clothing which may be on hand.

The Employment Committee would be glad of the opportunity to serve both workers and employers. Address Mrs. Freeman, 3275 Sansom Street.

Incense at Mass.

It is a satisfaction to learn that another church in this city has begun to use incense at mass. The madness of those unhappy people, who profess to dislike incense at mass, can be explained only as a delusion of the devil.

A little girl recently told her irreligious father that she had been to a church where they had incense at mass, and, upon his scoffing at the idea, she looked up at him with great, wondering eyes, and said, "Don't you like incense, papa? God likes incense."

Of course God likes incense. Read Revelation viii: 3, 4. The fact is, that the secret of the objection of those people, who profess not to like churches where incense is used, is contained in the words of a certain unbeliever who, after going to a Catholic mass, was heard to say: "I don't care to go to that church again. The service was too much like heaven. If I went there much I should certainly be converted."

Incense is an honor offered to God and to the divine nature of Christ, of which all Christians are partakers.

Our Next Mass.

The choir is, at present, at work upon the new mass—Weber's in Eb. This is a work of far greater difficulty than anything yet attempted, and is amply sufficient to discourage any but the most determined effort; yet the time in which to master it (the period between Christmas and Easter) is shorter than that in which we have ever previously learned a mass sufficiently well to produce it. Therefore it is doubtful whether it will be possible to sing Weber entire on Easter Day, but if hard work, determination and enthusiasm were of themselves capable of surmounting all difficulties and brushing aside all obstacles, there would be no question of the result.

The Archbishops Reply to the Pope.

The "Answer of the Archbishops of England to the Apostolic Letter of Pope Leo XIII on English Ordinations," is now published and may be obtained in pamphlet form from the Longmans, Green & Co.

The answer is addressed "To the whole body of Bishops of the Catholic Church." The pamphlet is forty-eight pages long and is printed both in English and in Latin. It bears the title "Give peace in our time, O Lord."

Never in the history of the past three hundred years has the cause of the English Church been presented so splendidly. The answer is complete. It is scholary; it is Catholic; it is magnificent.

The Archbishops say: "It has seemed good to us, the Archbishops and Primates of England, that this answer should be written in order that the truth on this matter might be made known both to our venerable brother, Pope Leo XIII, in whose name the letter from Rome was issued, and also to all other Bishops of the Christian Church settled throughout the world."

They proceed to show that the English Church has a valid sacrificing priesthood, teaches the eucharistic sacrifice and administers valid sacraments. They point out in detail the Pope's errors, and make it perfectly clear that it is the intention of our Church (and "not merely of a newly-formed party in it") to maintain the Holy Orders received by us from the apostles themselves, and that we have a valid ordinal.

This splendid document is one for which every churchman should devoutly thank God. This reply of the Archbishops will go down to history, as the Church Times says, under the title "The Encyclical Saepius Officio." The Anglican Church, speaking through its highest officers, has declared to the whole world that it is, and always has been, the true Catholic Church of the English-speaking people throughout the world, with Catholic doctrine, Catholic sacraments and a Catholic priesthood, and that the Pope himself has no truer claim to be the successor of the apostles than have the Anglican Bishops. Moreover, this declaration is made in no spirit of sophistry and vain controversy. It is a statement of plain fact, cold logic and undeniable evidence.

The Pope has been answered now authoritatively, completely and finally. The misrepresentations of those who have said that the Catholic religion was the property of a small party only in our Church must hereafter forever be abandoned.

[A manuscript has been received for publication, which will be returned to the writer upon receipt of name and address.—EDITOR.]

Retrogressive Journalism.

In connection with the recent brutal exhibition at Carson City, the course of the Philadelphia newspapers, with but one notable exception, the Public Ledger, is a lasting disgrace to them and an indelible blot on our City's fair name.

That there was such an interest manifested in the happenings at Carson City, the newspapers are almost entirely to blame. Each paper seemed to be doing its utmost to bid for circulation by printing the fullest and most disgusting details.

The way to elevate the moral tone of a community is not by pandering to the lowest tastes of its most depraved members.

Guild of St. Lawrence Notes.

The Employment Committee of the Guild wish to make a special appeal for money and for materials which may be made up in garments. Through the kind coöperation of the Dorcas Society, work has been given to a considerable number of women for several weeks past. But, while this method of relief ought to commend itself to those who have in mind the needs of the poor, the Guild finds it a twofold drain upon its funds—for goods and for the pay of workers. The products of the work are easily disposed of, either by sale at low prices, or in some cases by free donation.

The income from the sale of canceled stamps is not what it used to be. Some few of the zealous collectors still persevere, and the Guild is very thankful. But if more would join the ranks, we should see how "every little counts."

Again the Clothing Committee reports that the men's side of the wardrobe contains only one straw hat, one necktie and one shoe—or a report about as discouraging. And the other closets are not much better filled. Have all possible donations been sent in? Remember how thankful some poor man, woman or child would be to get the garment which you think has passed the period of usefulness.

Wm. Halsey Wood.

On Wednesday, March 17, Mr. Wm. Halsey Wood, the well-known church architect, was buried. Vespers of the Dead were said on the arrival of the body the evening before, a watch being kept during the night; at 7 in the morning a Requiem was said by the Rev. J. S. Miller, Rector of the House of Prayer, Newark; at 7 30 a Requiem, the family being present, was said by the Rev. A. L. Wood, a brother; at 11 a Solemn Requiem was sung, Father Field being celebrant, Dr. Mortimer, Deacon, and Rev. G. H. Moffett, Sub-Deacon. The interment was at St. James the Less.

Mr. Wood was an architect of distinguished ability and particular genius, his plans for the New York Cathedral were considered by many judges the most satisfactory of all those prepared. He had drawn the plans for many churches in New York City, special examples are the Redeemer, Zion and St. Timothy; St. Mark's, Jersey City; Buildings of the University Sewanee; St. Mary's, Kansas City, and many others are evidences of his devotion and zeal.

He had come to Philadelphia with the expectation of remaining here and identifying himself with St. Clements, but God had something better than an earthly city for him. On Saturday, March 13th, fortified by the sacrament of the Catholic Church, he surrendered his life to God who gave it to him. May he rest in peace.

The Power of Prayer.

We read in the Acts of the Apostles that when St. Peter was in prison, prayer was made, without ceasing, by the Church unto God for him; and in response to the prayer the angel of the Lord struck the chains from St. Peter's hands and opened the door of the prison and led St. Peter forth from the prison and restored him to his friends.

The power of prayer is absolutely unlimited, and we should not forget that there are many souls in prisons of all sorts for whom we should pray. Not only are their souls in literal prisons "all prisoners and captives," but there are souls in the prisons of sin, and folly, and vice. All in misfortune and suffering may be considered as prisoners for whom we should pray. The souls in purgatory also should not be forgotten in our prayers.

"I am so fast in prison that I cannot get out," says the Psalmist, speaking for such souls. They cannot get out by their own efforts; therefore we should pray that God would break the iron bars and the gates of brass for them.

The Discerning of Spirits.

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." Thus speaks the Apostle John.

Man is in the midst of the great war between good and evil, the hosts of heaven and the powers of hell, God and Satan. The soul is constantly moved by diverse spirits; it is in reality the field of battle. Therefore, we should know how to receive the good and reject the evil.

Despair is always a suggestion from an evil spirit. Hope, always a ray of light from the good.

Calmness and patience are evidences of the presence of good spirits. Haste and over anxiety are apt to be the manifestations of evil.

Spiritual desolation or dryness is not always evil. It may be the method God is using to discipline our souls.

The evil spirit, however, sometimes transforms himself into an angel of light, and urges us to adopt some religious course or pious practice merely as a means of causing us to fall into the sin of pride. Soon the result appears in anguish of soul and trouble and lost serenity and light. All merely natural spiritual exaltation, therefore, must be carefully watched lest it be a snare.

"The Spiritual Exercises" of St. Ignatius contain some excellent suggestions for the discerning of spirits.

A Devotional Danger.

Man is not an angel, nor is he yet as he will be when the spirit is freed from the body at death. It follows, therefore, that he must recognize the conditions of this present life in flesh and blood, and the natural human relationships as well.

It does not happen often, perhaps, but sometimes very religious people let the mind dwell too long and too intensely on the great realties of the world to come. A consequence of this is, as has been pointed out, that the mind becomes overstrained, and weary, and dazed. Everything is seen out of proportion. One or two ideas are magnified beyond the others. Trouble of soul follows, and sometimes, in the effort to get relief from the strain, moral shipwreck ensues.

This condition of mind, in those who study and meditate much, should be carefully guarded against. The man who uses his brain a good deal in dealing with the realties even of this world, must have repose, amusement and physical exercise to keep in good condition. All morbid and melancholy thoughts should be put aside, and play and the kindlier human interests should take their place.

We shall be judged, according to Scripture, not by our ability to soar into the regions of spiritual speculations, nor even by our pious practices; but by our conduct in human relationships.

Parish Notes.

Pew rents are due April 1st.

The retreat for the mothers will be on the Thursday in Passiontide, April 8th.

All communicants are asked to fill out the Easter Communion cards with name and address.

Pledges of money are asked, as well as offerings, at Easter for the Ransom Fund, that all may be made up at the festival, "Be generous after thy power."

The envelopes were sent out at the beginning of the financial year of the Parish. We closed the last year with no deficit and bills all paid, so far as known.

The election of Vestrymen will be held on Easter Monday.

On Easter-day members of the congregation only will be admitted at the Cherry street door up to 10.20 o'clock, when all doors will be opened. Admission to the gallery only by ticket.

Prepare for Easter Communion by a confession during Holy Week; do not wait until Saturday.

Since Ash Wednesday the attendance has been very good at the week-day Masses, as well as at the other devotions and services.

The Stations are said in Church on Friday nights, and an increasing number of people have made them; the attendance is larger than last year.

The old custom of the blessing of ashes on the first day of Lent seemed to mark the meaning of the day and to be appreciated by many people.

Father Field gave the meditations at the parochial retreat on Ash Wednesday, and an address at night.

Father Benson was the conductor of the retreat for the outer Sisters of All Saints, which took place at the Mission House during the first week of Lent. He also was the conductor of the retreat for members of Holy Cross Guild on the second Sunday in Lent. The Chapel was entirely too small for the numbers who desired to avail themselves of these spiritual privileges. Father Benson preached in St. Clement's at eleven o'clock on Sunday, March 14th.

Father Page is still in India, detained by the serious nature of the plague. Members of the Society and of All Saint's Sisterhood are at work in the hospitals.

The Bishop of the Diocese approves of a relaxation of the strict fast on Good Friday. This permits all to take some food in the morning.

The new baldachino is rapidly nearing completion, we may expect to have it ready for Trinity-tide.

The black cope (the Parish memorial of Miss Hannah Smith) has been finished, with the exception of the hood, which will not be ready for some time. The cope is a very satisfactory piece of work, and it was entirely done by the Altar Guild. It was used for the first time on March 20th. The orphreys for the other black vestments are now being worked. The Altar Guild is very busy just at present.

The plans for heating the Church by steam have been completed and bids received. Work will not be begun until about July 1st.

New kneeling mats have been made for the Chapel, and some for the Church; also for choir stalls.

The heating of the Church by steam will permit all services to be held there; a side altar in the south aisle will assist this very much.

The part of the cellar under the apse would make a very good Chapel (mortuary), marble or stone altar. The floor and walls could be cemented to keep out dampness, and an entrance could be made from the building and the street.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed Friday evening, May 4th, as the date of his visitation. Names of those desiring to be prepared for confirmation should be given to one of the clergy or sisters as soon as possible.

The remaining legacy of Miss Hannah Smith (less inheritance tax), has been paid by the executors.

We beg to acknowledge a further donation of books, magazines, and other periodicals from Mrs. J. E. Cope.

Some new hymn books have been ordered for the Church, and we hope are now on their way. A number of new prayer books have been bought for the Chapel.

The offices of Holy Cross Guild and St. Saviour's Ward C. B. S. will not be said this month on account of the retreats.

Father Huntington's conferences at St. Mark's for men ought to attract a large number of Christian men who are interested in religion and look at the problems of life seriously.

The Order of the Holy Cross have accepted the charge of St. Andrew's Church, Baltimore. It is situated in a poor and run-down neighborhood. Your prayers are asked for them.

Seven hundred and nine Communions were made from February 21st to March 21st.

Retreat for St. Vincent's Guild on Passion Sunday; retreat for men on Palm Sunday; names of men desiring to take part in the exercises must be given to the clergy by Friday, April 9th.

Some Necessary Conditions.

Some people think that they are really very anxious to enjoy a state of great exaltation spiritually. Like the sons of Zebedee they desire to sit either on the right hand or on the left hand of Christ in His Glory. But they sometimes forget that in order to do so it is necessary also to drink of the chalice of suffering and to be baptized with the baptism of martyrdom. It was only after St. Paul had "fought a good fight" that the crown of righteousness was laid up for him. So people will find that it is not enough merely to talk much about religion, to prophesy in Christ's name, to cast out devils and do many wonderful works. People who have plenty of leisure at their disposal and who imagine that they are doing better in "cultivating their souls" all the time than by spending some of their spare hours for the sake of others, will find out their mistake at the Judgment Day, according to Matt. xxv, 31–46. If you are going to save your souls it will be necessary to do at least something in the line of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, harboring the stranger, visiting the sick and imprisoned, instructing the ignorant, and comforting the afflicted. True religion is no mere ornament.

Library Catalogues.

Catalogues of the Sunday-school Library may now be obtained from the Librarian, David Coles. The fact that a catalogue of the books has been issued need not deter anyone from contributing books to the library. A supplement to the catalogue can be added very easily. The library has afforded pleasure to a large number during the past winter.

Pray for the Cretans.

The Metropolitan (Greek Bishop) of Athens has telegraphed to the Archbishop of Canterbury the following:

"In the name of Jesus Christ raise your voice for the salvation and liberty of our Cretan brothers who are cruelly oppressed."

In reply the Archbishop telegraphed as follows:

"The Anglican Church prays earnestly to the Almighty that He may give the Cretans liberty, justice and peace."

The Catholic Religion.

Rev. Vernon Staley's book, "The Catholic Religion," has been sold to the extent of over a hundred thousand copies. The eighth edition has just appeared and contains several new notes and appendices of value. "The Catholic Religion" is a clear and simple statement of the faith we teach and believe. It is one of the best books to give to any who needs elementary instruction in the truths of the Church. It is published in cheap form as well as in cloth.

Foreign Notes.

The Bishop of London, England, administers the Sacrament of Confirmation vested in cope and wearing a mitre. He gives the benediction with crosier in hand.

"The Society of the Sacred Mission" is the name of a new religious order for priests in the Church of England. They labor in the foreign field. Father Kelly is the present superior. The Society's headquarters are at Mildenhall in Suffolk.

Giving to God.

It is very evident that those who give to God most love God most. But giving is both a result of loving God and a cause of the love of God. That is to say, you not only give to God because you love God, but you love God because you give to Him. Try it and see.

Some churches, who have more money than they know how to use, being composed chiefly of millionaires, are trying an experiment. They build mission chapels in the poorer quarters of large cities, and maintain the church services there. It is a noble idea. Unfortunately it succeeds in its aim indifferently. Very few people attend such services with any real devotion. Why? The answer is because people do not really respect a religion they can have for nothing. Investigate these subsidized chapels, and the low spiritual tone of them is easily perceived. The few people who attend them are attending not to give God anything, but to get what they can out of it.

Money is not the only thing God wants you to give him. He values true devotion even more highly.

The Value of It.

The clouds of opposition to the Catholic movement seem to be rapidly receding. But now and again some low rumble of the darkness of Protestant error makes itself heard. Lately there has been some expression again unfavorable to the practice of fasting communion. This, of course is a mere lazy grumble on the part of those who like bed and breakfast better than belief.

The propriety and sweet reasonableness of Catholic practices, like fasting communion, confession and masses for the dead, are so soon discerned by those who will make trial of them, that it is only a matter of time before all prejudice against them give way. The few who still oppose them, on what they think are conscientious grounds, ought to perceive that these things are not only a consolation and a joy to those who use them, but that they have an evidently valuable effect in reviving the spiritual life of the whole church.

The test of spiritual life may be fairly made on the number of people receiving the Holy Communion in a church. Now by that test compare a church where the Catholic practices mentioned are familiar with one of the same size where they are not. Remember also that in Catholic parishes Holy Communion means getting up and going to church before breakfast. There is no doubt of the result whatever. In the Catholic parish there are more communions made every week than are made in the other church in a whole month. Statistics prove it. We refrain from mentioning names.

One might make the test on a basis of almsgiving also, and the result would be no less certain. The Catholic parish would give in proportion to the number and means of its people, probably twice as much as the other. Or if one considered prayer, a church opened through the week, with frequent services and the blessing of the Real Presence on its altar, would surely seem to be more properly named a House of Prayer than a church whose doors are shut like tomb-lids six days out of seven, or where they have at best only an occasional matin or evensong said.

Catholic practices will stand the test of the practical value of themselves to those who use them.

The Mortal Sin.

Sometimes a young man or a young woman will go along for years in regular and devout attendance upon religious duties. Then comes a fall, suddenly, unexpectedly. Perhaps it is not very serious. Perhaps it is. The sin seems to burn into the soul and a great temptation seizes one. It is the temptation not to repent. Shame tempts one not to confess, although one knows very well that God will forgive. It is the trial of the soul.

St. Peter denied his Lord; but he repented. Judas sold his Lord; but he despaired and slew himself. Even Judas would have been forgiven if he could have repented.

Many souls are lost through a single unrepented grievous sin.

Charity.

Charity and love are words in the Bible which mean the same thing. Charity means love of God and love of our neighbor. St. Paul has a very wonderful chapter in one of his Epistles on charity. He says virtually that without charity we cannot enter heaven.

Charity, then, does not consist merely in giving alms to the poor or in zeal for religion. St. Paul says: "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, I am nothing."

Neither is charity a mere acquiescence in everything indifferently. "Charity rejoiceth in the truth," and is not inconsistent with correction. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." It is sometimes the highest charity to correct a naughty child or to rebuke the erring so long as it is done in love and for their good and with discretion.

Charity is a social virtue. Everything but the divine and human social relationship is to pass away. In heaven charity will last forever.

An Interesting Article.

The March number of the Nineteenth Century magazine contains an interesting article by Mr. George Russell, on the Mass. Mr. Russell has been carrying on a controversy for some time in defense of the continuity of the Anglican Church through the Reformation period. In this article he proves that the English Church retained in the Prayer-book the doctrine of the Sacrifice of the Mass. He quotes some writers, generally considered Protestant, in support of his statements. The article is brilliantly written.

A certain Mr. Round had previously written for the magazine an article trying to show that the Church of England had repudiated Catholic doctrines at the Reformation; but the folly of his position is made to appear by Mr. Russell's criticism.

Churchmen should be thankful for so able a champion of the Catholic religion.

The Archbishops' Encyclical.

The answer of the Archbishops of England to the Pope continue to attract attention and to excite admiration. In vain have Roman writers attempted to escape its learned statement of facts, and those who heretofore have tried to regard the Anglican Church as a merely Protestant sect, must now admit that the teaching of the Church herself, through her highest authority, condemns their opinion.

Not the least important part of the Archbishops' Encyclical is that which treats of the Eucharistic Sacrifice. On this point the Archbishops say, "We truly teach the doctrine of the Eucharistic Sacrifice, and do not believe it to be a 'nude commemoration of the Sacrifice of the Cross,' an opinion which seems to be attributed to us (in the Bull). But we think it sufficient in the liturgy which we use in celebrating the Holy Eucharist—while lifting up our hearts to the Lord, and when now consecrating the gifts already offered that they may become to us the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ—to signify the sacrifice in such terms as these."

The words "that they become to us the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ," are quoted in the Latin from the Roman Mass itself. Those who have regarded the sacrifice as a mere offering of bread and wine will see that the Archbishops here make the sacrifice consist in the consecration, which is the essence of the mass. The Archbishops very justly deprecate "too precise definitions of the manner of the sacrifice, or of the relation which unites the sacrifice of the Eternal Priest and the sacrifice of the Church, which in some way certainly are one." And they point out the passages in our service which describe the objects for which the sacrifices of the altar is offered.

It is to be hoped that every churchman will purchase and read this encyclical, which so ably sets forth the Church's doctrine of the priesthood and the Eucharist.

Parish Notes.

The retreat for St. Vincent's Guild took place Passion Sunday. Twenty-four made the retreat, including three who are not members of the Guild.

St. Mary's Guild retreat was made on Thursday in Passion Week, April 8th, the chapel was well filled at all the exercises, Rev. H. Ransom kindly gave the addresses.

The men's retreat took place on Palm Sunday, but it was not largely attended; several men came from other places to take advantage of it.

On Palm Sunday the blessing of the palms took place at 6.30 A. M., and those who were so minded received them at that time. At eleven o'clock the palms were distributed to those who were to take part in the procession. The choir was increased, and the "Messe des Orpheonistes" was sung in a very helpful and devotional manner. Solemn Mass was sung, the deacon and sub-deacon wearing folded chasubles. The church was crowded, and many strangers were present, some, not understanding our custom, left at the beginning of the sermon, disturbing those who remained.

The attendance at the Holy Week services was very good, particularly at the masses. There is much to be thankful for in this respect, as the number of our people who have availed themselves of this privilege during Lent has been the very best indication of a faithful use of the season, it shows the true and real spirit, other and less important things will surely come as a result of this.

The church was crowded on Good Friday for "The Passion," and there was a good attendance at the other services. One of our own clergy undertook the preaching of the Passion. Most of the people stayed until the end, but many men came and remained for only a short time.

Easter Day was indeed beautiful and inspiring; 490 communions were made at our altar; many parishioners received communion at churches nearer their homes, others received at the altar or at home during the octave. At the Solemn Mass many persons stood during the entire service. The choir sang, with orchestral accompaniment, the Kyrie, Creed and Gloria of Weber's Mass in Eb, and the Sanctus, Benedictus and Agnus Dei of Mozart's 7th Mass. The music was an evidence of the careful training that our choirmaster always gives. At night the church was again crowded.

Low Sunday the same music was sung, as on Easter Day.

The Bishop of the Diocese will make his annual visitation of the parish on the evening of Friday, May 14th, and give the sacrament of confirmation.

The Diocesan Convention will meet on Tuesday, May 4th, at St. Luke's Church.

Continued intercession will be kept up on the Rogation Days, and we hope that all parishioners may take a share in the intercession, either in the church or at home. The members of St. Vincent's Guild have always taken the night hours, but some men of the congregation, we think, might take time in church until midnight; last year there were persons in church until ten o'clock.

A small stone altar, after an example of the fourth century, designed by Mr. W. Halsey Wood for the oratory of his house in Newark, has been given to St. Clement's; we hope it may be put in place some time during the summer.

The plans, etc., for the steam-heating have been completed, and bids have been accepted. The work will be done during the summer.

One thousand three hundred and fifteen communions were made from March 21st to April 25th.

It was very satisfactory, the way in which so many people (454) filled out and sent in the Easter Communion cards. It very much helped the preparations beforehand; they will be of great use in making up the parish list. Many of our people in other places also reported at Easter; they think it worth while still to be identified with St. Clement's. Every one who did not send in a card is asked to do so as soon as possible.

The Order of the Holy Cross have not yet taken charge of St. Andrew's, Baltimore. The Bishop of Maryland evidently requires a great deal of time to think it over.

The usual amount of work on the part of some members of the congregation was done during Lent, and getting ready for Easter. Most of our people take all this as a matter of course; the work gets done without any effort or worry on their part, and their only interest seems to be to complain if the result, or any failure or mistake inconveniences them.

Sometime during May, the choir of the Church of the Epiphany will sing Gaul's Holy City in St. Clement's Church. Permission was asked and given to Epiphany's choir-master. The proceeds of the collection will be for the Seashore Home, which is under the care of the All Saints' Sisters.

The church garden plainly shows the results of the care and attention bestowed upon it by kind friends.

The new hymn-books have been placed in the church pews. Hymn-books, by forgetfulness, are often taken away from church, and by forgetfulness they often remain away.

Dr. Patton's Remarks.

The Rev. Dr. Patton, President of Princeton University, in an address delivered before the Presbyterian Ministers' Association, is reported to have said, "As a result of the Reformation, Christendom may be divided into two heads, each distinct and diametrically opposed to each other, the Catholic, or that which claims a continuity of authority, in the shape of an apostolic succession and which includes the Roman Catholic, Greek and Anglican Churches. The second division is Protestant Christendom, or those who take their tenets from the Old and New Testaments, which they adopt as their only rule of faith, and say: 'We organize ourselves as a body, ecclesiastical, for doing the work of Christ.'"—Evening Telegraph.

Reservation.

There is no reason, except it may be the opinions and prejudices of individuals founded on no certain warrant of Holy Scripture or ancient custom why the blessed sacrament should not be reserved in our churches, and as a matter of fact the number in which there is reservation is increasing.

The custom is a very early one in the history of the Church, and a very necessary one in the experience of parochial work. The pastoral letter of the House of Bishops spoke of it as not contrary to our rubics or canons. A number of bishops have formally given permission for it. It is not contrary even to post-reformation practice, for the Latin Prayer-book, prepared in Queen Elizabeth's time, provided for it, as well as first book of Edward VI, while provision is still found in the liturgy of the Scotch Church for it. Until the last few years it was constantly practiced in Evangelical Churches, although not with the reverence due to the sacrament. The religion of some people seems to be the compulsory carrying out of their whims and prejudices, although this may mean the sacrifice of reverence, ancient custom and devout practice. Nameless dread and fear is the atmosphere in which some people live, the Risen Lord never gets a chance to walk with them or manifest Himself to them for cheer and comfort. Others may have sorrow for a time, but after awhile it is turned into joy which no man can take away from them. In this Christo-pagan age, we ought not to be afraid to be real about religion, it is very needful to accentuate the spiritual and heavenly aspects of what we know and believe.

For the Free Distribution of Prayer-books.

Extract from the sixty-second annual report of the Female Protestant Episcopal Prayer-book Society, of Pennsylvania.

Books distributed between December 12th, 1895, and December 10th, 1896:

Large prayer-books	347
Small prayer-books	1,885
Total of books distributed...	4,244

The object of the corporation is the gratuitous distribution of the Book of Common Prayer used by the Episcopal Church of the United States.

The donations of St. Peter's Church for 1896 amounted to $124, and of St. Clement's to only $58, a great deal less than it has been in former years. Have the members of St. Clement's forgotten that the Society still exists?

Donations may be sent before May 5th to Mrs. Greville E. Fryer, 2305 Delancey Place.

From February 23d to March 30th, inclusive, the Guild has given out 193 pieces of sewing, and has received for them $36.09. The Dorcas Society paid the Guild $9.

The Clothing Committee wish to thank the donors of several packages of clothing received since the notice of last month, and to thank in advance a number of others who have spoken of their intention to send articles.

It should be remembered, that while it is the privilege and custom of a large part of our congregation to spend a long summer out of town, at some cool seaside or country retreat, many are not so favored. The "streets and lanes of the city" all around the church, are thronged with multitudes of poor people, for whom the heat of a Philadelphia summer is only less trying than the rigor of severe winter.

With the approach of summer we hear of the proposed departure of one and another of the Guild's active workers. The effect of this lessening of the force is sadly felt when, as is to be expected, nearly if not quite all have gone. Shall we not learn of some who are willing to hold themselves ready as substitutes for this term, or some portion of it?

The photographs sold for the benefit of the Guild work were quite popular as Holy Week and Easter tokens. Miss Heylin would be glad to make arrangements with any who could take an interest in extending the sale of these among their friends.

Seashore Home.

The report of the Seashore Home for 1896 has been printed and sent to subscribers. We wish that a larger number of persons might be interested in this part of the work, and show their interest by making an offering on Ascension Day, or sending a subscription or donation to the Treasurer, Mr. J. Douglass Brown, Jr., 517 Drexel Building, or to the All Saints Sisters, 2034 Cherry street. The same house that was last year found so well-adapted for the purpose will be again used this year. A great many persons are given a summer outing that they would not otherwise have; but much volunteer work must be done by persons interested in the success of this Seashore Home. For the information of friends, a list of needful articles is given: Hammocks, toys, blankets, pillows, sheets, matting, table cloths and chairs of any kind. Last year the altar used was loaned by the Mother Superior of All Saints; it is now needed for one of the Community houses, so that there ought to be some kind of a suitable altar provided.

Two hundred and sixty-three Ransom envelopes have been received during the month.

The Vestry, at their meeting, appropriated the cash received on Easter Day, so that the whole amount available for paying the ground rent is over $10,000, a little less than $3,000 must be raised by St. Clement's Day. We are still confident that many to whom the object ought to appeal have not as yet given it any very serious or generous attention, now that it is within a measureable prospect of success, it is to be hoped that they will "join the Crusade."

Promises, to be paid on St. Clement's Day, are asked from each member of the congregation—the money to be put in an envelope marked with the name of the giver, and given as an offering on St. Clement's Day.

The Guild of the Holy Child again made an Easter offering for the Ransom Fund, $5.

The children of the Infant-school also gave their Easter offering for the Ransom Fund, it amounted to $5.

"Our Orchestra."

One very important factor in the success of our Easter music was the fact that, for some time past, our orchestral force for festival occasions has been composed of practically the same men; so that we have now what might almost be denominated "St. Clement's Orchestra," made up from the leading professional performers of the Philadelphia Musical Association.

At the final full rehearsal upon the Easter music with organ, orchestra and choir, so much time was necessarily spent upon the new Weber numbers that it was found impossible to go over the Mozart selections. Although the orchestra had played the latter some months before, when we had had Mozart upon a festival, it was with considerable reluctance that the choir-master was forced to forego a rehearsal; hence, when the smoothness of the orchestral accompaniments to the Mozart excerpts is recalled, the real advantage and practical utility of a regular force of instrumentalists is at once evident.

Extracts from the Diary of a Plain Choirman.

Friday, January 22d, 1897.—What a divine attribute is the gift of the great composer; what a marvelous power is music with those who love it! The Friday evenings spent in the choir-room achieving familiarity with the subtle secrets of those wonderful masses of the inspired fathers of musical composition are to me the brightest hours of the week's existence.

To-night we inaugurated our preparation for the coming Easter by making a first attempt upon Weber's Mass in Eb. It is a labyrinth of difficulties. The work bristles with grim terrors for the non-professional vocalist. It is by far the most elaborate thing we have ever undertaken—too elaborate, it seems to me. I should like to hear it sung—it ought to be wonderfully effective; but it will never be sung by our choir, for it is totally and completely beyond us. When Easter comes upon us, we shall not have made one step in the tremendous task before us; shall not have conquered one number out of the six that make up the mass.

Friday, February 12th, 1897.—We have been working earnestly and perseveringly at Herr Von Weber, but seem to make little or no impression upon his cunning fortifications; seem to be utterly unable to carry even his outposts, to say nothing of forcing an entrance to his contrapuntal stronghold and solving the mysteries of his treasure-chamber. It appears to me impossible that we shall ever evolve order and intelligibility from this chaos of bewildering confusion.

Saturday, March 6th, 1897.—Sometimes order can be evolved from chaos; sometimes seeming impossibilities are but unfamiliar possibilities; sometimes human beings are mistaken, and, as a member of the human race, I have fallen a victim to one of its weaknesses—I have been mistaken. We are at last making progress with the Weber mass. The momentary paralysis of faculties induced in us by suddenly confronting such a grim and formidable antagonist has been shaken off; we have rallied our scattered forces; we have closed with the foe in a hand-to-hand conflict, and the combat is over; the din and confusion of strife have ceased, and, victorious, we are driving our beaten adversary before us. The terrible opponent is in full and disgraceful flight. Of that mass which I recently regarded with such pessimistic and fearful eye we shall conquer not only one number but several numbers—and those the longest, most difficult and most brilliant. Nay, more: In the strength of our victorious career we could, were it possible to stay the progress of time for a little while, master the entire work for Easter without undue effort! After all, I presume it is but another illustration of the power of the drop to wear away the rock; but another instance of the might and efficacy of perseverance; but another confirmation of that axiomatic witticism that "nothing succeeds like success."

Easter, April 18th, 1897.—Weather perfect; the great sun, full of warm friendship, gazing softly and benevolently from a smiling heaven upon a hopeful, trustful world; the atmosphere redolent of spring and full of the exhilarating joy of a great, if mysterious, promise; the air all athrob with eager, tremulous whispers of eternal life; and Dame Nature, strange creature — old yet ever youthful—earnestly illustrating, by cunning metaphor and graceful gesture, the marvelous tale her eloquent lips are telling—the amazing story of the Resurrection.

The Solemn High Mass is over. The great occasion for which the choir has been so long preparing is a thing of the past. Three months hard work concentrated in a single service! A quarter of a year's persistent labor and wearisome effort crowded into a two-hour performance! An appreciative part of a precious lifetime flung away, thrown into space, sung into unretentive ears and passed on and off into infinity sunk into oblivion, lost forever! Diary, solve if thou canst this knotty problem; give me a reason, an excuse, a pretext for this prodigal waste of human energy, this lavish and unprofitable expenditure of humau life. Thou art silent—thou canst not answer. Thou knowest well 'tis but a reckless and fearful extravagance.

Easter Monday, April 19th, 1897.—Diary, I can answer thee the question I propounded yesterday. Hark, thou, and I will tell thee the dream that visited me on the night of the Resurrection after thou and I had agreed upon the absurdity and futility of long and elaboate preparation for a great festival service.

A radiant figure stood at my bedside. His face—beautiful in its perfect purity, and wonderful in its surpassing peace—wore such a look of sadness as he gazed upon me that I was filled with an unaccountable misery; a feeling like that of a child who, in the presence of reproving goodness, is vaguely conscious of guilt but hopeful that the judge can point to no specific instance.

"Why do you reproach me?" I cried, involuntarily, though the Radiance had not spoken.

"Bring me the book thou callest Diary, and open at the Day of Days."

Tremblingly, I brought thee to him, old friend, with the pages laid open at Easter.

I read where his finger pointed. "A quarter of a year's persistent labor and wearisome effort crowded into a two-hour performance! An appreciative part of a precious lifetime flung away!"

And, as I read, the expressions "wearisome effort," "two-hour performance" and "lifetime flung away" seemed to be written in great capitals that burned into my brain and left their black, charred outline indelibly imprinted upon the walls of my memory. Somehow, they seemed childishly pettish and fiendishly cruel words—though they had looked so majestic as I wrote them.

"Come," said the Figure.

On the breath of the night, we were wafted swiftly through space, but with a soothing gentleness of motion that gave one such a sweet sense of security and rest that my eyes involuntarily closed, like those of a cradled infant lulled to slumber in the protecting presence of a watchful parent.

"Look," said my Guide, "gaze upon Calvary upon the night of the crucifixion."

I opened my eyes.

In the solemn stillness of a calm night, we were standing alone upon the Mount in the shadow of an ominous structure, whose rigid arms were spread forth before us as if to display the ghastly stains that could be faintly distinguished in the dim light of the stars which gazed sadly down upon the scene, like great eyes blinking surreptitiously in a vain endeavor to keep back tears of uncontrollable sorrow.

As I stood there, all the excruciating details of that infinitely pitiful and tragic story of the cross came flooding into my mind, and all other trials and troubles and burdens seemed so preposterously petty that I would have given anything, old friend, not to have written those terrible words of mine upon thy fair and unoffending page. But what we do is done forever, never to be undone. All that is left us is repentance and atonement, and avoidance of a repetition of the offense.

"Gaze abroad," said the Figure. "Behold the world twenty years after the entry in thy diary, and see for thyself whether that labor and effort of which thou complainest were vain—judged even by tangible worldly results."

I found myself looking into a great cathedral upon an Easter morning. A multitude of rapt faces were upturned to a noble presence with transfigured countenance, upon whose words the very breath of the great concourse seemed to hang.

In another moment I was gazing upon the interior of a vast auditorium, filled to overflowing with a breathless crowd, held spellbound by the marvelous performance of a great band of artists brought together by the energy and ability of him who stood there with ten thousand eyes riveted upon his form and five thousand hearts pulsing to the rhythm of the wondrous strains of music which his genius inspired and directed.

"These are great lamps," said my Guide, his voice vibrating with suppressed joy, "and thou canst little guess what light they shed upon the darkness of the world—what a power for good those two men are. Now, look upon some of the candles."

Then, in rapid succession, I beheld vision after vision of individuals who, in humble walks and impoverished circumstances, were leading pure and noble lives amid the direst temptations and setting helpful and inspiring examples to weaker comrades.

"Know," said my Companion, turning sadly toward me, "that all these beings thou hast seen received their first suggestion of a higher existence on the Easter morn that witnessed thy 'wearisome effort,' and obtained from the 'two-hour performance' thou 'flung away' the inspiration which, in its full development, was afterward to guide and control their lives, and become an incalculable influence for good. And thou, who wast permitted to be one of the instruments in this miraculous result, wrote the words thou wouldst now give thy life to recall."

For a moment I stood there, dazed and stupified. Then, falling upon my knees in the "shadow of the cross," I burst into passionate tears, and awoke to find myself weeping in bed.

Ah, Diary, Diary, dear old friend, thou and I may have been mistaken. Such things—such results—undoubtedly can be; and, if true in possibility, why may they not be true in fact? Ay, it may be that no effort is ever without an effect, no labor ever vain, however long the result may be delayed or however impossible to trace the innumerable windings and ramifications of the operations that lead up to it.

Easter Gifts for the Choir.

If gifts are tokens of appreciative regard, the choir-boys should feel highly gratified at the esteem in which they are held, for they were certainly generously remembered. They had eggs of all varieties and materials—real eggs, dyed in gorgeous tints and artistically decorated by patient hands; chocolate eggs, of a superfine quality and entrancing flavor unanimously denominated "peachy;" and tin eggs, possessed of a surprising and delightful trick of opening in the middle and displaying a candy hare sitting with commendable maternal patience upon a multitude of infinitesimal eggs that might, possibly, have been hatched one day into promising young rabbits had not the boys ruthlessly devoured the unquickened progeny. At least, it was evident to the most casual glance that the hare was supposed to be sitting; though, as a matter of fact, her proportions had been so awkwardly modeled by some clumsy sculptor that the poor creature was compelled to prosecute the incubating process by lying in a confused and uncomfortable heap in the midst of her eggs.

One kind and munificent donor had prepared for each boy an elaborate platter—of no niggardly size, either—bearing the recipient's name and containing a bewildering assortment of candy delicacies in a wild profusion that would have appalled the voracity of any creature short of a choir-boy.

Thanks to these thoughtful friends, the day was the most memorable Easter the boys have experienced for many years.

The men of the choir received only one gift, and that small and insignificant, the metal egg with the deformed hare—which, in the nature of the case, would have been considered by crabbed or unenlightened persons a sort of satire rather than a bona fide Easter souvenir. To be sure, the men received praises and congratulations that would have turned the heads of less sensible and well-balanced fellows; but words of eulogy possess no power to satisfy the cravings of the human appetite, and many of these worthy singers were observed to gaze covertly—but with unmistakable wistfulness—upon the treasures of the boys. However, ours are a faithful, patient, long-suffering set of men, and no actual complaints were heard.

Correspondence.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:

Splendid as was the work of the choir this Easter, and gratifying as were its successes, I fear that, in contemplating the matter, one is very apt to overlook what appears to me to be the most important consideration; very prone to miss the most satisfactory reflection in mere pleasure at the general excellence of the work. I was really astonished at the manner in which the Weber numbers were rendered. I do not think I have ever heard the choir sing with more dash, precision and effect, but what I wish to emphasize is the fact that capability for work of this character upon the first production of an elaborate mass, like the Weber, indicates that a great forward stride has been accomplished; proves a more desirable condition of the choir than has existed for years; points to a state of affairs that should please us more and give us a feeling of more genuine and solid satisfaction than could possibly be aroused by the mere brilliance of a particular effort. CRITIC.

The Kiss of Peace.

"Greet one another with a holy kiss," says the apostle. In the early Church it was for many years the custom for the members of the Church to exchange at the conclusion of the mass, the kiss of peace. This beautiful custom has never been quite abandoned, and in many churches it is still the use for the clergy, acolytes and choir to exchange a formal embrace at the close of the service.

The kiss of peace is the sign of Christian brotherhood, of relationship in Christ. Its retention, even in the merely formal embrace, still bears witness to this great truth, and ought to help us to remember the love and courtesy due to our brethren in Christ.

Reservation.

We quote from Dr. Mortimer's book, "Catholic Faith and Practice:"

"The rubric in the English book was introduced in the year 1662, and is from the pen of Bishop Cosin. We have in Cosin's own handwriting a document entitled 'Suggested Corrections in the Prayer-book,' which formed the basis of the alterations made at the Savoy Conference. In this we read: It is likewise here ordered [in the book of 1604] that if any of the bread and wine remain, the curate shall have it to his own use, which words some curates have abused and extended so far, that they suppose they may take all that remains of the consecrated bread and wine itself home to their houses, and there eat and drink the same with their other common meats. * * * Some words are needful here to be added, * * * if any of the consecrated elements be left, etc. This rubric, then, was put in by the Catholic party after their victory over the Puritans at the Savoy Conference, to prevent a specific practice which then prevailed. This is not a matter of opinion, but of history. We have in Cosin's handwriting the above statement; and it is preposterous to say that the rubric refers to the twenty-eight articles, which had been drawn up for more than one hundred years, during which period Reservation for the purpose of adoration was not the practice of the English communion."

Bishop Forbes says: "The article does not prohibit the practices mentioned, but merely states that the reservation, circumgestation, elevation and adoration of the sanctissimum is no part of Christ's institution; such ceremonies may be, and are, omitted without breaking our Lord's enactment touching the Eucharist. The Church might leave them out, and yet leave the whole of His institution untouched. So much is really the whole amount of the prohibition, as far as the sentence is concerned.

"That the sacrament of 'The Eucharist,' as the Latin articles term it, was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, is admitted on all hands. The Council of Trent asserts that 'it was instituted that it might be received,' but the Church has from the earliest times reserved the Holy Sacrament, regarding it as a most precious pledge from heaven and the miracle of divine love."

"Till the thirteenth century, we have distinct evidence that in different ways, sometimes suspended over the altar enveloped in veils, sometimes in tabernacles in the form of a dove, sometimes in aumbries beside the altar, sometimes along with images and relics of the saints, and sometimes in towers a few feet from the high altar, the Blessed Sacrament was reserved with great dignity and honor.

BISHOP FORBES.

It may not be generally known that to a certain extent the Church in America is pledged to the restoration of reservation of the Sacrament; when Dr. Seabury was consecrated in Scotland, one of things he promised was that he would endeavor to have provision made in the Prayer-book for reserving the Sacrament for the sick. It was, we may say, one of the conditions on which the Episcopal office was first given to us—the phrase "we and all others who shall be partakers of this Holy Communion" was held to refer to this.

This is the Way of Them.

The luxury of living, which is displayed in the homes of the rich, is creeping into the church. Expensiveness of decoration is getting to be a mark of our churches, as well as of our hotels. Soft cushions, easy pews, rich carpets, extravagant choirs,—these are essential perquisites of religion. There is no such thing as worshipping God, if it makes one uncomfortable: give me perfect ease, and then God and I can chat together. This indolence, of course, creeps into our spiritual life. The cross is with us yet, but it is a cross of God. "The church becomes ornate and sumptuous, but wanting in aggressive vigor. It walks in embroidered slippers, and not iron-shod. It goes to what it calls its combat in dressing-gown, and not in mail, in corselet and with sword. It is very much like petrified wood, beautiful to look at, but all the pores of the living wood have been filled with substances, foreign to itself, so that you cannot melt it or burn it; it will not bear fruit; it will not ignite." It cannot be kindled itself, nor can it kindle others. We need more of monastic churches, hard floors, no cushions, bare walls, no riches except upon the altar.

The Visit of the Primate of England to the Russian Church.

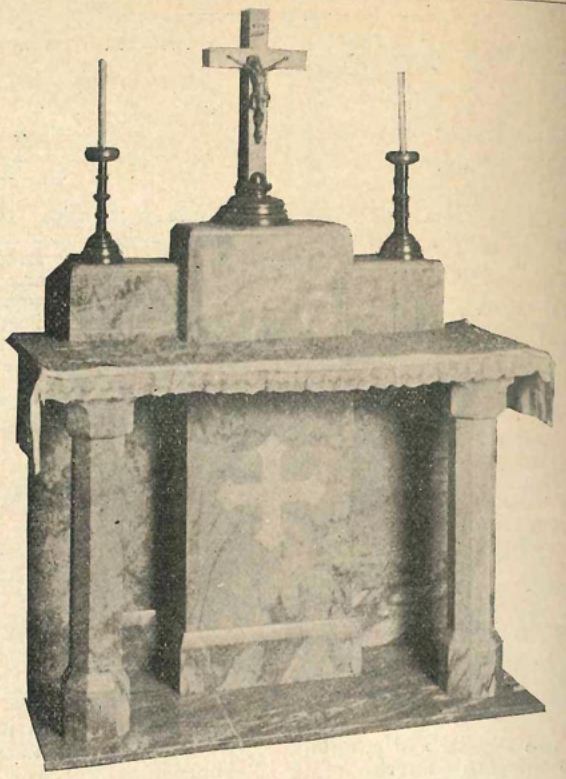
The secular papers of England and Russia, as well as the religious press of those countries, have been discussing the significance of the recent visit to the Russian Church, of Dr. Maclagan, Archbishop of York.

He arrived in St. Petersburg on Tuesday, in Passion Week, and that day was given a private audience by the Czar. On Wednesday, he visited the monastery of St. Alexander Nivsky, and attended the service of the Liturgy of the Presanctified. Immediately after the Communion, the Bishop, who was celebrating the Liturgy, greeted the Archbishop in the manner usual in Russia, between two orthodox Bishops; and then the celebrant made his prayer at the altar, "that the Russian and the English churches might become one fold, under one Shepherd." The Antidoron, or blessed bread, and the warm wine were then brought to the Archbishop. Later in the day, the Archbishop visited the Ecclesiastical Academy, and all the students sang the greeting usually given to a Greek Bishop, and the Archbishop gave them his blessing.

On Thursday, Antonias, Archbishop of Finland, had a long interview with Dr. Maclagan, and in the afternoon the latter was received by Duke Constantine. Friday, the Archbishop had some very cordial intercourse with the Procurator of the Holy Synod, and with the Czar's Chaplain; and at night he left for Moscow. As the train drew out of the station, a group of Russian choristers sang the Episcopal greeting.

Saturday morning the Archbishop found awaiting him at the Moscow station, Prince Shikhmatoff, Procurator of the Synodal Department, and two Archimandrites (or chief-abbots, from Chudoff and Durskoi monasteries), representing the Metropolitan Bishop of Moscow. The carriage of the Metropolitan Bishop was at his service during his entire stay.

Clothed in convocation robes, and with a Chaplain carrying the Archbishop's cross, he called on the Metropolitan Bishop, and had a long and cordial conversation. In the evening he attended the service of the Blessing of the Palms in the Russian Cathedral.



Palm Sunday, he celebrated mass in the English Church, and preached there at night. He also attended the high mass at the Russian Cathedral. In the afternoon he was received by the Grand Duke Sergius, and the Grand Duchess.

In Holy Week his movements were followed by the newspapers with a completeness which is rare in Moscow. He was present at all the great services in the Russian Church, entering the chancel through the Holy Gates, and walking with the Russian clergy. After the ceremony of feet-washing, on Maundy-Thursday, the Bishop of Moscow exchanged Episcopal salutes with the Archbishop, and they embraced publicly in the Cathedral. The Archbishop was present at the midnight Easter-eve celebration, when the great bell of Moscow is rung.

Father Smirnoff, in the official paper of the Holy Synod: "We cordially welcome the purpose of His Grace, and with all our heart, beseech the Lord, that He Himself, the Almighty God, may so guide his footsteps during his visit to our country, that this small seed may grow into a noble tree for the benefit of the two churches, the Orthodox and the Anglican."

Lecture by Dr Wells.

Sea-shore Home.

The Sea-shore Home, at Point Pleasant, must ever look to the generosity of the members of the congregation for its maintenance; as true religion is a necessary part of its government, it does not appeal to most people. We therefore hope that religious people will not amuse themselves with other schemes, or waste their money on worldly ventures, but give where soul, as well as body, is cared for. We hope to have mass said daily, as was the case last year.

Parish Notes.

A new sanctus bell has been given for use in chapel, in pious memory of Evan Names Greenfield.

Enough money is in hand to pay for the cementing of the space in cellar under the high altar, and the stone altar, in memory of William Halsey Wood, will be placed there. It is hoped to make a stairway from the church into this srypt chapel. The altar has already been dedicated to Our Lady.

The altar has been received, and it will be put in place as soon as the necessary alterations have been made to the cellar.

A small altar has been promised for use in the Sea-shore Home.

This month the number of pledge envelopes received each week is noted in the offertory account. It would be more satisfactory, if, when possible, each communicant gave something regularly, either by envelope or pew rent. It need not cover all their offerings.

The new dorsal has been finished and is ready to be put up for the Trinity season. The materials used are green brocade with red brocade and cross of green plush, the old crucifix has been put on this. The effect of the green is quiet and cool.

The Altar Guild has presented a very handsome burse and veil of red damask silk, embroidered with gold thread, for use at the Church House of the Diocese. It was given at the request of the committee, who have had the furnishing in charge.

St. Vincent's Guild have promised green silk for a cope in memory of one of their former members. The Altar will do the necessary work, and perhaps we may hope to have it for use at Epiphany tide, the silk for this and a set of violet vestments will be bought this summer.

The annual dues of associates of C. B. S. may be paid to Mr. E. S. Halloway, Treasurer of St. Saviour's Ward. Vespers will be sung in the chapel on the eve of Corpus Christi, at 5.15 o'clock.

The order of the Holy Cross are not to have charge of St. Andrew's, Baltimore.

Some members of the congregation have kindly sent flowers for the altar during the month. During the summer we are dependent on this.

Strawberry festival and musicale, Tuesday, June 1st, 1897, St. Clement's Hall, for All Saint's Sea-shore Home. Tickets, 25 cents.

The Primitive Church.

Many customs of the Church of the first four centuries have been modified by the conditions of the Church in modern times. During the first three hundred years of her life at least the Church was practically a secret society, and no person not baptized was admitted to her meetings and services. For many centuries now, however, the Church services have been open freely to the public, unbaptized, lapsed, heretical or what not.

Those people who, like a recent writer in a church paper, argue that we should do all things as the Church of the first four centuries did, ought to remember this fact. The Church is no longer a secret society. The times have changed. Therefore such a system of Penitential discipline as the early Church used would be impossible to-day. The Church hath power to decree rites and ceremonies, and it is in response to a real necessity of the Church's changed conditions in the world that the humane and generous system of the confessional has taken the place of the ancient Penitential system.

The confessional meets a demand. The world weighted down with sins needs spiritual counsel and advice, and desires the sacramental assurance of forgiveness. Any pastor who does not have the confessional in his church loses the opportunity to help souls in time of need in a personal and direct way. He is like a physician who lectures on medicine, but who refuses advice and the cure to individual patients. He is dealing with symptoms instead of the real disease.

The old discipline was good in its day. The new system has taken its place in response to the changed conditions.

Diocesan Convention.

The convention met in St. Luke's Church, on May 4th, and continued in session for three days. The Bishop, in his address, did not favor a division of the Diocese, and apparently did not desire a Coadjutor at present, so the matter is deferred.

Some new canons on location of churches, and defining of parochial limits were passed. The final decision as to the former will now rest with the Bishop.

There was some talk about increasing salaries of some of the clergy. Justice would seem to suggest that exhorbitant salaries ought to be forbidden, or an assessment levied on them.

"The Holy City."

For the second time this year the choir of the Church of the Epiphany has had the free use of St. Clement's for the purpose of giving an elaborate musical work. The reason of this necessity is known to all. Wednesday evening, May 19th, the church was well filled, and the music was creditably sung by the large choir, under the direction of Mr. James E. Ackroyd. The clergy of the Epiphany were present in the choir stalls. The Rev. Dr. Tidball, the rector, said the prayers and gave the benediction. The collection, which amounted to $41.89, was given to the Sea-shore House, at Point Pleasant.

An Appreciated Gift.

Certain "friends"—who refuse to have their names divulged—presented the choirboys, a short time ago, with an imposing package, bearing the business card of the well-known sporting goods firm of A. G. Spalding & Co. When this bundle was opened before the boys one night, at the conclusion of a rehearsal, the appreciation of the treasures it contained was announced by a burst of enthusiasm that "baffles description"—as the newspapers would tell it—and rivaled the "scenes of wild confusion," they so thrillingly describe for us during a political campaign. The "peachy" bats, "corkin'" gloves, "daisy" balls and "birdy" mask were all turned over to the trembling hands of the flushed, eager "Manager" of the S. C. B. T. (St. Clement's Baseball Team), a corporation organized a few days previously with a "paid-up capital" of $1.35, a sum the care of which carries a responsibility whose weight oppresses the harassed "Treasurer" to such a degree that one can almost trace lines of anxiety beginning to furrow the youthful countenance. By this princely donation, the possessions of the S. C. B. T. were increased so amazingly that it was unanimously considered impossible for any regular "official" of the organization to give proper care to them and, at the same time, discharge with thoroughness the duties of his particular office. A "Property Manager" was therefore elected, placed under bond and given charge of the old and the new equipment with many forceful injunctions—though the possession and care of the recent acquisitions precipitate a surveilance sufficiently jealous to be irksome to anyone but the "Property Manager of the S. C. B. T."

Unfortunately, a baseball team can consist of but nine "men," with a few extras or "subs," for instant availability in case of disablement of regulars; and, as the choir contains at least double the number of boys necessary for this purpose, it is unavoidable that many should feel themselves mere spectators of the exciting proceedings now in progress. To remedy this, it is proposed to organize another team, a junior S. C. B. T. The younger organization will, of course, enjoy in common with the older, that happiness known to some few individuals favored with exuberant robustness of health—namely, the joy of mere existence—but, in addition to this, one of its useful functions will be to afford practice for the older club.

In this condition of affairs, donations of baseball equipment (boys' sizes) are still very acceptable, and will be distributed with all possible impartiality and justice.

The S. C. B. T. takes this opportunity of conveying to its unknown "friends" its deep and sincere gratitude for their thoughtful kindness and munificent gift.

Guild of St. Lawrence Notes.

Attention is called again to the need of funds for the Guild's beneficiary work. It is not desired to urge the matter unduly; but the society wishes to offer its services to those who feel the duty of giving to the poor, and who wish a suitable agent. Every case of distress is submitted to the judgment of an executive committee, and great care is taken to secure a right application of money or goods donated.

The Secretary of the Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital and Colony Farm has written to Miss Katharine Smith, as representing the "Jeremiah Fund," a letter of thanks acknowledging the receipt of $1,055.19. This money was long ago loaned to the hospital, at a time when it was connected with the parish of St. Clement's, and this present acknowledgment is the formal ending of a claim which might otherwise have been urged legally against the institution. "Jeremiah," it will be remembered was in some sense the father of St. Lawrence, and the latter society has succeeded to the missionary and charitable work which was once done with much activity through the Hospital dispensary and its corps of visitors.

We quote from The Arrow, N. Y.

The Catholic Book News is a magazine in which the well-known Roman Catholic publishing-house, of Benziger Brothers, advertise their new books, etc. In the February number of this publication there is a notice of a new edition of Keenan's "Controversial Catechism, or Protestantism Refuted." The notice states that:

"This new edition of Keenan's work is not a mere reprint; it has been thoroughly revised and brought up to date, and two new chapters have been added. Its author, it will be remembered, denied the infallibility of the Pope—of course the 'Catechism' was originally issued long before the Vatican definition. Needless to say, the present volume, amongst its other improvements, contains a full and clear statement of the doctrine of Papal Infallibility."

It is certainly an interesting admission for a Romanist to make that Roman Catholic books require reëditing every few years to be "brought up to date." They more frequently deny that there is any change in the Roman religion.

The Bishop of the Diocese made his usual visitation to St. Clement's, Friday evening, May 14th, at 8 o'clock. The rain storm, no doubt, hindered from being present some persons, who would otherwise have desired to show their respect for their Bishop and their love for the parish. The collection was made for the Bishop's Private Fund: it amounted to $15.14. A list is printed of the names of those who received the sacrament; some have already made their first communion, and the others will receive on Whitsunday. Several who were not able to attend our confirmation will be confirmed later.

The people of St. Elizabeth's are making a brave effort to raise money to build their church. For some reason or another, this field of missionary work does not commend itself to the general funds. The friends of Rev. Stewart Stone, late vicar of Holy Comforter, are raising $2,000 to build one of the chapels, which are to form a part of the plan. The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed Saturday, June 12th, at 4.30 P. M., for laying the corner-stone of the church and clergy-house.

Wrong End Foremost.

There is one curious feature of the recent and still lingering discussion about orders, which deserves more attention than it has received, and that is the peculiar wrong-end foremost method of reasoning by which it has been attempted to discredit the sacredotal character of Anglican priests. Rome's argument has been somewhat as follows: Your clergy are not true priests, for some of your Bishops are either ignorant of the true doctrine of the Holy Order, or else they wilfully reject it. Many of your priests do not intend to offer mass. How can your orders be right, when such a state of things exists? Your forms of ordination have been changed, and this shows that your Church does not intend what the pre-Reformation Church intended.

Now, to answer the last part first, we allow that it would be a serious defect if the changes made in formularies had deprived them of the essentials requisite for validity. But to simplify, to turn back to early forms, to reject terms and ceremonies about which had been raised a structure of superstition or the dust of controversy—this is not to reject or deny the underlying reality. It was precisely this process of simplification that actually took place. Any one can find the argument in full in the Archbishop's letter to the Pope. The intention of the Church in her corporate capacity to "continue" orders as they had been from ancient times is unmistakably written in the prayer-book.

But to say that the ignorance or perverted intention of a Bishop or Priest who performs a sacred function affects the character of what he does, or in any way reacts to affect the validity of his orders, or can be used as evidence that his orders are not valid, is eminently absurd. Of course, there would be some ground for such an assertion if it could be known that a cleric, in a given act, did not seriously intend to act as Christ's minister, or to do what we would consider that a true Christian minister should do. But otherwise there is no doubt, and for this simple reason, that it is not really he who acts, but God who acts through him.

Therefore individual beliefs, modes of worship, vestments, ritual, celibacy or matrimony, names and terms applied to public services, all these are entirely aside from the question. The broadest and the lowest churchman, being a priest, or "presbyter," or "minister in full orders," says mass whenever, with the proper elements before him, he seriously utters our Lord's words of consecration. He cannot help saying mass. Or, being a Bishop, with or without an intention to make a "massing priest," he invariably does make one, when he uses the Church's ordinal for priests and lays hand on a candidate. He cannot help it. The power is of God. This is the proper way to think of the matter to-day, and it is just as valid and proper when carried back to those troublous times when, no doubt, fanatical individuals did what they could to tear down and destroy. They tried, but they did not succeed. They failed because the thing was out of their power. Of course, this method of approaching the subject is forbidden to those whose thought is ruled by the one dictum, the Church of Rome is the whole Church. But Anglicans can begin at the other end; can trace the course along which the sacramental life of God has come; can thank Him for preservation amid manifold dangers; can rejoice in the ever-increasing proofs of His presence with us, and can look forward to a future which is not burdened and discounted through being pledged to unhistorical and untenable theories.

Corpus Christi.

It is to be prayed for that the Anglican Communion will officially reauthorize the feast of Corpus Christi. Of course, there is no reason why it should not be observed in our churches as it is, indeed, observed in so many of them now; but it ought to be made a feast of obligation for all.

The feast of Corpus Christi is about as ancient as the special observance of Trinity Sunday. It was placed on the first Thursday after the festal season in order to do honor to the Blessed Sacrament. The Blessed Sacrament is the heart of the Church's devotional life. After the Church year has taught us the doctrines of the incarnation, resurrection and ascension of our Lord, and the descent of the Holy Ghost, it is most fitting that we should be taught the mystery of Christ's abiding sacramental presence in His Church. Therfore we, before Him bending,

This great sacrament revere.
Types and shadows have their ending,
For the newer rite is here.
Faith the outward sense befriending
Makes the inward vision clear.

In the Blessed Sacrament Christ himself is present in our midst—heaven and earth are joined together.

Something to Remember.

Sometimes, especially in the summer, one is unfortunately obliged to go to a church where the ignorance or indifference of those in authority is distressing. There is little reverence and no proper care of the Blessed Sacrament. Things are not done "decently and in order." As a consequence one comes back in the fall, perhaps, all upset. One has the impression that the whole Church is in a bad way. One frets too much over the charges made against us of "a lack of uniformity in teaching and practice."

So, remember in the first place, not to judge the Church by any individual representative of it. The Church is Christ's body. Her doctrine and practice are Catholic and infallible. If any one misrepresents her teaching, or does not observe her decent and reverent order, he alone is responsible before God—you are not. The priest is always a priest, no matter how imperfect he may be as a man or even as a teacher. He is the messenger of God, a steward of God's mysteries. Regard him as such. Be charitable if you do not like his preaching—the text is sure to be all right and you can obey that. And the mass is always the mass, no matter in what manner or in what vestments even it may be celebrated; Christ is always present on the altar after the consecration, and the Holy Sacrifice is always offered when the liturgy is used. You have a right to expect it to be celebrated every Sunday, and can ask for it with propriety if it is not celebrated. The prayer-book provides for it.

Again, be reverent yourself. If the vessels are not cleansed at the end of the mass you ought to genuflect on leaving your place. You can always fast, of course, for your communions. But don't worry about the sacrament itself. Remember, in the case of irreverence, that if God endures it, you can. God will take care of His own mysteries. Besides, what you might consider irreverence, perhaps in His eyes would not be so. He has pity on the ignorant.

Finally, don't be conspicuous in your private devotions. It is better to follow the customs of the place, if you will go where you cannot expect all the privileges you are used to enjoying.

Notes.

The late Archbishop Benson said, "the penny-post was an invention of man to which we must submit for the Lord's sake," and the enormous epistolary duty of some prelates is illustrated by an experience of the late Archbishop Thomson, who lost a portmanteau containing 2,000 unanswered letters. Such a piece of good fortune does not fall to the lot of ordinary mortals, but the extraordinary part lies in the sequal,—the Archbishop deliberately advertised for his missing property. Probably the portmanteau itself was of value.

In 1850 one could buy a man in the Fiji Islands for seven dollars, butcher him, and eat him without remonstrance. To-day the Bible is everywhere read, and nine-tenths of the people may be found in church on Sunday.

The public at present are being thrilled with the story of the courage and endurance of Dr. Nansen, in the frozen regions of the North. It reminds us that for Christ's sake many men, and also women, are not merely traveling for a few months, but dwelling year by year amid the rigors and privations of the Arctic Regions. The world generously acknowledges the plodding and undaunted heroism of the man of science, but is unimpressed by similar qualities when displayed for the sake of precious souls. The world, as usual, only cares for its own. The church laborers, thank God, don't ask for popularity, but they do ask for prayers.

Parish Boundaries.

At the last convention a canon was passed in regard to this. A committee of the Northwest Convocation has just sent out a tentative plan for discussion and approval, before it is submitted to the Convocation. According to this plan our limits will be from Twenty-first to Broad, between Arch and Vine, and Nineteenth to Broad, between Arch and Spring Garden streets. Of course this is subject to modifications; it seems to give a new direction and territory to our aggressive work, and one more difficult to reach. These boundaries do not hinder any who desire our ministrations from seeking them.

The twenty-ninth annual festival was held in New York; for many years it has been held in Chicago. Vespers were sung on the Eve of Corpus Christi, for members of St. Saviour's Ward, followed by a short meeting. The Secretary presented his report as to the condition of the ward and finances. St. Saviour's Ward consists of forty-six members.

The Archbishop of York's Visit to Russia.

The visit of the Archbishop to the Russian Church seems to be regarded generally as one of the most significant events of the year. All classes of society in Russia are interested and enthusiastic, and one of the Moscow papers remarks that the visit means more for Orthodox Russians than even the Greco-Turkish war.

Dr. Maclagan was received everywhere with enthusiasm, both by civil and ecclesiastical authorities. Bishops and metropolitans, abbots and nobility, seemed to vie with each other in extending him hospitality.

The account of his visit to the Moscow Cathedral on the eve of Palm Sunday is most interesting. On his arrival the dean of the cathedral conducted him to a special gallery where a carpet was spread, and an arm chair with crimson damask curtains prepared for his lordship. The spectacle in the cathedral baffles description. All the chandeliers were lit in nave and galleries. The palms (boughs of budding willows) had been distributed, and every one of the five thousand worshippers had his branch with a lighted taper fastened in the middle of it. The Palm Sunday canon was faultlessly sung by the choir of Chudoff Monastery.

Here is the way a Moscow reporter endeavors to describe the mysteries of the robes of an English bishop:

"The Archbishop's official robes consist of a kaftan of dark purple velvet (this means, the cassock), over which comes a mantle with arm-holes, falling down to the ground behind, and with sleeves drawn back. This mantle is of cloth of a rich scarlet hue. In front, above the kaftan, he wears a broad orarion of black descending to the ground (i. e. the scarf). From a chain around his neck he wears a massive pectoral cross, and on his head he had a circular purple cap."

The two things which especially impressed the Archbishop in his visit were the cordiality of Russian hospitality, and the great preponderance of men over women in the congregations of the churches.

The Sunday-school.

The term of the Sunday-school ended on Trinity Sunday. The last session had as a feature the recitation of the Athanasian Creed by Jennie Johnson and George Mutchler, in a way that did them much credit. The Sunday-school will open in September.

The annual pic-nic will take place on July 1st, and College Park, an excursion ground near Bristol, on the Delaware, will be our destination. All Sunday-school children will receive free tickets. All other children will be given tickets at 20 cents apiece; all adults at 35 cents. It is hoped that as many of the Parish as possible will attend, for this is the only Parish event of the kind, and it will add to every one's happiness to see all their friends, young and old, there. Let us have lots of men, women, boys and girls.

An Acolyte's Reception.

The Church of the Beloved Disciple was kind enough to invite the Acolytes of the various parishes of the diocese to the festival service and reception of St. Alban's Guild on Thursday, June 17th. A large delegation from St. Vincent's attended, and found themselves in the pleasant society of seventy-five to a hundred young men who, like themselves, have the privilege of assisting at God's altar. The evening was a very pleasant one for all, and we trust such reunions will be ever more frequent. It makes one realize the sacredness of the acolyte's office, and also the real living power of Catholic truth and faith throughout all our sister parishes.

Seven hundred and thirty-two communions made from May 23 to June 20.

The 7.30 Mass on week-days and 8 o'clock on Sundays, will be omitted during the summer.

The Rev. H. Parrish, we regret to say, does not return to St. Clement's in the fall. The prayers and best wishes of us all will follow him in his future life and work.

The Pentecostal Season.

It is a great mistake to regard the spiritual life of the Church as dying down during the summer. The Sundays after Trinity are the Sundays after Pentecost. Pentecost, or Whitsunday, is the birthday of the Church. The spiritual fires of the Church ought to blaze up with a special and renewed vigor for the time between Pentecost and Advent. Every one should be careful to keep the feast days of the ancient calendars. Corpus Christi, Nativity of S. John Baptist, SS. Peter and Paul. Visitation B. V. M., S. Irenæus, S. Bonaventure, S. Swithun, S. Thomas Aquinas, S. Vincent de Paul, S. Dominic, The Transfiguration, Holy Name, S. Lawrence, The Assumption B. V. M., S. Bartholomew, S. Augustine, S. Aidan, Nativity B. V. M., Holy Cross, and the other Saints' days during the warm weather. The Holy Ghost never abandoned the Church. He has been developing saint after saint during the ages of the Christian Church—a long line of martyrs, virgins, doctors and confessors. The saints did not all die out in the first three centuries. God has ornamented the Church with splendid lives in every age. And the Pentecostal season—the summer time—is the time to recall the long centuries and the many deeds of heroism which have made the history of Christianity since the birthday of the Church. It is to be hoped that street-preaching may be revived during the summer. The apostles preached on the streets. A new Pentecost is much needed in some of our cities, and the clergy might well spare some time from Europe and the sea-side to try an experiment in regaining the masses who have lost faith.

Parish Notes.

All of the confirmation class except two have received their first communion. The corporate communion was made at the seven o'clock mass on Whitsunday. Quite a number unable to receive at that time, by special permission, made their communion at other times, but at our own altar, of course.

As is our custom, solemn mass was sung on Ascension Day at seven o'clock. There was a full attendance of the choir and acolytes, who, in this respect, gave a good example to many of our people who ought to have been present. The acolytes and members of the choir had breakfast in the upper school-room. Later in the day the choir boys, under the charge of some of the clergy, started for their usual outing. They spent the day at Wissinoming.

The Rogation days were kept in the usual manner by continued intercession. Over 100 persons were pledged to stated hours, and quite a number came at the times that suited their convenience. The night hours were kept by the Guild of St. Vincent.

The corner-stone of St. Elizabeth's Church, and of the clergy house for the Companions of the Holy Saviour, was laid on Saturday, June 12th, at 4.30 P. M., by the Bishop of the Diocese, a large number of the clergy and devout church people assisting.

The Lamberth Conference, composed of all the Bishops, in communion with the See of Canterbury, meets during this month. A large number of Bishops, coming from every part of the world, are expected to be present.

An important meeting has been held of the "Bishops of the Holy Catholic Church, in full communion with the Church of England," and "lawfully commissioned to exercise Episcopal functions in China or Corea." Five Bishops were present, including Bishop Graves, of Shanghai. They have put forth a letter, stating the results of the conference.

The Bishop of Argyle and the Isles blessed, on June 9th, the home he has built in Iona for the Society of St. John Ev., and delivered it to the society. The Bishop, in a circular-letter, requested his clergy and others to unite "in humble prayer that, through the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit, the religious life may be revived in our midst, and that there may be a renewal among us of that missionary zeal which manifested itself so conspicuously in the life and work of S. Columba."—Cowley Magazine.

Fr. Biscoe, writes from Jerusalem: "There is a great movement among the Jews now to rebuild the Temple. They have offered an immense sum to the Sultan for the site, which at the present has not been accepted. Many of the Jews have large stones and marble pillars in their houses in readiness."—Cowley Magazine.

The Sea-shore Home.

The offerings on Ascension Day were given to the treasurer of the home at Point Pleasant. They amounted to $21.83. A number of subscriptions have been received through the offertory.

On Tuesday, June 1st, a strawberry festival and musicale was given by St. Mary's Guild, with the assistance of some friends. The room had been very tastefully decorated with various flags and bunting, and a large number of people seemed to have a very pleasant time. Owing to the many generous donations, the expenses amounted only to $10.62. The balance, $59.64, was turned over to the treasurer of the Sea-shore House.

The Sister in charge hopes to have the house in readiness to receive the first party on June 28th, a small party going down the week before to prepare. An altar has been given for the use of the "Home."

Baptized persons presented to Right Rev. O. W. Whitaker, D.D., Bishop of Pennsylvania, at St. Elizabeth's Church, Friday, May 28th: Frederick William Decker, Elmira Riley.

At St. Michael and All Angels, Tuesday, June 8th: Charles William Augustus Weigel.

Ordination.

The Rev. Erskine Wright was ordained Priest by the Bishop of the Diocese, at St. Andrew's Church, on Trinity Sunday. A number of others were made Deacons, and ordained to the Priesthood. His first mass was said in the Church on Monday morning, June 14th.

Wanted, Fairy-Stories.

The Sunday-school library has been more successful during this past winter than for some seasons before. This is due to the untiring labors of the Librarian, David Coles, and his assistant, Andrew Finney. The whole library has been recatalogued and put in thoroughly good shape. There are about seventy persons who make regular use of its privileges, and there ought to be more. About eighteen books on the average are taken out each Sunday.

The library will be open all summer. Have you any books of good fairy-stories? If so, you an do the library a great favor by donating them to us.

A copy of the first number of Church Defence Quarterly has been received. It contains "Response of the Archbishops of England to the Apostolic Letter of Pope Leo XIII on Anglican Ordinations" (both Latin and English texts), and "The Archbishop of York on the Reply of Cardinal Vaughan." The Quarterly is published by the American Church League, P. O. Kennett Square, Pa., and the subscription is 25 cents a year.

A Choir Outing.

The regular Ascension Day pic-nic of the choirboys was held this year at Wissinoming, a locality particularly well adapted to the purpose, as it affords facilities for all sorts of land athletics, in addition to possessing secluded spots of beach where the luxury of a dip in the Delaware can be indulged without interruption. Many of the boys returned with colds or hoarseness, but that was, of course, perfectly proper; for where on earth would be the sense of going on a grand pic-nic if you didn't bring back some tangible proof of your trip, and what would be the enjoyment of an experience of the kind if you didn't carry your enthusiasm and appreciation sufficiently near the point of blind frenzy as to be absolutely contemptuous of all personal consequences? It is simultaneously evident that no satisfactory reply can be made to this query, and that the boys were, therefore, perfectly justified in "catching" all the cold they could overtake. That is always to be expected under such circumstances, and deprivation of the privilege of doing so would undoubtedly mar the enjoyment of the occasion. The pleasure of the Ascension Day pic-nic was not dimmed by any such foolish restriction; and to those who can claim familiar acquaintance with the Rev. Mr. Quin and the Rev. Mr. Wright, no assurance of the success of the excursion and the pleasurableness of the trip will be necessary other than the announcement that these two gentlemen were in charge of the expedition.

The Survival of the Fittest.

Mr. Crescendo, a man of somewhat more than the average amount of sentiment, an individual of reasonable appreciation of the beautiful, possessed of very considerable fondness for music and a fair musical knowledge, attends a highly ritualistic and musically elaborate service upon one of the great festivals. The odor of the incense tickles his nostrils, the fumes permeate his brain and bewilder his vision. Through a haze, as though gazing from a distance upon some wondrous fairy scene, he beholds the gorgeous vestments, sees the brilliantly arrayed acolytes, servers and priests flit hither and thither before the magnificent altar, and witnesses all the pomp and ceremony of the service. He becomes imbued with the spirit of the occasion. It steals into his being. His heart beats faster, his pulse quickens. He is captivated by the majestic roll of the organ, by the throb and pathos of the string instruments; he is stirred by the beat of the drums and the blare of the brass; he is entranced by the impressive cadences of the carefully trained human voices as they chant their praise to God in the irresistible melodies and divine harmonies of some departed master, the scintillating products of whose dazzling genius sparkle here and there, through generation after generation of mankind, to brighten the gloomy recesses of stumbling dullness and struggling mediocrity.

"Splendid," murmurs Mr. Crescendo, appreciatively. "What intense enjoyment it must be to participate in such a magnificent service! By the way, why should I not? I am somewhat of a singer, and, probably, know enough to qualify me for membership in the choir."

At the conclusion of the service, he interviews the choirmaster, who tests his voice, and discovers that the applicant possesses, apparently, all the requisites of a valuable choirman. Mr. Crescendo is, therefore, gladly accepted and entered upon the roll, and assumes his place as a member of the choir.

But, with the departure of the strings and horns and drums, with the doffing of the brilliant robes and glittering vestments, the "festival" spirit flees from the bosom of the enthusiastic Mr. Crescendo, and he gradually grows to regard the plain, ordinary Sunday services as rather monotonous than otherwise. As the warm weather approaches he experiences the irksomeness of hot vestments in a close church, and, finally, comes to feel that it is impossible for him to maintain the moral effort necessary to sing two services each Sunday under such discomforting circumstances. His attendance grows irregular, and at last he disappears from the ranks of the choir.

Yet, Mr. Sostenuto, a plain, matter-of-fact, practical gentleman, who joined the choir about the same time as Mr. Crescendo, but who experienced none of the poetic emotions of the latter, has never missed a service, and shows no indication of growing lax in attendance as the summer approaches.

However, all this occasions no surprise in the mind of the stolid choirmaster. He has seen men come and he has seen men go. Experience has taught him that, though he can test a man's voice and musical qualifications in a few minutes, the more subtle and delicate test of character must be left to the keener discrimination of that old patriarch—Time; so the choirmaster accepts Mr. Crescendo and Mr. Sostenuto, and three others, all of whom made application for admission after hearing the Easter service, and all of whom proved to be experienced and qualified singers; but, wise in his generation, the choir director leaves it to the Master Gleaner to make final siftings and selections. When the old man has done his work, Mr. Sostenuto alone remains in the ranks of the tried men and true, who previously composed the choir. He only, of the five applicants, has been found worthy of absorption in the corps of weather-beaten veterans who have seen so many seasons, and whom the stoical choirmaster mentally denominates his "survivors," because each one represents a similar sifting made by the indefatigable Gleaner.

Legend has it that, when the walls of a certain ancient cathedral were being reared, centuries ago, the old bishop, having previously qualified himself to judge, carefully and systematically inspected each load of stone as it arrived, relentlessly rejected all poor material, and permitted only the best quarryings to be used in the construction of the edifice. That cathedral still stands, as perfect, apparently, as when raised, a marvel to posterity of the builder's craft.

Always, other things being equal, will the best results be obtained only from the best materials; and the best materials can be secured only after careful, patient selection, based upon thorough test.

Religion Gone to Seed.

Among the many benefits of the summer to our parishioners sojourning in the country or at the seaside, not the least ought to be the opportunity for comparison. Some have taken pains to go where the sacraments are valued and the whole Gospel is preached. Others, through neglect or force of circumstances, find themselves where there is indeed a church, but with such distressing laity of instruction and such failure to realize the dignity of Catholic truth that they almost wish they had the excuse of there being no church, in order that they might stay away. A third and perhaps more numerous class, arriving at the place where their outing is to be spent, begin to realize that comparatively few people care much for religion. They find no regular provision for the worship of God even on Sundays. If there is a service, say at a sea-shore resort, there may be as many as a hundred people who will go to church, while many thousands are strolling along the beach, bathing, or gossiping on the hotel piazzas. Go into the country towns and you find the inhabitants, the thrifty descendants of the Pilgrims, spending the day in the companionship of the Sunday papers which the city press displays great enterprise in hurrying into even remote parts. A few go to "meeting," more stroll out toward evening to the Christian Endeavor gathering, which aims to be a rendezous for the young people. Some do up their religion by piously singing selections from Gospel Hymns No. X. The more intellectual and logical will tell you frankly that they have done with religion in any concrete form; they feel no obligation to attend the religious services which are within their reach, and they are quite content. Now our object in making these observations is not to utter a wail of despair. We believe in the religion of Jesus and its power over human hearts. If people do not show any symptoms of a definite faith or the effect of the constraining love of Christ it may be, to say the least, because they have never known what true religion is. They have had a kind of faith and a kind of ecclesiastical authority, but they have seen how, without the sanction of reason and history, are the one and the other. Their religion has gone to seed. These people are earnest enough; their lives are good outward lives. But their Godward life lies dormant, shrunk up within itself, like a seed waiting for the soil and the juices of the earth. The moral of all this is that this year, or if it is too late, next year, our contact with these people must be for their good. They are almost ready for concrete religion, vital faith, and its outward expression. What Catholic churchmen do when they go into such regions, matters much. They will be judged, and their religion with them. If Christianity is ever to be a real power in our lives, making us careful yet cheerful, definite in faith, yet large-minded and truly Catholic, in the world, and bearing our part in all its interests, yet not of the world—then even the summer may have its proper missionary results. It is Christian lives that really convert people; books and tracts come afterward.

Sin may be clasped so close that we cannot see its force.

Some people are not trying to live, they are only trying not to die—this is true as regards the spiritual as well as the natural.

The Lambeth Conference.

On July 1st in London began the Conference of all the Bishops in Communion with the Anglican Church. All the English bishops were there, as well as nearly all from our American Church, and many from Canada, India, South and Central Africa, Australia, and Polynesia; and as the special guest, was the Archbishop of Finland, who represented the Greek Church. There were one hundred and ninety-eight in all. This Lambeth Conference assembles every ten years at the call of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and it discusses thoroughly all the problems that are meeting the Church in its work in all the continents. The decisions of the council are not obligatory, but merely for advice and encouragement. What makes this present Conference memorable is that it not only occurs just at the time of the Queen's Jubilee, and thus brings before the world, at an auspicious moment, the marvelous growth and unity of our dear Mother the Catholic Church; but also that it occurs on the thirteen-hundredth anniversary of the coming to England of St. Augustine, first Archbishop of Canterbury. (Archbishop Temple, the present primate is the ninety-second Bishop of that See.)

Wednesday, June 30th, was observed at Lambeth Palace as a Day of Retreat, conducted by the Bishop of Lincoln. On Thursday there was a solemn evensong in Westminster Abbey. On Friday the bishops and their chaplains made a pilgrimage to the spot, on Britain's southeast coast, where St. Augustine stood when he first landed—upon which is now a memorial cross. Then they adjourned to the little town of Canterbury, and met in the great Cathedral for a gorgeous and impressive service—the grandest ecclesiastical function within the memory of English churchmen. The long array of living bishops clad in their Episcopal robes, rich colored hoods, and snow-white rockets, with the Archbishop in the centre, with his cross borne before him, and clothed in his gorgeous scarlet robes made a spectacle never to be forgotten.

The work of Conference began on July 5th, but as the Council meets behind closed doors nothing can as yet be reported. But this we know, its influence in moulding into close union all the dioceses of our great Church is a work beyond calculation in its future effect. Those of us who will live forty or fifty years more will hear a great deal about these Lambeth Conferences before our death.

Persecutions.

In the world ye shall have persecutions, was the promise of our Lord to His disciples, and certainly the promise was fulfilled in the lives of the early Christians.

But there is no reason to suppose that this promise of our Lord's was to be confined to the first few centuries of Christianity. It is as true to-day as it was during the time of Nero. And if the Christian Church does not feel the persecution of the world to-day it is because the Christian people are false to their Christian standard, and because worldliness has entered into and possessed the Church itself.

The persecutions which every one who will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer may come from without or may come from within—but they surely will come. The axe, the sword, and the flames of fire are not always the persecutions most to be dreaded. The world persecutes now-a-days less roughly perhaps, but more painfully. The sharp swords of tongues in cynical criticism and ridicule have tortured and destroyed many souls. The flames of evil passions fanned by worldly pleasures have persecuted multitudes of Christ's disciples.

If one is really anxious to enter into the Kingdom of God he must expect to do it only through much tribulation. It is a spiritual law that the soul should be purified by suffering before it is fit for the eternal presence of God. When you suffer, then try to remember two things: First, that you deserve to suffer because of your past sins; and, second, that you are being prepared by suffering for the true happiness of an eternal life with God.

A Wonderful Prophecy.

Many of the prophecies of the Old Testament were fulfilled at the Incarnation of Christ. Many are being fulfilled in the history of the Christian Church. But some have not yet been fulfilled, and all will not be fulfilled until the end of the world.

The prophecy of Ezekiel is one of the most mysterious of all of the books of the Old Testament. It is extremely difficult to understand. It seems, like the revelation of St. John, to be a vision of the unseen world, and a spiritual history of the Church of God in which outward and visible things mix with things beyond human knowledge.

The sixteenth chapter of Ezekiel contains a wonderful prophecy which has been conjectured to apply spiritually to the three great branches of the Christian Church—the Roman, Greek, and Anglican. In this chapter Rome is called Jerusalem, the East is called Samaria, and England is called Sodom. The prophecy is addressed to Rome. Read the chapter from this point of view, and see what a marvelous meaning it has.

Rome, like Jerusalem, has betrayed her high calling by worldliness and alliances with the great national world powers. Her elder sister, the Greek Church, is typified by the sterile Samaria. The Anglican Church, Rome's younger sister, is called Sodom because she has been abominably abused by heresy.

Rome's attitude toward the Anglican Church is expressed: "For thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride."

The prophecy ends with the statement to Rome, "Thou shalt remember thy ways and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant."

Of the Anglican Church it is said: "Behold this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." Which is historically true, alas.

The entire passage should be read. It specifies the errors of Rome in detail, and clearly demonstrates God's recognition of the Greek and Anglican Churches as being all of one family, sister churches. All with their characteristic faults, but each the heiress of God's promises, beloved of Him, and after punishment for their sins to be again united in God's good time.

Frances Helen,

Mother Superior of All Saints' Church.

"Of your charity pray for the soul of Frances Helen, Mother Superior of All Saints' Sisters of the Poor, who entered into rest July 21st." To speak of her life would be to tell of many a hidden influence of Divine grace; her suffering seemed to permit her to see many things more unselfishly than is given to most good people. Nearly twenty-one years of her life she gave to God's work in this country, and was enabled to see some fruit, the increase of religious houses in union with the community, the establishment of the affiliated house in America, the building of the convent in Baltimore, and many of God's children under her wise counsel and direction given to His service in the religious life under the All Saints' and other rules.

The offices of the dead were said in the Convent Chapel, Baltimore, on Friday night, and the Chaplain. Rev. R. H. Paine, said a low mass, then on Saturday morning the burial office was said at Mount Calvary Church by the Chaplain, followed by a Solemn Requiem Mass: Celebrant, Rev. G. H. Moffett; Deacon, Rev. J. Sherlock; Sub-Deacon, Rev. C. M. Murray. The burial was in St. John's churchyard, Waverly, where three of the community already lie. The Chaplain said the prayers at the grave. Nearly all of the All Saints' Sisters were able to be present, also the Sisters of St. Mary. The Mother Superior of St. Margaret's and one of the Sisters were present. Rev. Fr. Huntington, Sup. O. H. C., Rev. Fr. McGarvey, Sup. C. SSS., Rev. Drs. Brand and Upjohn, Rev. L. C. Rich, and many of the Baltimore clergy were present. Members of St. Mary's Chapel acted as pall bearers. Loving messages were received from London and the religious houses of other communities in this country.

Home Influence.

Instruct the children ever so carefully, even indoctrinate them daily with ideas so plain that the wayfaring child (who is by no means a fool) cannot err, and all your care and heed and learning and efforts will, in the majority of cases, be utterly wasted, because the children, day after day return to homes where religion is perhaps professed, but is practically unknown; where mothers have "tantrums," and fathers tempers, where meekness, if anything is either amiability or cowardice.

Sea-shore Home.

On Monday, June 21st, the Sisters went to Point Pleasant to open and get ready the house for the season. Toward evening the altar which has been given to the Home was blessed.

On Monday, June 21st, the first party went down, and the second on July 12th.

Mass is said daily in the temporary chapel, the Rev. Chas. Fisk, of the Associate Mission at Trenton, being responsible for the duty.

The Pennsylvania Railroad have courteously given reduced rates; various firms have renewed the generous kindness of former years, by donations of useful things

The middle of the season is always an anxious time financially. A good part of the money needed has still to come in. The Sisters give their time and labor freely; other kind friends ungrudgingly share part of holiday time in this service of love, but food must be bought and paid for, rent is due, and money is needed. It is always a matter of regret and astonishment that so many of St. Clement's people go off for long jaunts and idle pleasure without any gift to this parish work, content that others shall worry and toil and they be free. Selfish unconcern and indifference to a new duty and claim.

We are indeed grateful to friends new and old who have not forgotten.

Money and checks may be sent to John Douglass Brown, Jr., Treasurer, Drexel Building, or the All Saints' Sisters, 2034 Cherry street. We hope and pray that the time is not far distant when ground and money for a suitable building may be given for this very useful branch of our work.

The Famine in India.

There are 40,000,000 people in India who live on one meal a day in the best of times, and 80,000,000 who invariably go to bed hungry. In the great famine of 1877-78, 5,000,000 persons died of starvation. It is impossible at present to give statistics concerning the present awful famine, which, however, seems to be on the decline, with the in-coming rains. The government has been anticipating famine for years, and has been preparing for just such a time. The idea is to give employment somehow to the poor; in the central provinces alone, 100,000 wells for irrigation were dug, and enormous quantities of carrot seed have been planted, carrots being of the very quickest growth. Generous gifts of money have been coming from England to relieve the starving millions.

The Athanasian Creed.

Some New England Unitarians were recently converted by a sermon in which the priest quoted the Athanasian Creed. They said that the creed made the doctrine of the Holy Trinity clear to them, and were sorry that they had not heard it before. They had always believed as Unitarians that the Church was really teaching that there were three Gods; whereas the Athanasian Creed says:

"The Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost is all one: the glory equal, the majesty co-eternal."

New England Unitarians as they come to understand the Church's true teaching are very rapidly giving up their errors and being made members of the Church. It is more than likely that if the Athanasian Creed had been retained in the American Prayer Book the Unitarian heresy would never have arisen in New England, but multitudes would have passed at once from the darkness of Calvinistic heresy to the true light of the Catholic faith.

Parish Notes.

Four hundred and sixteen communions were made from June 20th to July 24th.

The clergy of the parish have, in addition to their own work and duty, ministered to persons belonging to other congregations when asked, the pastors being absent.

One of the interesting matters of the month has been the finding by members of the Egyptian Exploration Fund of a small page 5¾ inches by 3¾, containing eight sayings of our Lord. The date is said to be about 200 A. D.

It is impossible to proceed with any preparations for the crypt chapel or side altar until the work of the steam-heating plant is completed. The font will have to be removed to west end of church.

The Rev. W. C. Clapp and the Rev. C. C. Quin took their holiday in July.

The Rev. E. Wright will be absent during August.

The choir will have its vacation Sundays, August 22d, 29th, and September 5th. Hymns will be sung at the eleven o'clock mass, and a mission service at 8 P. M. Even-song will be said at 5 o'clock.

The attendance at both week-day and early masses on Sunday has been very good during the month, but at the other services there were not as many persons present as in former years.

We hope more flowers for the altar may be sent. Grateful thanks to those who have kindly remembered.

The contract for steam heating has been signed, and Messrs. Thompson Brothers will do the work. We are greatly indebted to Mr. Horace W. Sellers, who has prepared the plans and specifications.

The Bishop of the Diocese is in England, in attendance at the Lambeth Conference.

The corner-stone of St. Mary's chapel (St. Mark's Parish) was laid on Monday afternoon, June 28.

More than grateful thanks are due to the thoughtful parishioner who has given an offering to be used in meeting the interest on the mortgage of the Mission House, 2036 Cherry street. We hoped the request would reach the sympathy of more than one.

The Church garden is becoming more and more a pleasant spot through the labors of the parishioner who ungrudgingly gives time and loving care.

Judging by the number of items copied from ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE into other papers, some of the topics have more than a parochial interest and importance.

The Journal of the 113th Convention of Diocese of Pennsylvania has been printed and distributed. It contains an account of the proceedings, together with various reports.

We have received information of a legacy for St. Clement's from the will of Mrs. Lydia B. Wentz.

One of the most useful and sensible of charities is that of certain of our fellow-citizens who have obtained the use of vacant lots in various parts of the city as play-grounds for the children of the neighborhood. They are furnished with tents, swings, see-saws, and various other means for amusing the children. Our information as to the condition of the other plan, cultivating the vacant lots, does not lead us to be as enthusiastic about its success as are some of the daily papers.

Scolding.

The habit of scolding is more than a surface trouble; it indicates an interior lack of faith in God. The man or the woman who scolds when things go wrongly attempts to do what God alone can do, tries to take matters into his own hands, and to readjust the universe. Reproof is necessary sometimes, and stern rebuke, and the assertion of God's eternal truth; but scolding never. There is one other reason which may be given for rooting out this very prevalent habit, a practical reason—it doesn't do any good.

Evil Speaking.

It is surprising to think how much evil is accomplished in the world by means of the tongue.

Direct temptation is, of course, the most evident way in which harm is done by speech.

Slander is a method of injuring others often resorted to. The word "Devil" means the accuser.

Lying is almost always employed as a means of hiding some sin already committed; but it may also be used to cheat others, or to elevate one's own pride. Satan is called the father of lies.

VULGARITY IN CONVERSATION IS OFTEN A MEANS OF UNDERMINING VIRTUE, AND SO DESTROYING SOULS.

Gossip is generally a species of mild slander. It always indicates a low moral and spiritual state.

Idle conversation, while not necessarily sin and sometimes even a pleasant relaxation, should be guarded against as likely to run into gossip or slander if not watched.

Fault-finding and querrelousness indicate an undisciplined temper, and an entire lack of detachment—pride in short. They harm most by irritating others, and by encouraging selfishness.

The best remedies against sins of the tongue are:

1. Meditation on the fact that we must give account of every idle word at the day of judgment.

2. Keeping silence from all unnecessary conversation for a part of each day in honor of our Lord's silence before Herod.

The Sunday-school Picnic

On July 1st, all members of the parish who could, went to College Park on the Delaware for a day's outing, and every one seemed to enjoy the day very much. Between swings and merry-go-rounds, boating and eating, time traveled along most satisfactorily; though we did not get back to Philadelphia till after 9 at night. No one was drowned; no one was overcome by the heat; everybody kept their temper. It was altogether pleasant, and next year may it be more and even merrier.

The Acolytes' Fourth-of-July Trip.

The acolytes—a dozen or so of them, spent two or three pleasant days at Point Pleasant. They did everything successfully that they tried to do, boating, swimming, bathing, sleeping, eating, and having a good time generally. With it all, they were decidedly in vogue with the people at the house where they boarded, which shows that they didn't forget to be gentlemen. Sunburn for a time because, as it were, a badge of membership in St. Vincent's Guild.

Socialism and Christianity.

(1) "Socialism is founded on the principle that happiness depends primarily on circumstances." It tries to make men happier by improving their surroundings. But Christ put character first and circumstances after. A good man will be happy in evil circumstances; a bad man miserable in luxurious surroundings.

(2) "Socialism is founded on the faith that man's moral character depends primarily on his condition; Christianity, on the faith that man's condition depends primarily on his moral character." No doubt the two forces act and react upon each other, but the reform of the social organism would not necessarily carry with it the reform of the moral character. Christ first reformed the men, and then the men themselves reformed the circumstances. The history of the gradual abolition of slavery in the Christian society is the best instance of this.

(3) "Socialism appeals primarily to the man in his lower nature." A bath and food come first, education next, then a larger income. If religion is to have a place at all, that place is subordinate to physical necessities. Dr. Abbott admirably sums up the position of Christianity as opposed to either extreme:

"The bird is in prison in the egg. Conservatism would leave the egg unbroken, leave everything as it is and has been; it will get an addled egg. Radicalism would impatiently break the shell to let the imprisoned captive free; it will get a dead bird. Christianity broods the egg, and the bird breaks its own shell."—The Guardian.

From Our Exchanges.

We are glad to welcome the first number of "Notes by the Way," under the editorship of our friend, Rev. Dr. Clendenin.

The Cowley Evangelist for July is a particularly interesting number. The description of the day at Iona when the house was transferred to the Society includes a quotation from the Scottish Guardian:

"It is impossible to say what results may not follow this restoration of the religious life in Iona. In all probability the unfolding of these results will be a very gradual work; the spirit in which the Community has entered on its new possession is that of absolute waiting upon the Divine guidance; and wherever that guidance may lead, of one thing we may be sure—that its influence in the future will be aptly typified by the statue of St. Columba, which stands on the outer east wall of the Chapel, looking, with hand upraised in blessing, across the Sound to Mull, for these brethren, his followers in that life of the evangelical counsels which he made so glorious, have come like him to bless the islands of the Western sea."

The House consists of a Chapel, community-room, refectory, eleven cells, and the kitchen office. Priests desirous of making a retreat there can obtain permission from the Father Superior.

There is an account of the affiliated House of the All Saints' Sisters in Bombay, which consists largely of hospital and school work. With so much that is interesting and inspiring we regret the appearance of one or two "pious opinions." One may not "value" certain things for one's self and attain high spiritual powers, and yet be mistaken as to the effect these same privileges have on the lives and characters of others.

The William Halsey Wood altar, of which we published a cut in the June paper, is of stone and not wood, as was incorrectly reported in an esteemed New England Exchange.

"An attempt is now being made to spread the suggestion that we have got all we want. There are people who were regarded as extreme men twenty years ago or less, who are disposed to assert that all that they themselves do is English, and all that goes beyond their own practice Roman. Such people should ask themselves what they would have thought in the past of an attempt to separate the extreme from the moderate men. As there are doctrines to be more widely spread, so there are practices to be more generally revived, for instance, the Reservation of the Blessed Sacrament, the Anointing of the Sick, the use of Incense, strangely neglected considering its Scriptural authority. To carry on the work that has been going on so well during the last sixty years, it is necessary for all Catholics to stand shoulder to shoulder. There were many who hesitated about introducing the Eucharistic vestments themselves who stood nobly by those who were persecuted for doing so. There ought to be the same kind of feeling now. There may be mistakes and errors in judgment; there may be excess and defect; but the only clear distinction is between Catholics and Protestants, and all Catholics ought to stand together for the defense of the Catholic Faith and for the full expression of that Faith in Catholic Worship."—Church Times.

Alms, Spiritual and Temporal.

That the Church's duty to her poorer members has been a difficulty from the start is seen from Acts vi: 1, where it is clear that by the creation of the diaconate it was intended to separate ministrations of this sort from the ornamental and more spiritual ones of the priesthood. The mixing of the two spheres, temporal and spiritual, in such a way that those who receive aid think it somehow their due from the Church herself; so that they come to regard it as a sort of benefit conferred upon the Church if they submit to her spiritual ministrations, in return for which they look to her for certain money and goods. This is a great and constant danger. A wealthy church is likely to educate in this way a class of pauper parishioners, greedy and exacting, whose souls suffer while their bodies are fed and clothed. It is a sad sight to see a healthy, self-respecting and hard-working man or woman, who had been attracted to the Church first by a sense of spiritual need, gradually degenerating into this parasitic condition, through the mistaken zeal of those who mean to be benefactors. How can it be remedied? Certainly not by ceasing to give. That would be to run counter to the whole trend of historic Christianity. It would moreover be an injustice to those who rightly feel the duty of giving to their less prosperous brethren; it would choke off a necessary outcome of Christian life. One remedy is to make beneficiaries feel that, while alms-deeds are the certain product of Christian character, still the root and the more valuable thing is the character itself. The Church deals in the spiritual means by which that character can be obtained, while, as a Church, she may be unable to give one penny for their physical relief. "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee." Let Christian people, by individual or organized means, give out of Christ-loving hearts whatever they can, carefully, conscientiously. The poor need help, material, social, spiritual, especially the last; but spiritual food is not valued or assimilated if we give it, like a pill, enveloped in some sweet bodily comfort. Separate the two, and both are likely to be more real and more effective.

Eighty-seven Ransom envelopes were received during the month. Just one year ago THE MAGAZINE put out the suggestion that we ought to do something special for the payment of the ground rent. The Sunday before St. Clement's Day a special appeal was made for an offering at the Dedication Festival. At the Parish Tea the idea of the Crusade was suggested. In spite of some difference of opinion, the struggle has gone on with the help of those who lovingly enrolled themselves, "joined the crusade." God will surely bless them, as He has so evidently blessed the fighting for the ransom of this holy place. We still hope that the rest, those who have not joined or helped from love or with sacrifice of self, may take their part and pay their share. It is a free-will offering to God; the memory has been given for His greater glory.

The Work of the Summer.

The amount of money required for the new heating plant is $2,629, and the work of carpenter in addition will bring the total to $2,750. At least $2,500 has been set apart for the purpose, and the rest must be raised in some manner. The work has been carried on without any interference with the services.

It is an unusual thing to see such a careful and courteous set of men as we have had working in and about the Church. It is only to be expected that everything done will not suit every one, but, though it has not been an easy problem to solve, every effort has been made to obtain the best possible results. It has been necessary to remove some pews, and the number of sittings has been decreased. Eventually it is expected to move the font down to the west door, and erect an altar, money for which has been promised, at the head of the south aisle. This will make the church available for week-day services, as it ought to be.

It is really to be hoped that some plan for new confessionals may be prepared. If any one does not see the need, we have what we consider an unanswerable argument. Let them spend a whole hot summer in Philadelphia, and occupy the present ones four or five hours each week, or at any time of the year choose two consecutive days for spending eight or ten hours a day in them, their objections will be answered in a practical fashion.

Parish Notes.

The choir holiday lasts for three Sundays, August 22d, 29th and September 5th.

A reproduction of Murillo's painting of "The Immaculate Conception" was hung in the chapel on the vigil of the assumption of the B. V. M. It is the gift of one of our people in memory of her dear sister who is at rest.

We expect some time in the fall to obtain a picture for the church, a very good copy of "The Flagellation."

Various plans for utilizing the space under the sanctuary have been under consideration, and we hope to decide upon something by the time the present work is finished, to make this available for a crypt chapel.

An electric light has been placed on Appletree street (formerly Tower street). It is a decided improvement. We cannot say that we as gladly welcome the change of name of Friedlander and Claymont streets. It almost seems like moving into another neighborhood.

September 16th is the anniversary of Dr. Pusey's death. Some may wish to keep it in memory.

August 13th was the anniversary of the death of Miss Hannah P. Smith. A mass was said in the chapel.

The embroidery for the black dalmatic and tunicle has been finished. The set, as completed, was used at the solemn requiem for Mother Frances Helen, of All Saint's, at Mount Calvary, Baltimore.

The Philadelphia Times had a very satisfactory notice of the work of Mother Frances Helen, and the Holy Cross Magazine published an interesting account of her life.

Due notice of the beginning of the Cathechism and Infant School will be given. The Rev. Erskine Wright is in charge.

Next year, at Nashotah, three young men, members of this congregation, expect to be preparing for Holy Orders. Will you not pray that they may be faithful and persevere?

The first individual offering for the "new chapel to be dedicated to our Lady" comes from one at a distance, who will "ever cherish the warmest affection" for St. Clement's.

Tuesday, September 14th, is the exaltation of the Holy Cross, one of the festivals of obligation for Guild of the Holy Cross.

One of the English Protestant papers seems to think that the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is a secret society to advance "ritualism" (perhaps it is), and so puts young men on their guard.

Summer-Resort Churches.

Real Catholics ought to be willing to make sacrifices. And they ought to make sacrifices in summer as well as in winter. Some people seem to think that the devil takes a vacation as soon as the snow stops flying, and that God is weary of hearing prayers in hot weather. No doubt the devil reaps a great harvest in the summer months therefore.

And one way Catholics can make summer sacrifices is by being very careful to select some place to go during vacation where the Church is decently and loyally presented. There is no good result possible at one of these summer churches where an unbelieving vestry invites a different priest each Sunday as a kind of religious entertainment for the holiday crowd. At so many places the "Episcopal Church" is exhibited as a kind of attraction about on a par with the "good hotels, open air concerts and fine surf-bathing." Nor can any good come from going to hear old Dr. Blank, who reads morning prayer in a black stole and balloon surplice, and then preaches half an hour against the doctrine of Apostolic Succession, and ends up by inviting everybody, Turks, heretics and infidels, to stay and receive at the late communion. Old Dr. Blank represents the dry-rot of Protestant prejudice which, alas, has eaten like gangrene into the Church.

What the Catholic wants is the opportunity to go to mass, to receive the sacraments of the Church. Some one ought to get out an accurate directory of the Church privileges at American summer resorts, with red stars and warnings. But it would be better yet if some of our wealthier Catholic people would be willing to do for God what they do for themselves—that is, build a cottage for Him at the sea-side or mountains. This would be a work of true Christian charity, and a great means of advancing the glory of God.

Nothing is more blameworthy than the careless and selfish way Catholics select their summer resorts. They seem to consider everything else except whether God is there. Halt the time if they were bitten by a mountain viper, or strangled in the surf, they could not even be sure of a funeral service.

"Why and wherefore? Simple explanations of the ornaments, vestments and ritual of the Church," published by The Young Churchman Company, contains plain and reliable answers to many questions that people ask, or would like to ask.

Summer Hotels.

Unhappily the necessity of summer outings is upon us. Our worn-out civilization demands repose and relaxation. Men debilitated at desks, and women diseased by artificial living, demand the contact with nature. And the "nice, quiet, home-like" summer place is very rare.

Especially is the danger great to young people and children. It is almost impossible to discover a summer hotel where some corrupting influence is not found.

Absolutely nothing could be more disastrous than the loose way our young girls, just at the dancing age, are permitted to be whisked about by every glittering youth who comes along. Moreover parents ought to be frankly on their guard to prevent the formation of evil habits in their young children developed by contact with other children. The sins of childhood last through life, and leave deep scars on the memory. Children at the age of five years even are often led astray by bad companions at summer hotels. "Keep innocency," says the Psalmist. But summer hotels and innocency seldom coincide. Parents, beware!

The American Bishops have been very prominent during July in England, preaching, speaking and wearing all kinds of secular and ecclesiastical clothes. Several of them have already returned to their dioceses. The Church Times, in an account of a Sunday-school festival, at St. Albans, says: "The Bishop of Pennsylvania, in a thoughtful and stirring address, described the aims and conditions of Sunday-school work in the United States, and gave some very practical hints with regard to some branches of the work which might, with considerable profit, receive adoption in our own country. The Bishop's address was listened to with marked attention.

The Sister Adelaide Frances has been elected Mother Superior of All Saint's Sisters of the Poor. This, of course, must be confirmed by the Mother General. The prayers of our people are asked for her guidance in the new responsibilities; also, for the community. The installation cannot be before the return, sometime in October, of the Bishop of Maryland, who is the official visitor.

How to Keep Sunday.

A Catholic was once staying for a few weeks in a quiet village in the interior of New England. He was alone, but he found sufficient recreation amid the natural beauties of the region. Sundays he spent quietly reading, while his good host and hostess donned their best apparel and rode "to meetin'." He was rather amused at some of the distinctions observed by the farmer and his neighbors on the subject of "Sabbath-keeping." It was wrong to do farm work, such as haying, on Sunday, even if the grass were spoiling, but it was noticeable that farmers quite commonly made a special tour of inspection on that day, looking over the crops, calculating the gains and losses of the present season, and planning for the next. To read a novel was looked at askance, but anybody would pour over the sensational columns of the city newspaper and nothing was thought of it. Our friend, however, unwittingly gained the approbation of the villagers. They didn't know his book was a novel; and he didn't play croquet on Sunday. Some Catholics had been up there the previous summer, and had played croquet on the Sabbath, much to the grief of their country relatives and the scandal of the whole town. But this admirable young man, although a Catholic, evidently knew something of Christianity.

The case was one of pure prejudice and ignorance, we may say; and still we may hold that it was better to do as the young man did, notwithstanding the gloom and inconvenience of the puritanical Sabbath. People who are working toward a true solution of the Sunday question have three things to learn.

First. Sunday is not the Jewish Sabbath; its spirit should not be one of gloom, but of cheer: it is a feast day, the weekly feast of the resurrection, not a fast day.

Secondly, it is a day of rest. The Sabbath idea is retained in the Christian feast. But the interpretation is not the Jewish one. Rest implies cessation from ordinary toil, unless necessity compels. It is consistent with health-giving exercise of body and mind; but it does not sanction sloth, dissipation, over-eating, day-dreaming, reading of vicious or enervating literature. Rest, moreover, specially implies union with Him who is our true and everlasting rest. That is why attendance at mass and, still better, the making one's communion is a "bounden duty and service" for every Christian, every Sunday. By this sacred contact we begin to enter upon the rest of heaven. Sunday is the index of the Christian's eternal state.

But, thirdly, when we have learned true Catholic principles, we have to remember that they are to be applied often in the midst of surroundings which are not Catholic. St. Paul spoke about meat causing his brother to offend, but in our day the equivalent might be croquet, or bicycling, or tennis, or staying away from matins, or going to drive—or any one of a thousand harmless, beneficial or at least excusable actions, which may be stumbling blocks to offend weak brethren. Granted, it is most difficult to decide in many cases what ought to be done; still one ought to recognize the responsibility and try. We often think of the distinguished bishop of our communion who took a pledge of total abstinence because he knew one poor, weak man to whom he had reason to believe his example would be a help.

The One Thing Needful.

Churches are built for the worship of God, who is eternal, and the worship must be a constant factor in man's life. The clergy are ordained to minister the sacraments and teach the truths of religion. Most people would agree to these statements, yet Philadelphia, in the summer, tells a sad tale—churches closed, with the exception of supplied Sunday services; rectories, parsonages closed; no provision for the spiritual care of the unfortunate sick, dying, dead. People in affliction hunting the town for a priest, or getting on without one.

In a little while these churches will all be busy again. Coal, clothing, shoe, beneficial recreation, singing, sewing, cooking, dancing, dressmaking clubs—this the main idea of church work; baptisms and Sunday-schools to give a religious aspect. These are all well enough in their way, but the lesson of St. Martha's Day ought not to be lost: "Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful; Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her." Mary "sat at Jesus' feet and heard His Word."

St. Clement's is not interested in any new philanthropic experiments. It exists for the worship of God during the whole year, the offering of the mass. A priest may be found every day or night for baptisms, confessions, holy communion, burials, visiting the sick and dying. The church is open for prayer all day. This is our idea of religion, this our aim and purpose—to prepare souls for eternity

The Lambeth Conference.

The Archbishop of York struck the true note of the needs of the religious world when he said that we needed "an age of the Holy Ghost." Others would persuade us that we need "an age of Mary," or the particular prayers and protection of the holy spouse, St. Joseph. The Archbishop of Canterbury, in the closing mass of the Conference at S. Paul's Cathedral, says: "It is with this thought that I would desire to break up the assembly of Bishops of our Communion—that we go away pledged to endeavor to abide in Christ, certain of the great truth that Christ will abide in us." An American Bishop writes: "All was most interesting and encouraging."

A pilgrimage to Glastonbury followed the closing of the Conference. The Bishop designate of Bristol says: "We meet to-day in fairyland, the fairyland of the earliest Christianity in Britain. In fairyland we know better than to spoil our enjoyment by curious inquiry. Our wisdom is of the heart, not of the head. We glide along the grassy glades, whispering softly to ourselves, that of all credulous people on the face of the earth the most credulous are the skeptic; that it is a more difficult and less worthy effort of intellect to disbelieve than to believe. To-day we do neither; we accept and we enjoy. There flits before us the form of one weary with long travel by land and by sea, leaving at last his storm-tossed boat and planting his feet and hawthorn staff on dry land once more, and our fairy guide tells us, 'This man went unto Pilate and begged the body of Jesus.'"

The Encyclical of "the Archbishops, Bishops, Metropolitan and other Bishops of the Holy Catholic Church in full communion with the Church of England" is a worthy and dignified document. It deals with many matters of social and religious importance.

Attention has been called to the fact that this was the largest assembly of Bishops since the Vatican Council.

Kind friends have lovingly kept the altar supplied with beautiful flowers.

The Priest's Business.

If a man were a lawyer, a physician, or a merchant, it would be taken for granted that he knew his profession and understood his business. No one would think of entering his office and instructing him on the proper method of doing his work.

It would be conceded that the professional man understands what he is about. The person who consulted him would probably take his advice blindly and follow it to the letter. Or at least such a person would never think of offering gratuitious criticisms.

But it is different in the case of the Priesthood.

In the case of Priests people never think of the years of study at college and in the seminary. They forget that the man has worked in theology and practice, in doctrine and ritual—in short, that he understands his business. Neither the grace of Holy Orders, nor the fact that the man is the ambassador of Christ and a steward of the mysteries of God, prevents their stinging criticisms.

Man, woman and child all understand how to do his work better than the Priest himself. And the worst of it is they do not have the politeness even to hinder themselves from telling the Priest so. The subject in question may have been the Priest's study for years. Perhaps he understands every aspect of it. And yet the hasty thought, the sudden suggestion of every potterer in religion, is better than the Priest's.

This is one of the Priest's crowns of thorns. He smiles at the violent vestryman and the bitter-tongued lady a discreet and conciliatory smile—but he has thoughts just the same.

The Archbishop of Finland.

One of the noteworthy incidents of the Queen's Jubilee and the Lambeth Conference was the presence, officially, of a dignitary of the Russian Church. Not only was the Archbishop present on the important occasions, but also assisted at solemn mass and even-song at various London churches. He made a visit to Cowley on the eve of the Visitation of B. V. M., attended solemn even-song at the Church, afterward "visited the mission house and inspected the chapel, the library and the cells. After joining the community at their evening meal in the refectory," an address was read by the Father Superior, to which the Archbishop replied.

The whole visit has made a deep impression in England and Russia, many who have the cause of reunion hoping that a better understanding and friendly intercourse may help onward the cause of inter-communion.

The Churches of England and Russia.

"As an evidence of the desire for a better understanding between the Churches of England and Russia, the announcement that the Holy Synod are about to take active steps is most welcome. It is stated that four students who have qualified in the Ecclesiastical Academy are to be sent to this country, to study closely the state of affairs here, and to provide our ecclesiastical authorities with information respecting the Greek Orthodox Church. In our opinion, the promotion of a clear understanding between two organized branches of the Catholic Church is more worthy of the efforts of our Bishops than the expression of a loose kind of sympathy with movements which have yet to prove their Catholic motive and character. The expansion of the Russian Empire, involving, as it does, the extension of the Russian Church, gives to that Church an increasing importance which will one day make it a leading factor in Christian politics. In a close communion between Anglicanism and the Græco-Russian Church lie possibilities of vast enterprises for the spread of the Christian faith. Everything which can be done to promote so great an object should by all means be encouraged and forwarded. What is immediately needed is a literature throwing light upon the history of the Church in Russia, and pointing out the fundamental agreement underlying the diversities of view characteristic of different mental types. Why should there not be started an organ, resembling the defunct Revue Anglo-Romaine, for the interchange of ideas?"—Church Times.

At the Lambeth Conference, a committee, consisting of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the Bishop of London, was appointed to confer personally, or by correspondence, with the Orthodox Eastern Patriarch, the Holy Governing Synod of Russia and the chief authorities of the various Eastern Churches, with a view to consider the possibility of securing a clearer understanding of establishing closer relations between the Churches of the East.

The association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom asks the prayers of the faithful and offering of the mass on its anniversary, 8th September (Nativity B. V. M.). The society is forty years old. The only obligation is the use of the special collect. Those desiring to join can send their names to the Rev. A. J. Arnold, Secretary, Media, Pa. There are no dues.

"En Route."

True religion does not consist in mere sensations — feeling, exaltation, spiritual emotion, expansion of the soul.

A recent French writer in a book entitled En Route attempts to describe the experiences of a man who is converted from an evil life to the Catholic faith. It is a curious and remarkable story, and contains much truth. No doubt there are always extraordinary experiences and sensations for the soul which is touched by Divine Grace. But to conceive of all religion as being mere emotion and feeling and mystical experiences is a great mistake. And this is the error of En Route.

The true fruit of faith is work—the work of serving God, the work of self-discipline and the work of charity for one's neighbor. "The devils also believe and tremble," says S. James. "By their fruits ye shall know them," says our Lord. The judgment will be made on the basis of our love to our neighbor—not on the basis of spiritual feelings.

It is very doubtful if En Route would ever have been written if the author had had a longer experience in the perseverance in faith. The period of a first confession and first communion is always one of vivid excitement; but the hard and long experience of perseverance, through periods of adversity and spiritual dryness, is the true test of real religion. "They who shall preserve to the end, shall be saved."

It is reported that the author of En Route has become a Trappist monk. It is a pity he did not take the vow of silence before writing his book, which is defaced by several passages, besides presenting a false view of religion itself.

It is not generally known that organ playing is not the only accomplishment in which Mr. Gaff is an adept. He is not one of those who believe in cultivation of the artistic to the total exclusion of the physical. He is quite an expert at tennis; but, sometimes, this exercise is too mild to relieve the stores of accumulated energy requiring liberation. This was, probably, the case the other day when he mounted his wheel for a spin and, starting from his home in Clifton, Delaware county, rode to Atlantic City and back, via Philadelphia and Gloucester, reeling off about one hundred and forty miles for the day's trip. To a person who knows very little about cycling, this does not seem to be an insignificant feat for a man whose occupation is organ playing.

"It seems like the 'old times' of the religious life to hear of Sister Katharine Ruth, of the All Saints' Sisterhood, devoting her life to religious art—painting, designing, carving—and yet never missing an office in choir or her duties in the community. She has no grand studio, only one of the cells in the Mother House, Margaret street, London. But her work is the real outcome of her life. The Church Times recently said of one of her pictures on exhibition in London, the Blessed Virgin as a child: 'The face is in every respect lovely, and the execution perfect.' Other original paintings by her are a very beautiful Crucifixion, a Mater Dolorosa, a Sponsa Mystica and a St. Mary Magdalene. Very satisfactory photographs of them may be had, for about two dollars apiece, from the Berlin Photographic Company, 14 East 23d street, New York. The pictures are distinguished by the Sister's name before she entered religion—Catherine Weekes. It is a pleasure to be able to recommend these pictures as thoroughly devout and elevating."—Holy Cross Magazine.

The Angels.

"Michaelmas day is one of those festivals of the Church which carries our thoughts right away from this visible scene to the great unseen world beyond, and therefore, in an age of material progress and great pride of life, the thoughts which it suggests are more than ever valuable, and not lightly to be passed by, as if the angels were the fairies of our childhood, and their ministry an ecclesiastical sentiment; our religion, as we have received it, is the religion of the unseen God. His working is unseen; His dwelling place is unseen; the home He promises to us is unseen; and therefore, as we might expect, revealed religion from end to end tells us that without feet we press the earth, but with our head we touch the heavens; that man is surrounded by two sets of influences—on one side there is the earth, with all that appeals to sense; on the other, there's heaven with all its mysteries, forces and agencies ministering to His eternal welfare."—Newboldt "Counsels of Faith," etc.

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER, 1897.

The Magazine.

The MAGAZINE has now been entered as second class matter at the Philadelphia Post-office. This gives it a reasonable permanence. Judging from the number of articles that have been reprinted, some kind words spoken of it, we judge that it is not without value to some outside those who are associated with and interested in St. Clement's; we ought to have a larger subscription list, and we would wish that the support might commend itself to those who appreciate our efforts.

Practical Reverence.

One sometimes wonders how the minds of people are constructed, that there should be such a disparity between profession and practice. Not to attempt to cover a subject which is manifestly too wide for these columns, we would call attention to the familiar instance in which those who profess a belief in the real presence of Jesus Christ in His blessed sacrament, so often by their conduct seem to ignore or deny it. One can understand that a child, even though well taught the true doctrine, so far as years will admit, might omit, through heedlessness, those marks of outward reveretnce which custom prescribes. We do not like to see a boy or girl walk past the altar after the words of consecration without bending the knee, but still it can be understood. The case is very different with an adult who has known catholic truth for years. For such an one to come into or leave the church, while the blessed sacrament is on the altar, without genuflection, betokens either sinful ignorance, or sinful laziness, or cowardice. It will not do to plead that works of reverence are, after all, only relative, that in Greece or in Egypt, for instance, it is not customary to genuflect, and that no disrespect is intended. We are stating the case of intelligent persons, who know quite well what the courtesy of God's house requires, and who in a matter of secular politeness would be punctilious to a degree.

Parish Notes.

The walls and ceilings of the corridor of the Parish building and of the Choir room have been cleaned, and two coats of kalsomine applied. It is somewhat of an improvement.

The floors also have been somewhat improved, we hope.

There has been a very bountiful supply of flowers for the altar during the month.

The Bishop of the Diocese is expected to return early in October.

The offices and instructions of the various guilds of the Sodality of St. Clement's will be held this month as announced in the kalendar.

The Rev. W. C. Clapp will act as Chaplain of St. John's Guild.

The Rev. C. C. Quin will act as Choir Chaplain.

The Rev. H. Parrish has joined the "Companions of the Holy Saviour."

Mr. Henry Vaughan, of Boston, who designed the altar and choir screen has been asked to prepare sketches for an altar at the head of the south aisle; he expects to submit a drawing shortly.

Mr. Horace W. Sellers to whom we are so greatly indebted for the plans and specifications for our steam heating, is now preparing sketches for the Crypt Chapel. We hope to make a beginning very soon. It is expected that we may be able to use some of the St. Clement's stones—one especially would seem to be suitable for a credence.

The month has been very busily spent in cleaning and repairs, much work that never shows, and people take it for granted; the accumulation of years makes it a very expensive process.

Ornaments, Crucifix, candlesticks, lamp, lace, linen will be needed for the side altar; perhaps it may appeal to the love of some to supply these.

The total amount available at present for the fitting up of the Lady Chapel is $268.52; of this amount $1.50 is all that has been contributed for the purpose; the rest is made up of money given the clergy for various extra ministrations to people, and which is devoted to this fund. In this connection, we would say that the only money available for sacred vestments for the parish is from wedding fees; both of these sources of revenue are ordinarily applied to luxuries for ministers' wives.

The various repairs have been paid for with money received from a few people to assist those who are out of work.

It is earnestly requested that all who desire to be considered members of the congregation, and to receive the regular ministrations of the clergy will present letters of transfer and promise to give, as they are able, for the support of the parish.

Pew rents are due in advance October 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the Vestry room, Monday, October 4th, 3-4 P. M. to receive payments of pew rents, and for renting pews and sittings.

Pew rents are several hundred dollars in arrears.

Bishop Hall, of Vermont, in a Missionary sermon at Ely Cathedral, says: "Be ready to give yourselves to a celibate life in order not simply that you may serve more cheaply—although why should the Church be taxed to support the missionaries' wives and children, or insure the missionaries' lives?"

Perhaps that is the best answer to frantic appeals from the Church Mission House and affecting stories of the hardships of the "widows and orphans of the clergy."

It seems slightly inconsistent to hear, as we often do, that the wife does not belong to the congregation, and yet under altered circumstances the same persons accuse the Church of neglect of duty for not providing a support. The families are personal entirely, and ought not to be a charge on the Church, any more than other families.

The Holy Cross Magazine gives the following quotation from a recently published book, "Rich and Poor." It is an answer to the question, why the Church has not done more to supply the poor with one thing that they most need.

"I believe it to be largely because the ministers of religion (and here I refer to all creeds alike) have allowed the spirituality of their work to be swamped by the material needs around them.'

"If church-workers would really keep foremost in their minds the primary importance of their influence upon character, they, more than any others, should be able to build up broken lives and strengthen the feeble. As it is, they, like others, have come to regard hunger as the worst of all evils, to be satisfied at the cost of any other consideration, moral or spiritual.

"'Feed a man first, and then convert him' is practically the maxim among many of them; but experience shows that unless the conversion precedes or accompanies the feeding, they have only made a cadger of him. I have heard it said that the Church fails in relief work because it does not believe in God, i. e., it has not sufficient faith in the power which makes for righteousness, and puts its trust too much in almsgiving."

The Sword of St. Michael.

(SUGGESTED BY A SERMON IN "LOGIC AND LIFE," BY CANON SCOTT HOLLAND.)

O great St. Michael, Prince of the Most High,
How dost thou flash like lightning from the sky,
Hurling thy glory down to men below—
Thy glittering spear uplifted 'gainst the foe!
'Tis Raphael paints thee in thy awful scorn—
Thy warrior-life, thy zeal, defiance-born,
As with one touch of well-poised, piercing steel
Thou mak'st thy foe in downward ruin reel!

And Perugino bids thee meekly stand,
Waiting, thy flaming sword and shield in hand;
A belted youth, greaved, fair, at ease, and still,
Ready to carry out thy Monarch's will.
See how the veils fall off the bad, the base,
Before the great Archangel's radiant face;
His smiting touch reveals what Dante saw,
A vision dark which fills the soul with awe.

For lo! beneath the mastery of his eye
All evil things, unmasked, go creeping by,
Stript of their fairy shapes and shifting hues—
Sin's wounds, and many a self-inflicted bruise.
Soldiers and sufferers Christian men must be,
Both sword and cross are meant for you, for me:
We walk the world, by turns, in shame and tears,
In glee, defiance, and devoid of fears.

Alone in meekness, we may truly know
True victory over self and darksome foe:
Only by stooping in our daily course,
Gain grace of courage and its conquering force.
Still great St. Michael shapes our earthly life,
Leader and captain in the stress and strife:
Still is astir within our hearts his breath,
Inspiring now and at the hour of death.

W. C. D., in Church Times.

The Choir returned on Sunday, September 12th, and are already hard at work rehearsing new music.

Education.

"Education is the most important department of the self maintaining activity of the Church of Christ. By education the Church takes possession of her place and share in the coming age: by it she hands on to the minds and hearts and hands of another generation the treasure of faith and love, and duty which came to her nineteen centuries ago, and of which she is the trustee in the interest of humanity. If she had nothing better in her keeping than a human speculation about God, there would be a certain degree of immodesty and violence in the uninterrupted effort to cramp and mould the otherwise free thoughts and aspirations of a future time within the narrow formulæ of the past. But to possess a Revelation from heaven is to be already in advance of the highest efforts of human religious genius; and to communicate it is the first duty which its guardians owe to human ignorance and to human suffering (Ps. 28: 5-8). Education, then, is necessary, not merely to the well being, but to the very existence of the Church: could she cease to educate, she would cease to live; she would die out from among men by a process of inevitable exhaustion. And if the Church of Christ is to educate to any purpose, Jesus Christ must be just as much the foundation of her teaching in the school as of her teaching in the pulpit; He must be the one foundation on which she builds, whether it be the fabric of intellectual truth or the fabric of moral character."—Dr. Liddon, "Special Occasions," p. 229.

The Marriage Relation.

"Marriage is not a union of souls; it is the mating of two persons in one flesh. Two souls may be joined, and yet there be no marriage; marriage there may be, and yet no union of souls. Marriage is the creation of a new earthly relation. Hence the mere cessation of sympathy no more annuls marriage than it annuls any other family relation. It is very desirable that the son should reverence the father, and that the father should sympathize with the son. But the son does not cease to be a son because the father is unworthy of reverence, nor does the father cease to be a father because he is unable to sympathize with his son. So it is of the utmost moment that husband and wife love and honor each other; but they do not cease to be husband and wife because they cannot love and honor. Love and honor make the result of the marriage blessed, but they do not constitute the relation."—Abbott.

Guild of St. Lawrence.

The alms-box of the Guild was forcibly broken open and robbed about September 10th by some sneak thief. It is not likely that much money was taken, for an examination of the contents only a short time before had revealed but a few scattered pennies and an envelope which seemed to be empty.

During the summer the funds of the Guild have rapidly diminished. The Employment Committee bought considerable quantities of cloth, which was cut up for garments and given out to women who needed help. The sewing was paid for at liberal rates, and the garments thus made are sold at public and private sale to deserving applicants for low prices. This seems to be one of the best ways of helping people. It gives employment, and thus preserves self-respect; it graduates the pay according to the quality and amount of work done; it furnishes a product which is saleable, and thus secures a partial return for money expended.

But the replenishing of the treasury is more than ever a serious question, and the Guild again asks those Christians who can give money, or its equivalent, to consider whether the Guild may not be a suitable agent for their beneficence.

It has been suggested that an account of expenditures as well as of receipts would edify and interest. There is no doubt that this is so, and it is hoped to make some such report at intervals. To tell a plain account of cases aided would generally violate a privacy which should be sacred. To manufacture a pathetic tale, replete with pet names, and punctuated with tear blots might bring in the money— it generally does —but we submit that it is more theatrical than Christian. To give the bare statistical facts would be as interesting as statistics usually are. These are the difficulties, but an attempt will be made.

Are there no volunteers to do visiting in the various Wards? There is plenty of territory.

The Parish Banner.

The banner, St. Clement, has apparently been in constant use for many years. It has become so shabby and dilapidated that it can no longer serve its proper purpose.

The parish banner ought to be the handsomest of any; rich materials, beautiful embroidery, precious stones are needful to manifest the true dignity and worthy purpose. A new one would be a suitable gift as a thanksgiving or memorial.

"Summerism."

It is a disease that affects the whole character. It is a "cult," which has its own exclusive devotees; its own particular form of worship, and many associates who give to it more or less countenance and support. Whether it attacks or possesses a person, it is serious.

One of the prominent New York papers calls attention to one very dangerous symptom:

"Not such a very long time ago the yearly holiday was a period of rest, quiet, change, a time of freedom from excitement, of simple pleasures and amusements. It is hardly so now. The same kind of life that has worn out the nerves during the winter carried on among indiscriminate masses of people in mammoth hotels by sea and on mountains. Late hours, tired mornings, exciting nights; one plan after another to keep up the terrible strain. A wild unrest, a deep dissatisfaction with one's proper lot and portion; a shirking of duty and responsibility; a careless, selfish placing of burdens on other people, to permit longer holiday, more freedom."

The spiritual dangers are even more serious. Persons calmly decide on a place that they fancy, make all their plans with hardly a thought whether they will be able to attend to their religious duties, the things that are needful for their soul's health; they blame everyone but themselves; they return, it may be, with much less relish for these necessary things; they struggle for a while, and then imagine that they cannot go on any longer.

Features of this "ism" are selfishness, unreality, carelessness, love of excitement, aversion to serious purposes and irksome duties.

SUGGESTIONS AND RESOLUTIONS.

1. Only necessary vacation, not prolonged junketings.
2. Quiet places, simple recreations, sufficient change.
3. Religious privileges necessary to cultivate the supernatural life of the soul.

The Church Times gives the following very sensible and accurate reply to a correspondent: The title "Father," as applied to the clergy, has existed from the very beginning, and arose doubtless from the personal attachment which existed between a pastor and his flock. In more modern times it became restricted to members of communities living under rule, but even so it is a common custom to apply the term to secular priests, who are naturally regarded as the heads of the spiritual families residing in their parishes.

The Choir Vacation.

The present method of granting the choir a vacation—that is, simultaneously relieving the entire force—is radically different from the plan formerly employed of excusing the boys for a month, while retaining the men to sing the services, and then, vice versa, relieving the men for a similar period, and carrying on the services with boys only. It is true that the old plan made it possible to have some of the choir always present; and, for this reason, it may, perhaps, have been more popular with those who know or care little or nothing about music, but who, having grown accustomed to the presence of the choir, dislike to be without it. From another standpoint, however, there can be no comparison between the two methods. Though there are naturally many absences during the summer, and the attendance falls off considerably, yet the boys are never all away at one time, nor are the men; and the present arrangement consequently enables us to maintain a complete choir in which all the harmonic parts are represented, and with which the plainer and less elaborate of our Masses can be creditably rendered; whereas, the old plan made it necessary to use, during the absence of the men, "scrub" services and "patch-work" Masses which were extremely unsatisfactory, not to say torturing, to the ears of any present who happened to be musically inclined. A similar statement might also be made of the situation when the boys were absent and the men on duty; for, though there are Masses to be obtained specially adapted to men's voices, yet in midsummer we never have a force of men sufficient to attempt anything of this kind, and would, therefore, be compelled to use mutilated services, relentlessly mangled to bring them within the possibilities of the situation.

Another advantageous aspect of the new method is that it brings the choir members together after a relaxation experienced by all at the same time; so that, presumably, all return rested, invigorated, and inspirited after this little break in the year's routine, and possessed of an inclination to resume work with energy and spirit, instead of returning in "squads," the first squad that resumes being again exhausted and dispirited by the time the second one comes back to join it and complete the force.

We were careful to insert above, the word "presumably," because there are some temperaments that appear to be not only unbenefited by relaxation from the routine of work, but actually affected injuriously, as they return unsettled and discontented. We think, however, that there are few, if any, such in our choir at the present time. There are even those so interested in their choir work that they, personally, would prefer to have the full choral services continue without break. We believe, therefore, that the choir vacation will be a real benefit to our members, and that they will resume work recuperated and inspirited after the trying duties of the hot summer, and come back fresh and interested, and ready to prosecute with vigor preparation for the busy fall and winter.

Russian Ikons.

An ikon is a half-length picture, or, to speak with more exactness, a pictorial representation of the Virgin, or of Jesus, or of some of the many saints of the Russo-Greek Church. Ikons are usually square, and vary greatly both in size and quality. The background of the figure is usually gold leaf or vivid yellow.

There is an ikon on the wall of every room in every Russian house, be it an imperial palace or a prison, a luxurious hotel or wayside inn, a fœtid peasant's hut or a woman's sumptuous boudoir. Nor does the orthodox Russian leave his religion behind him (as do the orthodox of so many other peoples) when he leaves his home and goes to his counting house or shop. Go to buy velvet; on a corner of the wall above the chiffon-strewn counter you will see an ikon. Step inside the nearest fishmonger's, above the marble slab heaped with slippery beauties hangs an ikon. There is probably in Russia no peasant's house without at least one simple ikon. They are manufactured in incredible numbers, and are the sole industry of one entire province. Men, women and children make, or help to make, the sacred pictures, and do as little else in the way of work as is consistent with existence itself. After the ikon has been blessed by a priest it is sacred. A peasant buys it and enshrines it on the wall of his room, high up, where it may easily be seen by all who cross the threshold. In Ivan's home bread is never broken, nor soup swallowed, but that each one who is about to partake, or who has partaken, bows to the ikon and crosses himself. On a night preceding a fete day a lamp filled with holy, or consecrated oil, is lighted and placed before at least one ikon in every house.—In Joyful Russia.

The Church Standard in a recent article on Fresh Air Work, referred to the work at Point Pleasant, carried on by All Saints' Sisters of the Poor.

Steam Heat.

This important addition for our comfort has been accepted, having stood a satisfactory test. We are under very great obligations to Mr. Horace W. Sellers, for his interest and work in accomplishing this matter. His careful study of the needs of the building has brought about the desired result.

The excellence of the work itself is due to a member of our own congregation, Mr. Charles G. Reeves, who had the oversight of the work for Messrs. Thompson Bros. Most of the radiators are for the direct process, but the registers in the aisles supply indirect; a current of cold air brought from outside and conducted over the steam coils, will help to ventilate the building.

The Church, Parish Building, and Clergy House are heated from the same central fire.

There are two boilers in the northwest corner of the Church cellar, either or both of which may be used. The heat can be put on any one or all the buildings. The cost of all:

Steam plant,	$2,629
Alterations, etc.,	161
	$2,790

There are some preliminary expenses, the amount of which has not been ascertained.

The Sea-shore Home.

A very handsome crucifix, candlestick, and vases have been given for the use of the Home; they were made by the Gorham Co., of New York. "To the glory of God and in memory of Elizabeth Miles."

The house has been full all summer, and we are thankful we have not to make an appeal to supply a deficit; $1,690 has been received from all sources. Friends have been very kind to us in this matter. The daily Mass has been kept up all the summer, through the kindness of various priests, especially the Rev. C. Fiske, of the Associate Mission, Trenton. Lodging and meals being given by some kind friends in Point Pleasant.

The people of Point Pleasant and Bay Head have been very generous in their gifts; about $250 has been received in various ways. It would be a great advantage if there was a proper house situated nearer the Church and ocean. We are certain it will come in time; the influence of a religious house with Chapel and daily Mass must prove a blessing. There have been no serious accidents or illnesses during the summer, and many have been benefited.

The Catechism.

The Catechism opened on Sunday, September 19th, and we hope that the same good feeling and enthusiasm which was shown then will continue throughout the year.

An effort will be made by means of regular visiting to keep in attendance all children on the rolls.

The method of San Sulpice will be used as during the last two years, but this year we hope to lay stress on Diligences.

Teachers and all scholars who are confirmed expect to attend the 7 o'clock mass and receive the Holy Eucharist, on October 3d, with special intention for the Catechism.

All persons connected with the parish, who have children under their care, should consider it their moral duty to send such to the Catechism.

Parents of those children who are at present on the roll are asked to see that their children attend the 9.15 mass on Sunday, whenever possible.

The Infant School has begun its sessions with good attendance—quite surpassing the older school.

Work for Men by Men.

Father Field in his Ash Wednesday Retreat addresses dwelt with emphasis on the "Priesthood of the Laity," and all who know him will remember how he strove to embody this idea in his work among men. To get men to consecrate their own lives to God, and then to go out in the strength of that consecration and win other men to the service of Jesus Christ; this should never be a neglected side of church activity. In many ways a layman can do what a priest cannot; at least he can do it in a way and at a time impossible to the priest, who has so many objects to divide his attention. The layman can speak and work without being open to the charge of professionalism; he can approach his fellowman on the basis of a common life and common interests.

Shall we attempt to do something along the line suggested in the foregoing words this year? Will St. John's Guild lend its latent energies to some such scheme for Christian work? Let us say our prayers about it, especially the "Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire."

Mr. H. Climenson, who is a member, of St. Clement's, is one of the "Colts" who earned praise in the recent cricket match with the Gentlemen of England.

67 Ransom envelopes received during the month; less than half of those who promised.

If the definite promises for St. Clement's Day had fairly covered the amount still needed, an arrangement could have been honestly made to take up the ground rent on October 1st, when the half yearly interest is due, but the idea only commended itself to a few. So we must patiently wait until all the money has been given. We, of course, expect that the falling off during the summer months will be made good, because the Crusaders made their promise to God—impossibility and death are the only release from the promise of a sum each month. Then those whose summer has been a prolonged holiday will be giving in addition as much as they have been spending on their own pleasures. Only two months now to the end of the time—there is need of prayer, self-denial effort.

Hall Caine's book, "The Christian," is now published. In many ways it is a disappointment. The whole treatment of the religious life is confused and misleading. He has succeeded in depicting that particular type of mind and character very imperfectly. The climax of the story is absurd, not pathetic.

Members of the congregation seem to be returning from their various summer outings.

We hope that the special efforts of the past year may accomplish the end in view—the payment of the ground rent. It would be matter for greater thankfulness if all had joined in the effort, even if some could not see the necessity of it, yet a common purpose for many people is a gain in every way, and this was surely no unworthy selfish one. The failure of any person to take part, unless due to circumstances outside of their control, was to risk failure or lack of earnest interest in other important matters. Many have not given as God has apparently prospered them, nor as far as parochial activities are concerned, have they given to other purposes of which they approved. We hope on St. Clement's Day all may give generously that all may know and feel that all share in the blessings.

Guild of St. Lawrence.

Not all the visitors have returned, but the visiting lists will soon be put in shape, and the year's work will begin.

As heretofore, the Employment and Clothing Committees will conduct sales each Monday afternoon in the Sunday-school room.

See a brief article in this number entitled "Bags."

Again it must be said that if people about town, some near, some far, who hear of and advertise our charitable spirit among all sorts of needy persons, would be equally zealous in sending contributions, our funds would not dwindle as they do. "A lady" sends a tramp here for food, but forgets to recommend the applicant by sending her name. "A gentleman" informs our applicant that he has but to come to us and probably we will have the particular kind of job which would pay him best. The man "just out of the hospital" is informed that we have on hand for gratuitous distribution, a stock of shoes and underwear to suit all comers; a little later in the day the man who has walked all the way from Wilmington somehow finds his way to us among the first, hearing that we are "very charitable," and will most likely give him a "little assistance." These are frequent cases. We try to be conscientious in considering every application; but we simply cannot with means and time at our disposal, undertake to cover the city and deal with out-of-town arrivals. We are generally constrained to refer such people to some general relief society. Cases which fall within the generous limits which we mapped out for ourselves last year as "aggressive territory," we shall, as heretofore, consider to have the first claim upon our attention. Surely this is a reasonable view of the matter, and we ask those anonymous and non-contributing friends who send people to us to make a note of it. Of course nothing we have said is to be construed as showing unwillingness to administer the contributions of those who make known special cases, in any locality, according to our ability.

Earnest thanks are again due to the kind hearts and willing hands that send in, from time to time, thousands of cancelled stamps, to be disposed of for the Guild's benefit.

We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Bags.

Not money bags, but old clothes bags. Old clothes or any thing that you may wish to dispose of, and that can be carried in a good-sized bag of strong cloth. "Anything" means what it says; the bag is for the convenience of those who are clearing up a closet, a room, a storage trunk, or a whole house, and who would be so glad if some one would just take these things—clothes, books, magazines, scraps of cloth, bits of ribbon, etc., etc.,—out of the way, things of some possible use, and therefore too good to be consigned at once to the ash barrel, but which are not wanted lying around any longer.

Bags of the necessary sort for this purpose are being prepared by the Guild of St. Lawrence, and anyone who would like one should send a postal card requesting it. A bag will be sent—more than one, if needed—and then called for when ready for removal. The contents will be disposed of for the benefit of those who will appreciate them.

St. Clement.

In days of yore through Rome's fair streets
A saint of God was dragged to die,
Willing to suffer bonds and death,
Sooner than his dear Lord deny.

A Bishop was that holy Saint
Clement by name, right valiantly
He fought the fight of faith below
Until God called him forth to die.

And down to Pontus ancient isle
The Saint of God was hurried fast,
Around his neck an anchor bound,
And in the sea to drown was cast.

Down, down, into the deep he sank,
That valiant Martyr, Saint so blest,
His body lies beneath the flood
His soul in Paradise doth rest.

He rests, but, on the last great day
The sea shall render up her dead,
And Christ in heaven's high courts above
Shall place a crown upon his head.

O happy rest, O sweetest peace,
For him whose name whil'st yet he strove
Was written in the Book of Life;
Laid up before God's Throne above.

O Lord to us Thy servants give,
The anchor of a hope most blest,
And grant us at St. Clement's prayer,
To gain from Thee eternal rest.

DOXOLOGY.

All praise to God the Father be
All praise Eternal Son to Thee
All praise forever as is meet
To God the Holy Paraclete. Amen.

Sung to the melody of "Aeterna Christi munera." Hymns A. M. 430.

Some Suggestions for District Mission Workers.

1. Our aim is the eternal welfare of the souls in our several wards. Therefore spend time and pains in studying methods, in earnest intercessory prayer, in learning to be patient with the ignorant, the perverse or prejudiced.

2. Learn how to be systematic without becoming mechanical.

3. Study the difference between condescension and real sympathy.

4. Give material help when it is actually needed—if you can. But study a case carefully and remember that the way to higher help is often blocked, and a wrong relationship created by almsgiving.

5. The poor and suffering need, most of all, you, and your genuine Christian sympathy, and practical patient advice.

6. The best help is to help others to help themselves.

7. The Divine Life flows to individual souls through the channel of Church and Sacraments. But we must avoid giving the impression that mere routine attendance and reception are sufficient. Constant and progressive conversion of heart and life should be our ideal.

8. If directed to give reports, be business-like about it. If instructed to gather statistics, do it; but avoid the attitude of the census taken.

9. Aim to become a well-known and trusted friend of the people in your ward, one to whom they will turn for advice in time of trial. Get well acquainted with individuals, and win them for God and His Church.

10. Especially cultivate the friendship of children. Regard every baptized person as a member of Christ's Body, the Church.

11. By word and act, and persevering effort, even in the face of discouragement, claim for our parish every soul that by baptism, confirmation, or in any other way has been once formally attached here, and do not give up till the relationship has been repudiated or broken in some deliberate and responsible manner.

12. Do not encourage the complaining pessimistic spirit. Infuse a bright and hopeful tone into the lives of those you touch.

13. Do the best you can for every individual soul. Draw it to our parish if you can; but at all events let your influence count for positive religion and morality in the best way that circumstances admit.

14. Encourage home life and family religion.

15. Most important of all, sanctify your own life by frequent and devout use of the means of grace, and by constant correspondence with God the Holy Spirit.

16. Be patient, long suffering; the best results will take time.

The Church Times, of the Diocese of Milwaukee, reprinted our article from May number on Reservation, but did not credit us with it.

The new Bishop of Bristol said about a year ago: "The English Church has been always a self-going concern, and there has been no interference with her mass—a good old English word which there is no harm in using."

God has been very good to us during this past year. Our gratitude may be shown by the way in which we avail ourselves of our spiritual privileges. The Dedication Festival is a time for general communion, and we sincerely hope that all may manifest their love to Him in this way.

We ought to wish to destroy the power of the "root of all evil" and "lay up treasures in heaven," and for these reasons give generously and with self denial.

The Sodality of St. Clement.

The various Guilds are grouped under this one organization, but all our people do not belong to the Guilds. It has been thought that many might wish to become members of the Sodality, accepting some definite rule of life under head of three notable duties of prayer, fasting, and almsgiving. Names of any who do not already belong to any Guild, who would like to join the Sodality, may be sent to the clergy, and a rule will be prepared.

The Catechism.

The attendance at the Catechism has been very satisfactory, not that we have many, but that we have present almost all who are on the roll.

Mr. William Manthrop and Mr. Harry Hofman have charge of the 9.15 mass, as far as the keeping of the roll and the distribution of cards is concerned. The attendance at this service is good; and for their singing the girl's choir is to be commended.

If you know of any child who might be brought to the Catechism, please give his (or her) name and address to one of the clergy. Our school would be larger if each one did his small share.

There will be an entertainment for the children in St. Clement's week.

Acolytes Festival at St. Michael's.

On Tuesday, October 5th, the Acolytes of St. Clement's, along with many of other parishes, had an opportunity of assisting in the Acolytes Festival of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels. Choral even-song was sung, after which there was a procession around the church, and then a beautiful address to the Acolytes by Father Longridge. A reception in the Clergy House followed, and like the rest of the evening passed off without a jar or inconvenience. For the pleasure of the occasion our thanks are due to the chaplain and members of St. Michael's Guild for Acolytes.

The Pictures.

During the week two paintings have been given to the church, for which we are very grateful. "Infant in the Manger," Honthorst, b. 1592, is the larger and more devotional. "He shows great skill in reproducing scenes illuminated by a single candle." The scene is the Nativity with worshipping shepherds, etc.

"Christ with Angels," Albani, b. 1578, represents our Lord with the scarlet cloak, thorn, crown, and reed.

The points of excellence of both pictures and the coloring seem to prove both to be originals. It is to be hoped that others having rare and suitable pictures may give them to the church.

Protestant or Catholic?

The following is a very true statement of the serious mistake that is almost always made in missionary work, "pretending we are Protestants" when we are not:

"One must, therefore, take one's choice in a new community of being supposed to be a Protestant or a (Roman) Catholic. If a missionary to the rural districts accepts the first (and this has been the way followed almost universally in church extension in this land hitherto) then he is regarded as at any rate not a Catholic, and when by-and-bye, he begins to show that he is, there is sure to arise suspicion and distrust; it will be thought that he has been sailing under false colors and then his vehement assertions that he is not a Roman Catholic will be received as a poor attempt at a "blind," or it will be declared that "if he isn't a Catholic he is just as bad." On the other hand, if he begins by showing that he is a Catholic, and quietly bearing the misunderstanding that will pretty surely follow, then he faces the worst at the start, and when people discover that he is not Roman, but very decidedly anti-Roman and genuinely American, then they will be ashamed of their unfairness, and will feel that he has acted in a courageous and thoroughly honest fashion, and the fact of the existence of a great Church of the English race, veritably Catholic, yet in a true sense Protestant, will grow clear in their minds."—Holy Cross Magazine.

The Parish Banner.

It will not be possible to have one made for the Parish Festival, but a design is being prepared, and we hope that the work will be taken in hand immediately. A suggested design is: St. Clement after the manner of the picture hanging in corridor of Parish Building; figures of saints in panels on the stoles on either side; materials of a rich quality ornamentation of embroidery and precious stones (if any are given for the purpose).

St. Clement, Bishop and Martyr.

If the visitor to the city of Rome enters the famous church of San Clemente, in which so many stirring historical events occurred in the Middle Ages, and passes down the narrow stairway from the sacristy to the crypt, he finds himself standing in the middle of a quaint old chapel, which in the seventh and eighth centuries was the place of worship for many thousands of Roman Christians; and on the frescoes of whose walls is delineated the scenes in the life of him for whom the church is named, and whose remains repose under the altar. Descending even below this lower church, we find a third structure which, though now so far underground, undoubtedly was the house and dwelling of Clement, fourth bishop of Rome. From the frescoes we learn the life of him whose bones hallow that sacred spot, and after whom our own parish is named. A Roman by birth, and of the Flavian family, he became one of the earliest converts of Christianity, and so zealously did he follow the teaching of St. Peter and St. Paul that the latter, in writing to the Philippians, speaks of him as "Clement, and others, whose names are written in the book of life." About A. D. 100, St. Clement was made Bishop of Rome, and while in that office he wrote his epistle to the Corinthians, which was held in such veneration in the early church. To quiet an uprising against the Christians in the time of the Emperor Trajan, St. Clement was exiled to the Crimea, near the Black Sea, where he was compelled to work in the marble quarries. But his zeal for Christ was unquenchable, and by his efforts over two hundred souls there were brought to baptism and life. Exasperated at this, the Emperor sent executioners who laid hands on Clement, and fastening him to an anchor, drowned him in the sea.

The stones which we have in the chancel come from the church erected at the site of his martyrdom; they were probably cut from the quarries where he worked, and by the hands of those who had learned Christianity through him.

A Musician's Vagrant Fancy.

From the nature of our occupation, we singers—at least, the more professional of us—are frequently belated and often find ourselves upon the streets of the city, not only at a time when it requires several seconds to count the blows that fall upon the still night air as the hour is rung from some tower clock, but occasionally at a time when one or two sudden, ominous strokes break the prevailing stillness with startling abruptness, as we journey quietly along, interrupting our train of thought with a nervous shock that causes an uncanny shiver to dart uncontrollably down a sensitive spine.

Thus it was that I found myself, not long since, traveling on foot in the direction of the City Hall, while the great city slept, and the streets were deserted, with the exception of a dim form faintly outlined here or there against dark walls, and flitting along in ghostly silence, with stealthy manner, as if anxious to avoid detection in the desert-like solitude, and escape identification with the oppressive solemnity of that weird hour.

I knew that the tremendous mass of the Public Buildings lay a short distance ahead of me; knew that the huge tower rose majestically from the great pile, rearing itself high above all surrounding objects; knew that a gigantic figure, cold and motionless, stood upon the pinnacle with hand stretched forth in solemn benediction over the sleeping multitude beneath—watching, guarding, protecting, patiently and forever the product of his toil and care, and genius—his beloved child—the City of Brotherly Love.

All this I knew, not from the optical vision, but from previous knowledge, for, upon the night in question, all things were enveloped in a heavy fog, such as one beholds in this locality only at long intervals—a thick mist, behind which objects a block distant were invisible. From where I was, nothing could be seen of the Hall, the tower, or the colossal figure. But the circlet of small electric lights, clustering reverently around the feet of the city's patriarch, shone brightly through the darkness as if determined to declare to the world the location of their beloved patron, though the gloom of the night might hide his form from human view. Hundreds of feet high in the air these little brilliants gleamed and sparkled, their means of support rendered invisible by the mist, their starry substance looking as if detached from all earthly objects. There they hung, shining brightly and mysteriously against the black background. How do I know, thought I, that those beautiful points of light are merely the result of man's ingenuity. Do I know who placed them there—or, even, who saw them erected? No; but, because they appear, I gratuitously assume that man brought them into existence. What if, after all, human energy has not been a factor in the production of this phenomenon? What if this be a wondrous crown of rarest jewels, poised above the earth in the invisible hands of angels whose eyes rove anxiously over the deserted streets of the great city and peep surreptitiously into the homes of slumbering inmates in a vain endeavor to find a mortal worthy to wear this precious diadem sent by a great and loving Father to some noble child. The trusty messengers, unwilling to return without executing their commission, yet unable to find a true Child of God in all this multitude, perforce hover hopefully above the city searching ever but in vain.

Surely, as I now reflect upon the matter, this must be so; for the great crown may still be seen upon any foggy evening, its marvelous gems flashing rays of dazzling light into the darkness of the night, while stupid men sleep in the belief that these brilliants are mere lamps set up by human hands to illuminate the statue of an honored countryman. And, while the world rests contentedly, in the indifference of ignorance, where is he who, alert and wakeful, is toiling earnestly and unceasingly to fit himself for the possession of this divine token? As it still gleams brightly above us, I count myself privileged to continue to wonder whose brow the angelic messengers shall deem sufficiently noble to be graced with this priceless crown of heavenly jewels.

A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

Formerly St. Clement's.

We learn from the daily newspapers that the new buildings for the Pennsylvania Hospital for Epileptics are ready to be occupied. They are situated outside the city; the names of generous subscribers are duly announced that the community at large may fully appreciate their bounty, but the fact that it was formerly St. Clement's, that the money and work that permitted this experiment which has proved somewhat of a success, came from our people and their friends is never alluded to. This unaccountable and studied omission seems neither equitable nor courteous. Under similar circumstances most corporations would have set apart a room or bed as some token of courteous remembrance, but so complete is the forgetfulness that this institution does not even send a copy of its annual report.

Parish Notes.

Father Huntington, Sup. O. H. C., Father Longridge, S. S. J. E., and Father Field, S. S. J. E., have been our guests during the past month, and said mass at our altars.

Matting has been placed in the church corridor to lessen the noise.

Parishioners are asked not to linger and talk in the corridor before service, unless in regard to matters of necessary importance.

The members of the Altar Guild expect to give black chasuble, etc, to complete the set; it is a loving memorial of Mrs. Wolfe, formerly President of the Altar Guild.

The crucifix for the side altar has been promised.

Rev. E. Wright is Chaplain of St. Martha's Guild.

The clergy are glad to see any men of the congregation on Monday nights at the Clergy House.

The clergy would like to receive the names and addresses of regular attendants of the services, who desire to be visited or instructed.

The Bishop of Pennsylvania during his stay in England visited the Mission House at Cowley, and was received with all honor.

Rev. W. C. Clapp has a Bible Class for men in the lower vestry on Sundays at 3 P. M.

The Women's Bible Class is held on Sundays at 3 P. M., at the Mission House.

Mr. Ritter has a Bible Class for young men in the Chapel on Sundays at 10 A. M.

Rev. C. C. Quin has a short service and instruction at the Pennsylvania Hospital for Epileptics on Sundays at 3 P. M.

Plans are being made for the admission of fresh air into the church by means of the upper ventilators of the corridors without any current of air blowing down upon the people. It is intended to cover the remaining windows with a sheathing of the olive green glass very shortly; this will make all the light of a uniform color, and get rid of all glare.

The Altar Guild will have their annual meeting on Thursday, November 4th, at 10 o'clock. After that date they will meet each Tuesday and Thursday for work.

Steam was turned on the buildings on Saturday, October 23d, and all seemed satisfactory.

Three hundred and thirty-seven communions were made from August 20th to September 18th. Six hundred and sixty-three communions were made from September 19th to October 23d.

Tickets for the Parish Tea may be obtained at the Mission House, 2034 Cherry street; any profit goes to the Poor Fund.

The All Saints' Sisters are very much in need of second-hand clothing for our poor people. Send packages to the Mission House, 2036 Cherry street.

All Saints and All Souls.

Remember the needs of the All Saints' Sisters and their works for the poor, on the festival. Donations of groceries, etc., will be very acceptable, and should be sent to the Mission House, 2036 Cherry street.

All Souls: Names of the holy dead may be sent to the clergy for mention on All Souls' Days (particularly those who have died during the past year).

A requiem mass will be said on each available day during November at 7.30. The clergy would be very glad to remember persons on particular days. "Bona Mors" office will be said each Monday after even-song.

Vespers of the Dead will be said on Monday afternoon, November 1st, at 5.15.

During the year various sums of money have been given and expended for burial of needy and devout communicants.

Money has not yet been received for the purchase of a suitable burial plot.

Endowment Fund.

It would be a very proper thing if the whole amount needed for ground rent were given, so that the legacy of Miss Hannah Smith might be made the beginning of an endowment fund. The advisability of such a plan needs no argument. Larger and wealthier parishes than St. Clement's have already provided such a fund—it would be a worthy object for other legacies from our people. The safest way would be to put it, perhaps, in the charge of a trust company, the principal and interest to accumulate until it produced a certain income, when a part might be paid over to the Vestry for expenses.

The Council of the Diocese of Milwaukee is reported to have unanimously voted to erase the term "Protestant Episcopal" from all its documents.

There was a great meeting of Brotherhood of St. Andrew at Buffalo. This organization would be a great power for good, if it had really definite principles; what it stands for may be good as far as it goes, but it is too general for real influence.

The Missionary Council has met in Milwaukee—another opportunity for enthusiastic speeches.

Books are needed for the Parish Library, and books belonging to it ought to be returned.

The Bishop of Maryland, the visitor of the community, installed the Mother Superior of All Saints' Sisters of the Poor on Thursday, October 21st, at the convent in Baltimore. Mother Adelaide Frances hopes to be in Philadelphia on St. Clement's Day.

Some may be glad to have the Collect, Epistle and Gospel, which the Bishop of the Diocese licenses for use each year.

O God, who makest us to rejoice in the yearly solemnity of Blessed Clement, Thy Martyr and Bishop, favorably grant that we who keep his festival may likewise imitate his fortitude in suffering, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Helpful Prayer.

The prayer printed below was composed by an English priest, and having been found helpful to many was printed some time ago in the Church Times.

"O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in Whose embrace all creatures live, in whatsoever world or condition they be; I beseech Thee for him whose name and dwelling place and every need Thou knowest. Lord, vouchsafe him light and rest, peace and refreshment, joy and consolation in Paradise, in the companionship of saints, in the presence of Christ, in the ample folds of Thy great love.

"Grant that his life (so troubled here) may unfold itself in Thy sight, and find a sweet employment in the spacious fields of eternity. If he hath ever been hurt or maimed by any unhappy word or deed of mine, I pray Thee of Thy great pity to heal and restore him that he may serve Thee without hindrance.

"Tell him, O gracious Lord, if it may be, how much I love him and miss him, and long to see him again; and, if there be ways in which he may come, vouchsafe him to me as a guide and guard, and grant me a sense of his nearness in such degree as Thy laws permit.

"If in aught I can minister to his peace, be pleased of Thy love to let this act which may deprive me of the sight be; and mercifully keep me from every of him as soon as our trial-time is over, or mar the fulness of our joy when the end of the days hath come.

"Pardon, O gracious Lord and Father, whatsoever is amiss in this my prayer, and let Thy will be done, for my will is blind and erring, but Thine is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Small Sacred Photographs.

Just the thing for Prayer-book and "Treasury;" for making up Holiday gifts and Holy-day remembrances; so much better than lithograph cards with their birds and flowers.

Prices, 5 and 10 cents; sheets, 10 and 15 cents. Proceeds for Charitable Fund, Guild of St. Lawrence. Sold by Miss Heylin or Miss Leslie, 125 Lambert street.

The Lady Chapel.

Mr. Sellers advises that we line the walls of the crypt with hollow brick and put in a flooring of the same; this will, it is expected, make it completely dry, the ceiling will be plastered, and provision will also be made for ventilating, lighting and heating. A doorway and steps will be made on the southern side; because of the additional cost, the entrance from the church proper cannot be made now. These necessary things will cost at least $500, and we have only about $300 in hand. Daylight will be admitted by means of door. We hope that the work may be undertaken shortly.

Mr. Vaughan has submitted a sketch for the side altar, such as he thinks will be in harmony with the other parts of the church. We hope that estimates may bring this within the amount of money at our disposal.

The corner-stone of St. Clement's was laid 12th of May, 1856, and the church consecrated April 12th, 1864.

Harmony.

During the month we have had an exhibition of the boasted harmony of the Roman Communion in the affairs of the (Roman) Catholic University at Washington. The "Americans" and "Refractaires" have each been trying to gain the control. Some pretty hard things have been said on both sides, some of which no doubt were true; the whole affair seems to have been like one of the incidents which our friends are pleased to think and say show our weakness and lack of agreement—it might be very instructive to those who believe all they are told.

The See of Bristol, England, has been restored. Right Rev. G. F. Brown, Bishop of Stepney (Suffragan of London) has been made Bishop. He is one of the most distinguished historical scholars in England, a thorough master of the Roman controversy, and has proved himself very sensible in practical matters. He once said, "The English Church has always been a self-going concern, and there has been no interference with her mass—a good old English word which there is no harm in using."

Spiritual Impatience.

How impatient we are for results! Probably more hopes have been frustrated by impatience than by deliberate reversion to former ways. We need to mark how God leads us onward under the law of development by exercise. Slight, indeed, are the perceptions of spiritual possibility which the Marthas possess. Even those who strive to see with clearer vision often seem to see only "men as trees walking."

But let them be thankful for what they see, nor endanger what they have by over-eagerness. They who hurry lose patience, and impatience begets pride, and pride causes complaint, as though God must forsooth govern Himself by our dictations.

Many are the persons who have asked for a sudden and revolutionary change within, and were greatly discouraged when subsequent events indicated much remaining mischief in the senses and a world of self-love not yet exorcised. How different the case might have been had some wise voice counseled them not to lay down terms to God, nor to think about the heights of sanctity that might be sealed by them, but to go quietly on fighting each day's battle by itself, and committing the soul to God's hands to be dealt with as He will, when He will, and by what means He will.—Bp. McLaren, "Interior Life."

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:

I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections.

Very truly yours,

PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1897.

St. Clement's-tide.

The first vespers were sung in chapel on Monday. On Tuesday "the snow lay on the ground;" the air was cold as our people came to the early masses to worship and offer for the "Ransom." The number of communions was larger than for many years. "The people offered willingly," so that more than enough was given before 11 o'clock.

At the Solemn Mass the choir sang Mozart's VIIIth, with orchestra. A goodly congregation was present; many friends from elsewhere. There was a solemn procession. The absence of Bishop Starkey, our preacher, was regretted, but he sent us a letter full of his loving sympathy, regretting that he could not "take part in the festival service on St. Clement's Day," and that he must "lose the opportunity of showing warm interest and regard in the prosperity of the parish." The Bishop has kindly promised to give us the manuscript of his sermon to be printed.

The Bishop of the diocese also wrote "I hope that your coming Festival will be productive, through the grace of God, of spiritual benefit to your congregation."

The Holy Sacrifice was offered as a thanksgiving for the blessing on our Ransom Crusade, and a Te Deum closed the services.

The procession of Guilds of "Sodality of St. Clement" took place at night; Dedication Vespers were solemnly sung. The Rev. R. H. Nelson, Rector of St. Peter's Parish, Philadelphia, preached a strong, helpful sermon, "Perfection as the Temple on a Strong Foundation of First Principles." There was a good attendance of Guild members and a large congregation. A Te Deum closed the services of St. Clement's Day, a day long to be remembered in the history of the parish.

On Wednesday night the Parish Tea attracted a large number of the people, all happy and thankful. Mr. Remont had arranged for music by an orchestra, which was, as last year, a very enjoyable feature of the evening. The rector said a few words, and Mr. Fryer gave a brief statement of our financial condition.

On Thanksgiving Day our dear friend, Rev. H. Parrish, preached for us. A very good congregation assisting at the Mass.

Friday night the children were amused with a steriоptican exhibition; it is needless to say they came in goodly numbers.

Advent Sunday, Dr. Riley, who a quarter of a century before had begun his work at St. Clement's, preached both morning and evening. In the morning he gracefully referred to Dr. Stewart and the Rev. H. I. Meigs, who were associated with him in the work, as well as those who had first served at the altar as acolytes.

The Bishop of the Diocese writes: "I congratulate you upon the devotion of your congregation and the success of the effort to free St. Clement's from debt. You have surely much cause for thankfulness at this time."

Fr. Longridge writes: "It is indeed good news. Somehow there seems to be a devotion about the people of St. Clement's one does not find elsewhere. It is very cheering. Accept then our congratulations, and please give them on our behalf to the congregation."

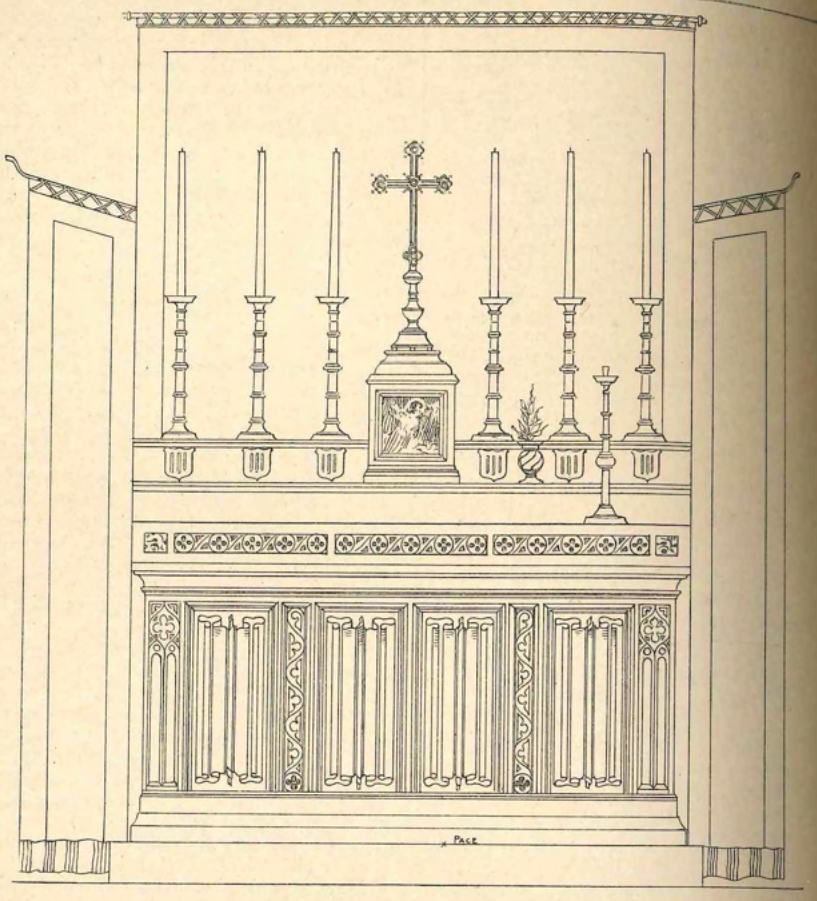
Bishops and Others.

Some years ago a prominent layman made a great fuss because he said that he had been refused communion at St. Clement's on a certain festival. The matter was spoken of, we believe, on the floor of General Convention, and led, no doubt, to the insertion of a new rubric. There was no truth in the statement. Times have changed. At the last Trinity ordination in Philadelphia the congregation, before the service, were told that they were not expected to receive communion, and they did not.

At the consecration service in New Haven, last month, it was announced that, with the approval of the bishops of Connecticut and Long Island, only those in the chancel would be given Holy Communion. The Bishop of Maryland, who compels unwilling clergy to receive, was present.

Dr. Pusey used to say that Dr. Newman leaned on the bishops, and when they failed him, he was forced to go to Rome, while he relied on the Church. Bishops must follow. Anglican dignitaries have rarely, in history, been leaders; they head a movement after victory. We have seen the truth of this. The lesson is that, however strange it is, we must stand up for unwelcome truth for the Church's honor, and in the end our bishops will accept the truth, and be glad to enjoy the fruits of victory. Many illustrations might be given.

The Year's Work.



GUILD OF ST. LAWRENCE.

It would take too much of the MAGAZINE'S space to dwell in detail upon all features of the work of the last year. The treasurer's report will give some intimation of the various departments in so far as they have involved expenditure of money. That which cannot be exhibited in any report is the miles walked by visitors in looking after the members of their several wards; the time spent, and prayers said over difficult cases; the humiliations at evident mistakes made; the secret joy when a blessing has seemed to follow some faithful effort. Work which is philanthropic in the true sense of that philanthropy which is the inevitable outcome of the love of God, must always be partial, tentative, subject to correction, apprehensive of abuses. It must be mindful of the question of the problems which confront such work; must realize the privilege of doing a part, however small, and must never aspire to a monopoly.

One of the pleasant features of the Guild's work has been the hearty coöperation of other and much larger agencies, not professedly religious, which have been found ready with sympathy and material aid and a large store of practical experience. Special acknowledgment of this sort is due to Mrs. Thomas, the neighboring local superintendent of the Organized Charity; while Miss Devereaux, the matron of the N. W. Sick Diet Kitchen, and representing the Episcopal City Union, has been most kind and helpful. In cases requiring medical attendance our Dr. W. H. Wells and Dr. Wilmer Krusen have in several instances given professional services of the most valuable kind. While in general it has been possible to divide the work of ministering to local needs, yet on occasions the Guild has shared in this with the Church Poor Fund, administered by the All Saints' Sisters, and notably in the employment of women by sewing, there has been no discrimination.

Throughout the year it has been the aim of the society to aid only the really worthy, and in all cases possible to apply a test of worthiness, the best test being in an opportunity to do honest labor. Experience shows how great a responsibility rests upon those who proffer the first aid, and many charity workers know of cases where the desire and almost the ability for self-support has been educated out of chronic beneficiaries.

The attempt to organize an Employment Bureau was not a great success; such an enterprise needs an established and visible headquarters, and the clientage which only years and advertising can bring.

The report of the treasurer shows how nearly exhausted are the funds of the society. The work will go on, but of course it can only subsist—so far as material matters are concerned—upon the receipts from voluntary donations. The Guild does not wish to supplant any other agency, or to divert gifts which would go through other channels; it only professes to be a society of Christians for Christian work, and as such it offers its services.

It only remains to be said that while the Guild strives to separate its benefactions from spiritual matters so as to prevent the abuse of "the loaves and fishes," it has been a gratification to see instances where relief offered in the name of Christ led eventually to spiritual attachment and edification.

CHAIRMAN OF EX. COM.

Dr. Pusey's Life.

The fourth and concluding volume is ready, and maintains the interest to the end. The account of his efforts toward reunion, of his outgrowth of narrow anglican ideas, the affectionate correspondence with Newman, and the insight into the close friendship with Liddon, closing with the account of the end written by Dr. Liddon himself, are all narrated.

Baptism by Immersion.

A certain church not very far away has been compelled to rent a hall of the Baptist Society in which to worship, and to our certain knowledge the rector of that church has received in the last few months at least two applications, from different parishes in the diocese, for permission to use the baptismal pool for baptisms. After all it does not seem strange that baptism by immersion, the primitive and natural way, is a possibility for the churches of the diocese only as the accidental result of a congregation renting a Baptist building. We are not questioning the validity of our ordinary method by sprinkling. It is a custom of the Universal Church dating probably from the Day of Pentecost itself (when it is hardly possible that as many as three thousand persons could have been immersed in a few short hours). The sufficiency of sprinkling is beyond doubt. But there is an element in baptism by immersion, as a type and teaching figure of that inward work of the Holy Ghost in the Sacrament, which is entirely lost to us in our other method. It takes a strain of the imagination, or perhaps the note of some learned commentator, to make us understand the meaning and force of such expressions as, "Be baptized, and wash away thy sins," or "Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with Him," or "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

It seems a pity that in the beautiful baptistery of the new Church of the Advocate there is not a pool. In the centre of it could be placed a font which, with the pool drained off, could be used on ordinary occasions. We venture to say that if such a pool were there, the rector of the church would find not only those whom his own ministrations bring to this Sacrament, but many from other parishes, asking for baptism by immersion. Really, one cannot help sympathizing to some extent with a person who desires to be baptized in that way; and the teaching power of it is self-evident.

We should not forget that all Protestant bodies have lost entirely the Sacramental idea, and as a logical consequence are relegating baptism to the position of a commendable but unimportant form. It remains to the Church to continue to hold forth to men the truth, and to make them realize once more the vital meaning and necessity of this the most important of all Sacraments, for "except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of Heaven." And in this effort, would it not be an advantage to speak of, and to practice baptism by immersion more frequently than has been our custom, in order more clearly to bring home the meaning of it all? The rubrics in the baptismal offices certainly imply the possibility of immersion in every Church, yet in this whole diocese, so far as we know, it is only possible because one church happens to be hiring a Baptist hall. This ought not to be so.

Parish Notes.

The Rev. W. C. Clapp preached at the first vespers for Guild of All Souls, at Mt. Calvary, Baltimore.

At a meeting of the Vestry, November 9th, a committee—Messrs. Flanders, Neill and Roberts—was appointed to prepare a scheme for the Endowment Fund of St. Clement's. The details of the plan, as soon as it is formulated, and a form of bequest, will be published in the MAGAZINE.

It is the opinion of some of our kindly disposed neighbors that public schools and Sisters' houses "debauch" a neighborhood.

By resolution of the Vestry, no more pews or sittings will be rented in the south aisle of the church. This does not interfere, of course, with the rights of those who are at present renting pews or sittings.

Arrangements have been made for supplying some of the upper ventilators with an extra glass, so that the windows may be opened without the air blowing down on the heads of the people. The remaining windows of the church will be sheathed with the green glass.

The side altar is being made in Boston, under the supervision of the architect Mr. Henry Vaughan. It will be under the dedication of St. Katharine.

The work on the crypt chapel, it is hoped, may be begun immediately. The cost is much greater than was expected, and we shall have to defer the construction of the stairway from the church until money is available—it would cost over $100.

Bona Mors devotions were said after evensong on Mondays in November.

A large number of names were sent in for special remembrance on All Souls' Day.

Vespers of the Dead were said in church on November 1st.

A novena for the parish was made November 14th-22d. Special devotions in chapel on week days, after evensong.

We shall be glad to have special offerings made for altar flowers, the smallest sum placed in a marked envelope will be gratefully received.

The Altar Guild has a great deal of work planned for the church during the coming season.

The C. B. S. has received several new members, and the attendance at the monthly vespers is very good.

The list of communicants, so far as known to the clergy, has been made out, and a copy will be placed on the notice board. If any names have been omitted, we shall be glad to know it in order that they may be inserted. Every effort has been made to have it as accurate as possible.

The Rev. Dr. McVickar, of Holy Trinity, has accepted the election as Assistant Bishop of Rhode Island.

A parishioner has kindly prepared copies of the Collect, Epistle and Gospel for St. Clement's Day (as licensed for use by the Bishop of the Diocese); also for Thanksgiving Day, for the Missals, Gospel and Epistle books of the Church.

The Choir Club again meets on Tuesday evenings; the attendance is large, and the conduct of the boys very satisfactory.

St. Nicholas Guild for little boys has been started with a goodly number. It meets on Saturday mornings.

Advent.

Preparation for the second coming of Christ should have a conspicuous place in the work of the Church as well as of the individual, but too curious inquiries into the time of that coming savors of irreverence, and has afforded a means of unholy gain to quacks and impostors. There are certain signs revealed to us of the great event, as the age of tribulation, the activity of the Church in the spread of the Gospel, and the great Apostacy, and yet it remains true that of that day and hour knoweth no man. The Church has been expecting it since the time of the Apostles, and is still awaiting the consummation of all things in patience and faith.—English Ch. Times.

Advent is a solemn time, and we hope that our people may observe the season by faithful attendance at Mass, by abstaining from the ordinary forms of amusement as well as by extra abstinence, as for example Wednesdays.

As he had desired during those forty and nine years, so his Lord called His servant while he was doing his Master's business. No doubt meditating on the close of another Church year, lamenting so many things undone, yet gathering up the fragments that the Master might suffer no unnecessary loss. He began his jubilee here in the place he loved so well, but God called him to enjoy it in that other place which he had learned to love better.

In his life we see the spirit of a true asceticism, that gentle, loving nature, purified by self-denial. He had no desire for prominence or influence; he wanted to live only for God. No one saw him at public meetings or gatherings; he did not occupy prominent pulpits on important occasions; he was not elected to high office or to promote special undertakings. He did a priest's work. He received the penitent, comforted the sick, rebuked the erring, counseled the struggling, cheered the poor, visited the prisoners.

The burial service was at Church of the Transfiguration, on Saturday November 20th, and a Requiem Mass for the repose of his soul was said on that day at St. Clement's.

When God called him to exercise the ministry of absolution there were few who dared to undertake it. Hundreds of priests and thousands of lay people have received their absolution "by the authority given to" him; to-day there are few who would dare to refuse the request for that ministry.

INTERIOR OF ST. CLEMENT'S CHURCH, ROME.

St. Clement's and the Brotherhood House.

In a conversation with one of the authorities of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, southeast corner of Twentieth and Race streets, one of our parish was startled by the statement that the disadvantage of the site of the Brotherhood House lay in the fact "that there was no church near to which to send the young men." On venturing to suggest that St. Clement's was, to say the least, on the same continent—in reality, about one hundred feet away—the reply was, "Oh, I couldn't send them there. It's too dangerous."

Dangerous to learn the true faith! Dangerous to go to a place where the creed of all the Christian ages is taught! Dangerous, a place where all the riches of Christ in His sacramental life may be had for the asking, day or night! What a sad, heart-sickening commentary on the darkness still about us—one of those statements, in fact, that rouses one from that selfish indulgent lethargy which assumes that the work for Catholic truth is done and over, and makes him realize that he is called to the same effort and self-consecration for the propagation of the Faith, as were the men of the Catholic revival of fifty years ago, if this dear Mother Church is to be brought back to her ancient moorings in the harbor of God's religion.

The maker of the assertion who, from a very charitable heart, does much religious work in one of the large parishes uptown, illustrated the remark by a personal experience. A woman, who had moved to the outskirts of the city, and who could not make her communion when asked so to do, for the reason that she did not have time the day before to go all the way down to St. Clement's to make her confession, and she did not dare to receive the Blessed Sacrament without first being washed clean in absolution. "So the woman was deprived of her communion as a result of St. Clement's teaching." But where, we ask, was the priest of the parish, who should have come forward to supply the woman's spiritual need? She was starving spiritually because there was no one present who was able to meet her needs. The Catholic faith had created a height of spiritual apprehension in the woman's soul, and to have become a communicant would have meant the descent to a lower and more lax spiritual level, and this never can be done without wrenching one's moral nature.

Now that the Brotherhood House has been placed, by Diocesan authority, within our spiritual jurisdiction, we shall renew our offer of giving to the inmates of the house any spiritual assistance that is required.

Formerly St. Clement's.

A copy of the report of the present hospital has been received. It contains a history of the origin of the institution, and the reasons for its present name and circumstances, such as we suppose would appeal to those who are at present interested in the movement.

Illustrations of the new buildings are also liberally supplied.

The report is deficient in one or two matters at least, and there is no explanation of some of the matters referred to in our last number. Our thanks are due to the person who kindly forwarded the report.

We are glad to learn that the Bishop of Shanghai absolutely denies the truth of an inference drawn from the letter of one of the missionaries as to the use of tea instead of wine for Holy Communion. Those who know the Bishop of course were sure that the statement was not true, but much harm no doubt was done through the copying of the statement in many papers.

All Work and No Play.

Do the members of the congregation remember that the Rector has not had the pleasure of a recreation since he assumed charge of this parish? There is much truth in the old saying, "All work," etc. The parish has prospered in the past two years as it never has before, and it is the result of unceasing care and work. It is quite true that many parishioners have given time and money to help accomplish the undertakings, the most notable of which was completed on St. Clement's Day. But the fact remains that most of the credit is due to the Rev. G. H. Moffett, whose resolute purpose and unflagging zeal, made the magnificent ends possible of attainment. M. A. T.

The Coming Kingdom.

In these days of the study of social problems there is danger, not of too much study and effort to correct evils, but of omitting the one essential element of all reform and readjustment, i. e., from the standpoint of religion. We mean the relation of each individual to God. It is the simple key, in fact, the only one, to what the deepest sociologists confess to be the most tangled of questions. Many a man does a thing because he looks around him and finds that others are doing it. If, instead of looking around he would but look up, he would find his hand stayed. Of course, in matters indifferent, common estimation may settle a point; but there is a large class of actions where conventional justice can not bear the look of God's eye. It is good to make much of that blunt sense of truth, honor and justice which seems a kind of heritage of our Saxon blood. Despite all that may be said, and truthfully said, about Anglican insularity and bigotry, the direct appeal to God which our religious people make, is a thing too valuable to be bartered away; and true religion will not dim, although it may modify it.

Advent makes us think of the Coming Kingdom, of the time when God's law shall prevail, and when human ills and injustice shall cease. The reason why the Kingdom does not come more rapidly is, that individual hearts are not conformed to God, and this largely because modern life is so hurried that it does not look the eternal facts fairly in the face. The more thankful should we be for this season of comparative quiet, in which to look at God while He looks at us. There is a specific gravity which always asserts itself when we adopt this attitude; and violet is seen to be the proper color for the season. One hears of entertainments and various enterprises, some of them ecclesiastical, planned to occupy the attention of the faithful during Advent. Well, one cannot lay down rigid law, perhaps, but when asked, as when one often is, "Whether it is right to do this, or to go there, during Advent," the reply which seems most to the point is, "I shouldn't think you would want to, if you are in earnest about the coming of the Kingdom." It does not seem best, to say the least, to use for pleasure or distracting occupations, the season provided by the Church for the contemplation of God and the great end of human existence.

We earnestly hope that every communicant will prepare to make communion on the Feast of the Nativity of Our Lord.

The purpose of the Crusade has been accomplished, and we have the money in hand for the payment of the ground rent.

We must leave until another time the fuller account of those who followed the example of our patron as "fellow laborers." Many whose names are not known here are "written in the Book of Life."

It was prayer, and the power of the love of God that accomplished it. It means that 20th and Cherry is to be "St. Clement's" as during these past forty and more years, a foundation for religion and worship as opposed to false pagan philanthropy.

7,985 communions were made at our altars during the past year, 1,287 more than the preceding; 707 communions from October 23d to November 22d.

222 communions were made on St. Clement's Day.

Innovations.

"I hear you have innovations at St. Clement's."

"Yes, steam heat."

"Oh. I don't mean that. I was told you were to have a ladies' (!) chapel, and some sort of thing down the cellar."

Such was a conversation between an ex-attendant at St. Clement's and one who is faithful still. We are afraid that this is a fair illustration of the thoughtlessness and ignorance of those who disparage the new crypt chapel. A lady chapel is not an innovation, as everyone knows who has visited English churches and cathedrals, and has seen there so many beautiful chapels dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, as ancient in construction and dedication as mortuary chapels and side altars; and what is more ancient than these? Steam heat, Welsbach lights, and electricity (which we hope to have) are innovations, that is, new things, and no one seems to be afraid of them. If the matter is considered dispassionately and historically, are we not right?

Choir News.

We are glad to see an old custom revived. During the recessional hymn, when the boys had all passed out of the church, the roaring of the bass voices was not pleasing to the ear. The return to the custom of letting the boys remain in church until the men have passed out is a welcome change. It does not sound so much like a bass drum solo.

Small Sacred Photographs.

Just the thing for prayer-book and "Treasury;" for making up holiday gifts and Holy-day remembrances; so much better than lithograph cards with their birds and flowers.

Price, 5 and 10 cents; sheets, 10 and 15 cents. Proceeds for charitable fund, Guild of St. Lawrence. Sold by Miss Heylin or Miss Leslie, 125 Lambert street.

Ransom Fund.

The total amount in the hands of the Vestry on November 29th, for the ground rent, etc., was $14,304.03. Interest on investments will be due on Dec. 1st. We hope that several persons who expressed an intention of giving to the fund, will remember that their promise was to God. The whole amount given during the festival was $2,157.99.

The Crusade.

During the month that ground rent has been really and truly paid off, and St. Clement's Church is free of all incumbrance, $13,000 with interest to date was paid on Monday, December 13th, to Philadelphia Trust Company.

At a special meeting of the Vestry, the balance of "Ransom money" was set apart as the beginning of an Endowment Fund for the Parish, with the legacy of Miss Hannah P. Smith. There is about $2,000 in hand for this. The necessary information in regard to it will be contained in the report of a Committee of the Vestry which will be printed in the MAGAZINE. It is hoped that members of the congregation will leave something to this fund in their wills. The Vestry also directed the Accounting Warden to pay over to the Trustees of the Sinking Fund, every half year, the amount heretofore paid as interest on ground rent; this amounts to $585 a year, to be used to extinguish the mortgages on our Parish Building and Clergy House; these amount to $8,000. Envelopes marked "Mortgages" and "Endowment" will be found in the corridor, in which those minded can make offerings.

Some have already expressed their intention to give regularly.

Requiem Masses.

We learn from the "Spirit of Missions" that the custom has been continued this year of having a service of Holy Communion on All Saints' Day, at which were commemorated all those connected with the General Missionary Society, who had fallen in sleep during the year. It is only another evidence of the spread of Catholic doctrine and practice—it was a requiem mass for the repose of their souls. Even if not called by that name it establishes the principle. With so many indications of the progress of true principles we can go forward with good courage.

Slander.

The word Devil means accuser. The Devil is called the accuser of the brethren; and it is one of his constant efforts to get men and women to do his work. The tongue that speaks slander is, as St. James says, "set on fire of hell."

Slander is the resource of those who rejoice in the downfall and destruction of others. The failures and misfortunes of other people are meat and drink to the tongue that utters evil things. And so, not content with the statements of facts ascertained and proven, such people very readily invent, misinterpret and exaggerate in their eagerness to do the Devil's work, and injure the character and reputation of others.

"Blessed are ye," said Our Lord, "when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." And this was Our Lord's experience when they brought false witnesses against Him. And this experience of slander was also that of the early Christians who were lied about in the most shameless ways. It was said of them even that they ate the flesh and drank the blood of little children at their meetings, and also that they indulged in the most shameless vices. These accusations were the work of Satan.

And so to-day when any real work is done for God, and when any new effort is made by Christians to live more closely in imitation of Christ, it is to be expected that there will be slanders by some of the Devil's agents. Everything imagined or suggested by an evil world will be said against those who openly dare to do God's will.

But so long as such slanders are said falsely, there can be no doubt that not only will God give His blessing and reward as a recompense, but He will in due time bring the slanders to none effect and confound forever those who utter lies.

If an account must be given even for every idle word, what a reckoning of woe awaits those who have spoken slanders against God's own people!

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Confessionals.

St. Clement's people have always believed in confession, not only as a beautiful idea, but as a practical fact, and for many years boxes have been provided; these have been unsatisfactory in two respects at least. (1) The ventilation of the present ones is very poor. (2) It is very difficult to keep the voices from being distinguished outside.

It is of the first that just now we are most conscious. If five or ten minutes are very trying to some, we can easily imagine how physically uncomfortable it might be to remain in one of them for several hours continuously. Eventually more suitable boxes might be placed at the west end of the church, and money perhaps may be given from time to time by those who believe in the sacrament and avail themselves of the privilege.

We see that Rev. Dr. Lines, of New Haven, Conn., has been elected General Secretary.

About Tombstones.

It is sometimes made a subject of reproach that the broken columns, veiled urns, and other pagan devices in marble, found in Anglican churchyards, indicate a loss of faith in the reality of the life beyond the grave. Westminster Abbey, with its heathen tombs and inscriptions, is pointed to as the culmination of bad taste and the evidence of unbelief in the English Church.

No doubt there is some truth in these accusations. But bad taste and unbelief expressed in tombstones are not confined to Westminster Abbey or the Anglican Church. Throughout Italy itself there are innumerable broken shafts and antique urns doing service for Christian funeral monuments. In Santa Croce, at Florence, there are tombs for great men as bad as any in England; and in St. Peter's, at Rome, the mausoleums of the dead popes are as pre-Christian and as classically pagan as those on the Appian way. In Catholic France, too, the splendor of the sepulchres of the rich would indicate rather a desire to maintain a memory among men than a suggestion that the soul of the departed is alive. The simple crosses of the Crusaders' graves and the "Rest eternal" of the Catacombs have been widely forgotten.

The fact is that the use of pagan emblems for Christian tombstones was only a part of that general movement in the revival of ancient Greek and Roman art and letters at the close of the middle ages known as the Renaissance. It was quite general throughout western Europe, and has lasted even until our own times. In Browning's poem, "The Bishop Orders His Tomb," one sees the passion for heathen splendors in death very vividly pictured in the case of a mediæval ecclesiastic.

There are many reasons, symbolic and economic, for wishing that Christians would return to the more primitive and simple styles of tombstones. The stone might preach a sermon in some more religious design; or the money might better decorate the church itself. "The man who needs a monument for his memory," it is said, "ought not to have one."

But meantime, it will be the part of charity to remember that a broken column is not always the indication of a lost faith, or a burial urn the evidence of a dead religion.

One thousand one hundred and forty-six communions were made from November 23 to December 26.

Christian Sociability.

Once in awhile we hear some one say, "We like St. Weno's Church, the clergy and the people seem so sociable, so differene from those at St. Uno's, where their people are stiff and cold, just coming straight to their seats, and, after the service, going directly away without speaking to anyone, and the clergy are never seen except in the chancel and meeting."

A remark like this might serve as the text for two sermons.

The first would be rather a severe reprimand for the gross misconception of the purpose of church attendance which is implied. The church is not a place for the interchange of compliments, the circulation of gossip, the fountain of plans, social and secular, the discussion of current events. The church building is not a social club-house where people of a given stratum of society, and similar intellectual bent, find it convenient to gather for quasi religious edification. The sooner people learn this the more true religion will flourish. God is the supreme object and reason for church-going. His living Presence in the Blessed Sacrament and His worship in the Holy Sacrifice make a real church to be what it is—a place where God is met and adored and received. Protestantism has constantly tended to the clique idea, and each particular congregation has its peculiar tone and caste. Broadly speaking, it is only Catholicism that brings rich and poor to kneel together before the same altar, to touch God in the same sacraments. Bear this in mind, then, and dont't talk glibly about sociability at church, for you may be desiring that which is rather a mark of weakness and degeneracy.

The other sermon, while conceding the truth of the foregoing in its particular application to conduct at church, would seize upon and emphasize the underlying idea which prompt such a remark.

No one who reads his New Testament with honesty can doubt that Christ's religion was intended to bring men together on a new and common plane. This is not to say that men can ever be equal as regards ability and endowments; it does mean that, allowing a liberal discount for shallow and foolish use of the term, there is a duty to be realized in the "Brotherhood of men," and women, too, if we may be permitted to Hibernicize. And brotherhood doesn't mean a patronizing snobbishness, which is always careful to distinguish between "the ladies" and "the women," and "the gentlemen" and "the poor men." Not that we deny the reality of this distinction, but we deny the necessity of talking about them; we proclaim the necessity of a fuller and better contact of man with man, than our present day piety seems to secure. How many ladies there are who shrink from making a simple call upon some poor and humble woman of the same congregation! We dare say the embarrassment is felt on both sides, not because it ought to be, but because the situation is so unusual. The very awkwardness of the feeling is the sure indication that religion is not affecting us as it should. Christianity is the religion of an Incarnate God, and its keynote is love and sympathy. If you cannot meet with a fellow Christian of another grade of society without that self-conscious timidity, that vague fear of being socially compromised, which is very sure to give offense, you have yet to acquire the highest and best social accomplishment.

Parish Notes

A member of the parish has presented a Holy Bible for use in the Chapel.

The candlesticks and crucifix for the altar of St. Katharine have been promised. Mr. Vaughan has designed them, and they will be ready shortly.

The daily newspapers, as well as the church papers, have spoken of the Ransom Crusade as a matter of more than parochial interest; several of our exchanges very courteously referring to it.

It does seem as if due credit ought to be given for articles reprinted. The Angelus in its December number publishes an article on Reservation, which first appeared in our MAGAZINE, and was reprinted without credit.

The Font has been removed to the west end of the church.

Several persons have rented sittings during the month. The Accounting Warden can be seen on Sundays 10.30 A. M., and Mondays at 9. A. M. by those desiring to rent.

It is a matter of very great regret that our good friend, the Bishop of Newark, was unable to prepare his sermon for printing.

Work on the new banner has been commenced by the All Saints' Sisters in Baltimore.

The Altar Guild has made a beginning on the vestments to be made for the parish.

Some friends of St. Clement's have given us an old picture painted on wood; there are three figures, our Lord, St. John, and St. Augustine.

Rev. Dr. Mortimer celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination as priest on Tuesday, December 29th. The Vestry of St. Mark's made arrangements for a solemn mass in the morning, followed by a luncheon. At night a reception was given in the Clergy House.

Rev. Robert H. Paine, Rector of Mount Calvary Church, expects to celebrate his twentieth anniversary as rector of the congregation on the Epiphany. A reception is to be given at the Clergy House, Baltimore, on the evening before.

Racks for the prayer books, etc., in use in the Chapel have been placed at either end.

The account of the various Guild entertainments and Mothers' Supper will be given in the next number of the MAGAZINE.

Our friend, Rev. H. Parrish, has been making a visit at the Clergy House.

Rev. J. M. Davenport and Rev. P. Owen Jones have written cordial letters of congratulation on the payment of ground rent.

Choir News.

The person who usually reports choir news for the MAGAZINE states that, had he disclosed his identity in the choir room, the man who inserted the news (?) in last month's issue would have been dealt with unceremoniously and severely. There was quite a small "tempest in a teapot" when the possessors of cultivated bass voices knew that their singing had been compared to a bass-drum solo. Horrors!

Our Advent Preachers.

We are very grateful to our friends who came from other cities on Sunday evenings to preach for us; in some cases, with much personal inconvenience. It is a satisfaction that the attendance was sufficiently large to show some appreciation of their kindness; and the singing on the part of the people hearty enough to make the service a helpful one.

The Chapel in the Crypt.

Much to our disappointment work has not yet been begun, and it seemed very simple and easy. We hope the delay may make it only the more satisfactory when completed. As far as we are able to go the work will be well done, but much may be done in the future. We have on hand for it $364.95, although no money has been asked for. We prefer it should be given voluntarily and without individual solicitation.

Parochial Retreat.

The Rev. Father Sargent conducted a day's retreat for members of the congregation and others so minded on Saturday, December 18th; the chapel was well filled at the meditations, and the exercises were made by many with devotion. A lunch was provided in the upper school room at one o'clock.

The Children's Fund.

This year several old friends seem to have forgotten us. The amount available is not as large as in former years; we still need about $50.

The Parish Banner.

This promises to be a very handsome piece of work. The design has been prepared with very great care. It will take some time to do the necessary work; it cannot be hurried.

The Altar of St. Katharine.

It seems fitting that we should follow the example of the older St. Clement's, and place our side altar under the dedication of St. Katharine, Virgin and Martyr. The altar, which is the offering of a member of the parish, was designed, together with the ornaments, by Mr. Henry Vaughan, of Boston, who also designed the high altar some years ago. It arrived just before Christmas, and was blessed, and the first mass at it said on Christmas Eve. The ornaments not being ready, the crucifix and candlesticks belonging to the Seashore Home were used.

Through the gift of a kind friend we are able again this year to arrange for a supper for our faithful choirmen. They will receive due notice beforehand; others will be informed afterward.

It is very encouraging to note that the Bishop of Bristol, England, has decided to oppose bigamy. He has forbidden the issue of marriage licenses to any divorced persons, guilty or innocent. This is right, and the same action might be taken by American dignitaries who are often disposed to approve of a sentimental and wrong attitude in such cases.

Correspondence.

Editor St. Clement's Magazine:

DEAR SIR:—If, during the year, the members of the choir do not regard the approach of the month of December with feelings of dread, it must be because they are of stout heart and lusty throat, for that season brings with it a vocal ordeal sufficiently terrible to appall the most courageous and spirited singer. December is ushered in in magnificent style with one of our great efforts of the year, on the occasion of the Parish Festival, which was of unusual import this time, because of the wonderful liquidation of our debt. All our festival services are prefaced with a procession around the church—a strain sufficient of itself to incapacitate a choir for the rest of the day, yet, upon the completion of this solemnity, our singers resume their places in the stalls and immediately proceed with the rendition of a difficult and elaborate mass, for the proper performance of which the freshest vocal condition and most aggressive and unwearied spirit are none too good. The endurance and resource of our choir upon such occasions must have been frequently noticed, for, in some inexplicable manner it invariably rises to the demands of the situation, and usually renders the mass with a freshness, energy, and dash that make one doubt that a long, trying, and vocally fatiguing procession has just been completed. This year, to make matters as bad as they could possibly be, the procession of Guilds fell upon St. Clement's Day, and the choir, after a heavy festival service in the morning, was compelled to turn out in the evening for a strain several times as severe as that of the morning. Laudable as was the effort made, and the spirit and courage displayed, the undertaking was vocally suicidal. The strain was simply too great for human voices to stand: and when it is remembered that many of the voices belonged to children of tender age, when it is considered how delicate must be these infantile vocal organs, it really seems almost cruel to subject them to this frightful strain. To me—far from being a matter of wonder that the choir was for three weeks subsequently "a vocal wreck," as the choirmaster put it—it was a source of astonishment that, in three weeks, it could recover anything like its original accuracy of pitch and freshness and power of tone.

Hardly has the rush and excitement of the Parish Festival subsided when, without any time for the preparation of new music, and indeed with scarcely sufficient time, I imagine, for proper brushing up of old music, Christmas is upon us, and the recent tribulations of the choir are duplicated with the omission of the procession of Guilds. Of course, from Ascension Day to St. Clement's Day is a long, restful stretch with no festivals occurring; but most of it is summer weather, during which many choir singers mysteriously vanish from their places (reappearing as mysteriously when the hot weather has spent itself), so that less can be accomplished than one would probably suppose in an interval of that length.

I take the liberty of writing of these things, Mr. Editor, because as a musician, I have thought of them, and because I am of opinion that they are things which, in justice to our choir, should be given due consideration by those who attend the services in St. Clement's. In spite of the possibility of its being attributed to prepossession, partisanship or parochial loyalty, I cannot refrain from saying, in conclusion, and without intending the slightest disparagement to other organizations, that I doubt the possibility of finding in the city a choir of sufficient vitality and resource to wrestle with the overwhelming requirements of our service with results as little disastrous as those experienced by our own sturdy-throated singers.

Respectfully,
A CRITIC.

Xmas-tide at St. Clement's.

It has indeed been a good Xmas for us all at St. Clement's. We felt that we could worship God in truth—room had been made, the place belonged to Him wholly and entirely. The loving hands and hearts which had prepared the many necessary things rejoiced because all was worthy of Him. In their willing offering of time and toil, they did not forget to make ready their souls. Thursday and Friday there was no lack of penitents seeking a share of His grace and truth, whose glory they desired to behold, and on the day of the Nativity many came to give themselves more earnestly and to receive Him as their gift. The first vespers were said in the Chapel of St. John Evangelist, as well as the midnight mass. Low masses began in the church at six o'clock; children's mass was sung at 9.15, and the solemn mass and procession were at 11. At all the services a good number of the faithful were present. Our poor and needy friends and brethren were not neglected. The Sisters provided many a dinner that gave them some Xmas cheer; nor were the Clergy and Sisters themselves forgotten.

Three hundred and fifty-six communions were made on Xmas Day.

The chief numbers of the mass were from Weber in Eb; the others from Schubert in G. The choir was supplemented by the musicians whom we are getting to consider as in some sense belonging to us.

The altar and screen had been carefully prepared, and the altar of St. Katharine, although as yet without its proper ornaments or fitting background, gave that touch of devotion that St. Clement's seemed to need. The Chapel, to a certain extent, supplied it; but it was afar off, not in the midst. Perhaps before another year there may be a "crib" to help us realize the wondrous fact in a more simple and child-like spirit, and it may be stations on the walls to remind us of the climax of the Saviour's life on earth.

Many things remain to be done, but where God gives us his love, and we are grateful to Him, each will do what they can.

A large painting would be the best background for "St. Katharine's." Some scene from her life teaching the value of Divine truth, and how well it is worth fighting for, if we are to be worthy disciples of the Truth and who came to bear witness to the Truth.

Society of St. John Evangelist.

At the request of a large number of the London Clergy, and with the willing consent of the Bishop of the Diocese, the Society of St. John Evangelist, have determined to establish a house in London. A property has been purchased in Westminster, and plans drawn for the house; a chapel will be attached; retreats and special work will be undertaken. It is an encouraging sign of the times in which we are living that such special help is sought, and the efforts to meet the need have the co-operation of authorities in the church.

Personal.

The receipts of ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE do not pay the expenses. For a congregation as large as is St. Clement's the number of papers bought by the members is far too small. During the year 1896 the amount received for subscriptions was only $60.20 (refer to report in paper May, 1897), and during the year 1897 it was only $50.26.

It is not fair or proper to expect people who have no connection with or interest in St. Clement's Church to pay the printing bill of the magazine by advertising in it, nor should one person be expected to pay more than another. For the year 1897 there was a deficit of $70,13, which had to be paid, and one person gave a check for $50 of it, another gave a check for $5. This is decidedly wrong.

The price of 50 cents a year is more than the paper is worth, by comparison with the popular magazines, but the object is not to build up an enormous circulation as a bid for advertising. The paper is published to inform parishioners, and others who are interested, of what is going on at the church, and the business of the paper has been a secondary consideration. Every person who has subscribed, expects the paper each month, often forgetting to pay for it after the first year, and to send bills is a labor and an expense which should not be made necessary.

If the paper is to be continued it must be under a different policy. As the members of the congregation evidently expect the MAGAZINE to take care of itself, the business department must have the first care, and advertisements will disfigure the pages of every issue.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

St. John's Guild is supposed to be the sponsor and guardian of the MAGAZINE, but excepting the spasmodic assistance of one or two members, the Guild seems to be utterly indifferent about how it is published, who does the work, and who pays the expenses.

It has become necessary to conduct the business of the paper on business principles, and if the Guild will not interest itself, it is suggested:

1. That two or three members of the congregation solicit advertisements and subscriptions.

2. That every subscriber who owes money for papers received, pay it at once.

3. That every member of the congregation, who is not a subscriber, send name and money, without further delay, to the editor.

Parish Notes

The little ones of the Infant School had their Christmas festival in the afternoon of Holy Innocents Day. Dolls, toys and candy made them happy.

The Children of the Catechism had their entertainment, and gifts were given to them in the evening.

The Guild of the Holy Child had Christmas meeting on Wednesday, as did also the Guild of St. Martha.

The Mothers had their Christmas Supper Thursday, December 30th. There were about 250 persons present, and all seemed to enjoy turkey and ice cream. When supper was finished there was an exhibition of Christmas scenes.

Friday, December 31st, St. Nicholas' Guild had a very quiet, but happy time.

Monday, January 3d, St. Mary's Guild had their entertainment, kindly arranged by some of our good friends from the Medico-Chirurgical Hospital.

It is with sincere gratitude that we state that the two choir novices who were clothed at All Saints on January 8th, made the solemn decision while taking advantage of the spiritual privileges of St. Clement's.

The same kind friend who gave for the mortgage interest of the Mission House has sent a donation again this year.

Each year the amount of money the clergy are responsible for has increased, and the amount placed by individuals at their disposal has lessened.

The work on the four windows of the church has been completed.

The contract for Crypt Chapel was approved by the Vestry at the meeting on January 11th, but they do not assume any financial responsibility. The Vestry also approved of the plan for endowment as prepared by its committee, an account of which is printed.

One dollar and forty-three cents remains in the Children's Fund. Fifty dollars more is needed to meet the necessary expenses of the year.

Saint Elizabeth's.

On Wednesday evening, January 12th, the Bishop of the Diocese blessed the new church, which is the fruit of the zeal of the Companions of the Holy Saviour. A large number of people, including many friends from a distance, were present on Wednesday evening and on Thursday morning at the choral mass. While not yet complete in all its appointments, one thing is very evident, it is intended as a Catholic Church, to be the religious home of the people and to train them in goodness and the love of God; to cultivate in them habits of devotion. The presence of the Companions assures the permanence of the work. No uninterested lay trustees will be able to exile the people or to cast them adrift, and here many of those who have had that bitter experience will find a rest and place of refreshment, light and peace.

Dr. Mortimer's Jubilee.

The solemn mass at St. Mark's, at which the Bishop of Delaware preached and the Bishop of the Diocese assisted, was indeed a wonderful witness to the strength and power of Catholic advance. The preacher rightly congratulated his brother prelate on the wonderful progress of Catholic principles in this city of Philadelphia.

The Crypt Chapel.

The contract for this has been made with Mr. T. C. Krewson, who made the alterations in the church last summer. The amount of it is $772, this includes the doorway and steps on south side, the plastering of the ceiling, change of columns, finishing of side walls and floor with hollow brick, the wood work and gas brackets. One of the St. Clement's stones will serve as a credence, and a piocina will also be built into the wall. The work itself has been begun, and it is expected to be complete early in March. The amount of money on hand is $470.95, leaving $300 yet to get; there will also be some other expenses. We hope to construct the stairway from the church at no distant date. The money so far has come without appeal or asking.

The Catechism at Christmas.

The first thing that the children did for Christmas was to bring some article of food to be given to the poor on Christmas Day. Every child, boy and girl, as far as we know, brought something, one parsnip, one cabbage, a can of corn, or sugar, or potatoes, or tomatoes, or flour, or tea, or coffee, apples, oat meal, salt, and so on; so that we found altogether between two and three hundred pounds of material to give away. Every one seemed glad to give to Christ's poor, and may God reward the charity. The Infant School was especially generous.

On the fourth Sunday in Advent, there was a written Examination held in the Catechism upon questions founded on all the instructions of the past three months.

The examination was voluntary, and some very good papers were handed in. Jennie Finney's was the best, and she was awarded the gold medal.

The Fete of the Catechism was held the Sunday after Christmas. Billets were recited by Jennie Finney, Alice Griffiths, Bella Hepburn, and George Mutchler. Special rewards were given to Jennie Johnson, Alice Griffiths, and Olga Irvine, for their diligences of the past term.

The Infant School had their entertainment and Christmas Tree on Holy Innocent's Day, in the afternoon, and the rest of the school were entertained by ventriloquism, and so forth, the same night.

The Endowment Fund.

On Tuesday evening, January 11th, 1898, the Vestry formally executed the deed of trust establishing the "Saint Clement's Church Endowment Fund." The Rector signed it, and the seal was attched, duly attested, by the Secretary.

The deed of trust recites the fact that the parish has certain church and parish buildings in which religious services are held; that it wishes to establish a fund to ensure the maintenance of such buildings and services, and that it desires that such sums of money, securities or property as it now has, or may hereafter receive for such fund, shall be delivered to and held by a trustee under the following terms:

1. That the trust created shall be known as the "St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund."

2. That the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities shall be the trustee, whose duty it shall be to receive all moneys, securities, real or personal property that may be delivered to it by the parish or any other person for the Endowment Fund, and to invest the same so as to produce income, and re-invest and accumulate the income so received, and to furnish each year, on the first day of March, an account of the principal and income of the fund received and held by it, with a schedule of the securities and other property so held. It is stipulated that when the income from the fund in any year, ending February 28th, shall amount to $1,000, and not exceed $2,000, the Vestry may order the trustee to pay to it one-fifth of such income, and the remaining four-fifths must be re-invested; when it amounts to $2,000, up to $3,000, then two-fifths of it may be taken by the Vestry, and three-fifths re-invested; when it amounts to $3,000, up to $4,000, three-fifths may be taken, and two-fifths re-invested; when it amounts to $4,000, up to $5,000, four-fifths may be taken, and one-fifth re-invested; and when it amounts to $5,000, or more, the whole of the income may be taken by the Vestry.

3. That the trustee may invest and re-invest the moneys so received in United States, State or municipal loans, bonds and mortgages, ground rents, or in such other securities as it may deem proper. All such investments and property shall be held in its name as trustee for the fund. The trustee may also change the investments in its discretion.

4. In the event of the trustee failing to carry out the terms of the trust, the Vestry may revoke the appointment and select another trustee.

5. The deed of trust shall be duly executed; the terms of compensation to trustee set forth; other details arranged, and the securities and cash thus far collected paid over upon the acceptance of the trust by the trustee.

Then follows the agreement that the parish has paid over the funds in its hands, consisting of $2,000 in investments and $109.46 in cash, to be held in trust in accordance with the terms set forth, and that the trustee acknowledges the receipt of the funds, accepts the trust in accordance with the terms, and agrees to perform the duties imposed upon it for the consideration agreed upon.

Then follow the signatures of the church and the trustee with their seals, and the proper acknowledgements that the signatures and seals were the acts of the corporations in due execution of the deed.

The deed was delivered to the trustee on January 12th, and accepted, and the securities and cash duly turned over.

This formally put into operation the nucleus of a fund that must eventually increase to such amount as will produce an income of $5,000 per annum. It may require a great many years, and certainly will unless large sums are added to it each year.

The Vestry have had prepared the following forms for use by such members of the parish as may wish to remember the endowment in their wills, or to take out a life insurance policy for its benefit:

I. FORM OF BEQUEST FOR PERSONAL PROPERTY.

I bequeath to the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities the sum of ———, in trust for St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund, established by the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Clement's Church in the City of Philadelphia.

II. FORM OF BEQUEST OF LIFE INSURANCE.

I bequeath to the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities the proceeds of my life insurance arising under my policy No. ——, issued by the ———— Company of ————, in trust for St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund, established by the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Clement's Church in the City of Philadelphia.

III. FORM OF DEVISE OF REAL ESTATE.

I devise to the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities my real estate, situated on ———— street, in the City of Philadelphia, or in ————, in trust for the St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund, established by the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Clement's Church, in the City of Philadelphia.

Russian Religious Items.

The "Russian Orthodox American Messenger," of New York, reviewing an article in a Russian periodical by Dr. N. Tolstoy, in which the use of monasteries as hospitals and sanitariums is advocated, remarks:

"We have in Russia 446 men's monasteries, and 235 women's convents. They are scattered pretty well over all the governments, situated mostly outside of towns and cities, amidst excellent hygienic and sanitary condition. According to the report of the High Procurator for 1892, there are 7,464 monks, and 7,566 nuns, besides 6,152 men novices and 21,758 women novices."

The same paper which, by the way, through the kind courtesy of the Rev. Father Hotovitzky, the editor, we hope to receive regularly—contains in its columns, here and there, evidences not a few of a kindly spirit toward Anglicans, and a lively interest in recent ecclesiastical events, relative to Rome, Old-Catholicism, Russian Orthodoxy, and the Polish Movement. If there is lacking a cordial admission of our claims to the Catholicism of the Universal Church, we can hardly complain. Religious movements toward "the unity which is agreeable to His will" must be slow to be sure; premature and sentimental and individual acts and utterances are only straws which may indicate a drift toward a desired haven of peace, they certainly do not argue the existence of corporate agreement. But it is pleasant to read in the "Messenger" so many doctrinal references, views of current affairs, written with precisely the same tone and attitude of mind that characterize the literature of our own communion.

Here, for instance, speaking of the work of a great missionary convention at Hazan, is a quotation from the address of the Assistant High Procurator of the Holy Synod:

"The missionary, especially if he be an ordained priest, should be a model of zealous, utterly unselfish service, should be emphatically the shepherd who is ever ready to lay down his life for his sheep. And the time foretold by the Apostle has now come, when men shall not listen to wholesome doctrine, but shall choose their teachers after their own pleasure, teachers who shall flatter their ears and turn them away from truth to fables."

Another article, a quotation from another paper, relates a three-cornered conversation between an Old-Catholic, an Anglican priest, and a Roman Abbé. It closes as follows:

"Do you know? We, the Anglicans of the nineteenth century, are far away from those who framed the 39 Articles. May be you do not know how they are interpreted, nor that many and many of us already dispute their obligatory character.

"That is quite another question. But then, why don't you declare, as solemnly and authoritatively, in what manner they, the 39 Articles, were proclaimed in their time, that you consider them abolished, inspired merely by the spirit of hostility to Rome, and then use all your efforts to find a firm standard of faith, unalterable for all.

"Your hand, my honored friend! cried the Englishman. If it ever comes to pass—and may it be soon!—that you and we together set out to seek for a calm and safe haven of eternal salvation it is not to Rome we shall go!"

The abbé turned away in displeasure and gazed fixedly on the restless waves.

The Plague in India.

This dread affliction has again broken out, and Fr. Elwin's letter from Poona describes some of the scenes. It brings one face to face with true Christian temper, the heroic type that sees facts as they really are, and then meets them in the power of supernatural grace—intercession, the holy sacrifice, ministering to the dying. His account of the solemn penitential procession through the streets of the heathen town is most thrilling and inspiring. Thurifer, crucifer, banners, choirs, native Christians, priest in violet cope—they have got the real secret of religion, and they are not ashamed to manifest it. It is the true way to do the Master's work. Of how much fairer type than that which disports apostolic zeal on comfortable platforms, fashionable resorts, or in comfortable traveling appointments.

Correspondence.

January 24th, 1898.

To the Editor of St. Clement's Magazine.

DEAR SIR:—As one member of the congregation, representing many others, may I ask of you sufficient room in your columns to call attention to a subject in which we are all mutually interested? It is the need of new confessionals in the church.

Our old confessionals were built when the chapel was the centre of the devotional life of the parish, and when, too, the use of the confessional was confined to a comparatively limited number of the parishioners.

Now all this is changed. The church building is rapidly drawing into itself the devotions of the people, and will continue increasingly to do so when St. Katharine's altar is put into daily use. The number of confessions made is very largely in excess of what it has ever been in the past, and the clergy are confined in the old boxes for a large part of Saturday of each week. When the discomfort and wretched ventilation of these old boxes is taken into consideration, it can be readily imagined that a day so spent by the clergy is a poor physical preparation for the exactions of Sunday following. It has happened that when the chapel was overheated and overcrowded some of the clergy were on the point of being overcome and physically unable to receive their penitents. Now each of us knows how faithfully our clergy have stayed in town each summer for our benefit (if not for their own), and it seems that it would be but a small act of appreciation on our part to provide decently lighted and ventilated confessionals for them in the church building, where the air is plenty and easily changed. Lent is coming soon, and the use of the confessionals will grow greater as the weather grows warmer.

Will not every parishioner who uses this means of grace (and also every one of the many who use it at St. Clement's and are not parishioners) make an offering each week, and mark it "For New Confessionals," no matter how small, to provide our devoted priests with proper accommodations for hearing our confessions and granting us God's forgiveness? Surely it is but little to ask of them. Let each do his share, and St. Clement's Church will soon have another "outward and visible sign" in the church building of the "inward and spiritual grace" so freely dispensed.

A few parishioners have offered to advance the sum required, if any shall be necessary, to complete these confessionals at once. Let us all see to it that they shall not be called upon to loan one cent to enable us to do what each is willing to help do.

Very truly yours,

A PARISHIONER.

PHILADELPHIA, MARCH, 1898.

The Magazine.

Mr. M. B. Markland, who has had charge of the MAGAZINE since the beginning of the new series, four years, has found it necessary to give up the management. It is only proper that notice should be taken of his faithful discharge of the duties. Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., has kindly consented to undertake the duties.

A Kind of Detachment.

The Milwaukee Church Times is a diocesan paper with a large circulation. The editor seems to be a man of taste and discrimination. For over two years now he has been printing articles in his paper taken word for word from the ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE. He neglects, however, to credit the source of these articles; and often we have the interesting spectacle of our own original articles quoted in some other church paper and credited to our exchange It is a lesson in "detachment" no doubt, but it is not the ordinary courtesy. Still we are satisfied if he is. Our concern is only in the interest of truth and honesty.

A Change of Name.

The official name which disfigures the title page of the prayer book of the Church ought to be changed.

The title "Protestant" is false. It identifies the Church with the mass of ignorance, heresy and unbelief in this country usually so named. And the title "Episcopal" is unnecessary. There can be no church without bishops. Both names together are awkward and, in a church which claims to be a true branch of the One Holy Apostolic and Catholic Church, absurd.

One diocese (Milwaukee) has already expunged this word from all official documents. It cannot be long before others will follow.

Truth and good taste alike demand a change of name.

St. Clement's.

It is a very ordinary way to measure the life and work of any given parish entirely by the amount of money given to outside objects. It is all that some congregations do besides paying the market value for distinguished preachers, and the usual outlay for comfortable "religious" privileges. It may be their best, it may be all right.

The first duty and claim upon the people of St. Clement's now, as it has been in the past, is to furnish an example to the whole country of what the Catholic faith is; to maintain this in a worthy manner, and in this way to enrich the true life of the Church by cultivating the supernatural. In doing this it accomplishes more than by any mere vulgar and ostentatious display of sham generosity. It is a worthy object, a true aim; it will be criticised by envious foes without, by lukewarm friends within. To carry this out in the proper manner, we need the unselfish coöperation of all worshippers; each must be content to surrender their personal likes and dislikes. It is easy to suggest unusual schemes and arouse frantic enthusiasm for useless efforts; it is far harder to restrain the imagination and undertake useful and necessary work for the parish welfare and church's good. We ask our true people to disregard these lower aims, and even at the sacrifice of the new and picturesque, to labor for holiness, goodness and devotion, and spread religious influence rather than money donations.

As a matter of fact, the Clergy of St. Clement's are called upon to perform a very large amount of spiritual work that ought to be done by the clergy of other parishes; the ignorance and neglect of these others is the cause. It is work that by its nature little can be said; it cannot form part of the annual report, and no expert can give a money valuation. We venture to say, that in the spiritual work of not only Pennsylvania but of the general Church, no parish has done more than St. Clement's.

The Church Periodical Club.

This Society supplies periodicals and books to those of the clergy and laity who are unable to get them in any other way. It obtains names and addresses from Bishops of those who desire such literature, and then enlists the interest of any who are willing to send regularly.

Miss Adelaide F. Howell has been appointed Librarian for St. Clement's, and will be glad to give information, names and addresses, etc., to those who are interested. Address, 2121 De Lancey Place.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed Friday, June 3d, as the time of his visitation to St. Clement's to give the Sacrament of Confirmation. The clergy desire to have the names of those who desire to be prepared. Notice of the beginning of lectures, classes and other instruction will be given later.

Renewal of Pledges.

The financial year of the parish begins on Lady Day and envelopes will be sent out before that date to all who have made use of them during the past year. It is greatly to be desired that others may contribute more regularly than they have done. It is surely possible for many, who are not now contributing to the expenses except as they feel moved, to make a new start. The two means, pew rents and envelopes, which are used do not include even one-half of our people, and a study of yearly reports does not show that those who give in other ways bear their rightful share. It ought to be a more serious question with them than it is. The number of envelopes does not reach 200. One is thankful to be able to say that in their use of envelopes those undertaking are faithful, but more ought to pledge themselves. Each one ought to bear their own share at least.

Endowment.

We sincerely hope that all those who love and value the ministrations of the parish may realize the importance of the endowment, and give as they are able.

Some can also leave a legacy; others can take out a life insurance in favor of the parish; all can give an offering from time to time, and remember it in their prayers.

The Crypt.

The work has sufficiently advanced to give us an idea of this our latest improvement. Through a special donation the door and doorway into the south garden has been made somewhat more elaborate than was at first planned.

The cold weather coming so suddenly caused some trouble in the plumbing and also made additional expense. It is hoped that all may be completed and the altar erected during March.

Some few of the congregation have been interested in the work; for several reasons no appeal has been made and no money has been asked.

Notices.

In attending mass said at the Altar of St. Katharine, worshippers are asked to sit in the south aisle of the church and up to the front.

In attending the offices said in the choir of the church, kindly sit in the middle of the church and as near the front as convenient. A little carefulness in these respects will, we are sure, be a help to devotion.

Parish Notes.

Through the generous kindness of a parishioner the men of the choir had a bountiful supper on Tuesday evening, January 18th. Several were kept away because of engagements.

The annual supper of St. Vincent's Guild took place on Tuesday January 25th, at the Clergy House.

A "Birthday Party," for the benefit of the "Seashore Home," was held on Wednesday, January 26th. The entertainment was heartily appreciated, and many divulged their years and some in addition for the good of the cause. The proceeds amount to $145.00. It is not too late for others to report.

The Trustees of the Hospital, formerly St. Clement's, have vacated the building at Cherry and Lambert streets, and removed the patients to their farm somewhere outside the city, where, we learn from the newspapers, very convenient buildings have been erected.

Mr. Sellers is preparing plans for the confessionals in Church. The amount received will be found in Special Funds account. Not a very encouraging response to the appeal.

On the Feast of Candlemas, St. Mary's Chapel (St. Mark's Parish), was blessed and opened for services—a very noble and worthy building, giving a devotional home for the work among the people to whom it is intended to minister.

The candlesticks for St. Katharine's altar have arrived, and are now in place; the crucifix was sent, but not being entirely satisfactory has been delayed. A kneeling desk for communicants has been made by one of our own people and is in place; the same man also made the credence.

A lamp has been promised also to hang before the altar. The Tabernacle is also being fittingly prepared for use. A piece of lace for the superfrontal is also being made.

The agnus for the new black chasuble, which has been worked at All Saints' Home, Baltimore, is finished, it is a very beautiful piece of needlework.

The clergy of the parish, during the last few weeks, have undertaken quite a good deal of work elsewhere, and have promised as much as they could during Lent, and yet we shall not have as much help as usual in our own work.

Bishop Dudley, of Kentucky, has been elected General Secretary of the Board of Missions. The election, while pleasing some, has not been received with unanimous approval. The general idea is not a pleasing one.

Over $1,000 has been given by individuals of our parish for church work in Philadelphia outside our own limits. While these sums do not appear in our parochial reports they are none the less offerings of parishioners.

Advantage has been taken of the blessing of the Sacrament of Extreme Unction by many sick persons.

Through the kindness of a parishioner the piano in the choir-room has been put in good order.

Mr. W. A. Goodwin, an acolyte of St. Clement's, has been appointed organist and choirmaster of St. Timothy's Church, Roxborough.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Guild of St. Vincent was held Wednesday evening, February 2d. Mr. I. Ernest Linton, Warden, and Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., Secretary and Treasurer, were unanimously re-elected for ensuing year.

Five hundred and sixty-six communions were made from January 23d to February 19th.

Attention is called to the fact that the Solemn Mass on Maundy Thursday will be sung at nine o'clock.

Retreats.

February 23d. Parochial.
March 1st–5th. Outer Sisters of All Saints.
March 6th. Holy Cross Guild.
March 20th. Men's Retreat.
March 27th. St. Vincent's Guild.
March 31st. St. Mary's Guild.

It is specially requested that those intending to make the Men's Retreat may send their names in writing to the clergy, signifying what meals they desire.

Absolute silence is the rule at all the retreats.

Noonday Services.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew have arranged for the usual services each weekday during Lent, at 12.30 o'clock, at St. Stephen's, Tenth street above Chestnut. The Companions of the Holy Saviour have arranged for the usual services at St. Paul's, Third below Walnut, at 12.30 each day. Addresses are to be made and a short service.

Bishop McVickar.

The consecration of the Bishop Coadjutor of Rhode Island took place at Holy Trinity Church on Thursday, January 27th, the whole ceremony was dignified and impressive in almost every particular, specially noteworthy was the approval of non-communicating attendance given in the very stronghold of former opposition and by those who strongly and conscientiously resisted the practice.

The Living Church informs us that a silver pitcher and tray were presented to the Bishop by about 150 of the clergy of this Diocese. A very strange selection, one would think, of a gift to a Bishop by his brethren.

Lent.

The general rules for Lent for an earnest Christian would seem to be:

Prayer.—All prayers to be more real, and some additional times; to hear Mass, if possible, each day.

Fasting.—Abstain on Wednesday and Friday; eat meat only once on other days. Eat plain and simple food. Not to take part in amusements.

Almsgiving.—More liberal and frequent; a definite rule as to amount, and then more for self-denial.

The services will be in Church. Special preachers have been arranged for the Sunday night services.

February 27th: Rev. Bernard Schulte, Vicar, St. Peter's, Philadelphia.
March 6th: Rev. Herbert Parrish.
March 13th: Rev. T. Bingham, C.S.S.S.
March 20th: Rev. Robert Ritchie, Rector St. James the Less, Falls of Schuylkill.
March 27th: Rev. Samuel Upjohn, D D., Rector St. Luke's Germantown.
April 3d: Rev. H. R. Sargent, O. H. C.

Catechism Notes.

The children of the Catechism and of the Infant School have given $8.50 for a gift of an ablution cup for the Rector of St. Chrysostom's Church.

During Lent the Stations of the Cross for children, will be on Fridays, in church, at four.

Emma Barraclough was given a medal for learning, perfectly, the Athanasian Creed.

The instructions have so far been on the Creed. During Lent they will be on some incidents in our Lord's life.

Parents should ask their children what Diligences are, and then see that the children write them.

All who are confirmed should be careful to make their Communions and Confessions regularly during Lent.

The Practical Religion.

Rev. Vernon Staley, whose book, "The Catholic Religion," has been so very useful, has published another book under the above title. No doubt it is excellent in many ways, but seems to be lacking in definite advice the things a Christian ought to do. Such things as confession, fasting, rule of life, frequency of Communion, are put, if at all, in a way that would be of little real help to an earnest man. "What Catholics Believe and Do," by Rev. Arthur Ritchie, is much more useful.

The Epiphany.

There is a report that the Epiphany and St. Luke's are to be united. We are glad that an amicable settlement of this whole unfortunate affair has been reached. It will at any rate permit the expenditure each year of the large income resulting from the sale of Fifteenth and Chestnut. This can hardly have been possible during the past year or so.

Among other things a large amount of money is set apart for a new building for Epiphany Chapel. This particular work is not needed, and never has been, in its present location; it is just a kind of religious plaything. Some arrangement ought to be made with the Church of the Redemption, and make there a strong centre for religious work.

Stations of the Cross.

One of the most helpful and popular devotions during Lent at St. Clement's is the making of the stations. Last year, when held in church, a very goodly number of people took part. The pictures that we possess are mean and unworthy, and for this reason we put it before our people. We realize that a proper set will cost a good deal of money, but some one with great love of our Lord and devotion to His Passion, may feel disposed to set up in the church this memorial as a permanent ornament. We make no apology for asking all these things needed for the "beauty of holiness," because we firmly believe it to be our special work to afford to the Church and God's people every help in our power.

The New Confessionals.

The new confessionals have been ordered. There are to be two of them, each arranged to hold two Priests and two penitents. They will be placed in the Church one on each side of the door from the corridor to the centre aisle. They are expected to be very attractive in appearance. The material is quartered oak and the style will be in harmony with S. Katharine's Altar and the choir screen.

The cost will be about	$250 00

Benefit for St. Lawrence.

An entertainment was given in St Clement's Hall on the night of February 16th, under the management of Miss Wolfe, in aid of the beneficiary fund of St. Lawrence's Guild. The program consisted of the farce "Betsy Baker, or Too Attentive by Half," five tableaux vivants taken from Gibson Pictures, Minnehaha from Longfellow's "Hiawatha," and the "Tempter." During Part II there was a solo by Mrs. Voorhees. The principal parts were taken by Mr. Chas. H. Hickman, Mr. W. O. Lamson, Jr., Miss Wright and Miss Peale. Mr. Hickman provoked great merriment in the audience by his comical rendering of the part of Mr. Mouser in "Betsy Baker," and the other characters in the cast of that excellent piece were well acted.

The tableaux called into artistic pose, in addition to those whose names have been mentioned, the Misses Jenkins, Miss West, Miss Butz, Messrs. McClenthen, Rommel, Linton and Borden. The "Tempter and the Angel" were particularly well sustained by Mr. Rommel and Miss Wright. A slight flurry of excitement when one of the curtains caught fire, might have grown into a serious panic, but for the admirable self-possession of those who were posing in "The Story of a Sleeve." Many thanks are due to Miss Wolfe for her active and tireless promotion of this entertainment, and to all those who so kindly co-operated with her to make it a success.

Communications.

An article has been received and is hereby acknowledged, signed "A Worshiper at St. Clement's for over Twenty Years." As the writer did not enclose a card or name, no further notice can be taken of it.

Editor of St. Clement's Magazine.

SIR:—I believe it to be very important that the matter of paying off the debt on the Parish Building and Clergy House should be kept constantly before the congregation to result in success.

The total debt is now $8,000.

Twenty-five cents each week from every communicant would discharge this debt in one year. This does not seem much to ask, especially as many could give largely in excess of this sum; and after making due allowance for some who perhaps could not afford even 25 cents per week, it could be accomplished by this time next year if we all go to work in earnest.

G. E. F.

Instruction.

One of the very common experiences of a priest who undertakes to get at the wants of individuals, is to hear the confession from some earnest person that he "doesn't know anything about Christian doctrine and especially about the Church." "When I was confirmed," he will be told, "years ago, I received virtually no preparation at all. Our rector never taught us any doctrine. I didn't want to be confirmed; didn't see any special reason why I should, for it seemed a mere formality. But the night before the Bishop was to come to our church, the rector came around and begged so hard that finally I consented and was confirmed. It was all very unsatisfactory, and I feel now that I must begin all over again if I am ever to have any intelligent religious life."

This, we submit, might well represent the case of many thousands of Episcopalians, a sad testimony to the apathy of former generations, and a sadder cause of much ignorance and inertness in the present. One great reason why the Church does not advance with a vigor and rapidity that would startle the religious world and convert the irreligious, is that her own children do not know her true character nor the religion which she teaches. We are not urging now any "High-Church" dogmas, nor contending for any school of thought, only calling attention to the fact that as the result of past neglect many churchmen are grossly ignorant of the fundamental truths of the faith, quite destitute of any systematic knowledge of religion. Probably there is not the same neglect that there was formerly, at least not in the cities. Methods of Sunday-school instruction are being studied, and the best thought of earnest men is being given to the subject; and if mistakes are made, there are also marks of improvement.

A word of encouragement is due to those individuals who become aware of their ignorance in doctrinal matters; it is the first step toward knowledge to realize one's lack of it. We are sure that in our own and other parishes where the whole faith is uncompromisingly held, it is a great pleasure to the Clergy and Sisters to instruct privately any who may make their wants known. Such instruction, taken leisurely, with full opportunity for the ventilation of difficulties, is many times more valuable than the hurried general work that is usual in class instruction and should be sought by those who feel the inadequacy of their former training.

The Queen and the Bishops.

We have been waiting for one of the American Bishops who attended the Lambeth Conference to write some reminiscences of the reception of the American Bishops by the Queen, Victoria. But somehow none of them seem disposed to give the facts to the public.

From the reports received here at the time this reticence on the part of the Bishops might be interpreted as discreet. It is said that the Bishops, in their street garb, were made to stand in line along the palace garden driveway, and that the Queen was then driven down the line in her donkey cart, attended by a couple of servants, while the Bishops bowed profoundly. There was in fact a picture of the proceedings printed in a London weekly, we believe. It is added that the Queen spoke to the Bishop of New York, but to each of the others she merely nodded her head. Afterwards the Bishops had tea and cakes on the lawn, and then were sent home.

The entire affair, as described, seems discreditable. The Queen's antipathy to the Church is well known. But that the American Bishops (except in a few well-known and absurd cases) could allow themselves to be treated in such a manner seems impossible.

It is hoped that some Bishop who was present at this reception will either deny the rumors of it, if they are false, or denounce the discourtesy of it, if they are true.

The Parish Banner.

Work on the banner is progressing very satisfactorily; it is not expected that it will be finished much before next St. Clement's Day. Such delicate shading and fine work as is needed cannot be pushed through without sacrifice of beauty or quality. Naturally one wishes to see it completed, but it is wiser to wait. Such parts as are finished give a very good idea of it; much better than any designs.

The Sisters are also to work an Ecco Homo for the new purple chasuble We cannot expect this to be done before next Advent, or perhaps Lent. It is hoped that the folded chasubles of this new set may be used on Palm Sunday.

Devotional Use of Church.

The daily masses and even-song have been said in the church since the beginning of Lent, and it has made a very great difference in the number of people present. The many years during which St. John's Chapel has been the centre of the whole devotional life of the parish has naturally made it full of holy associations to many who have there learned the love of God and the reality of the supernatural life; that can never be changed; but there is no doubt that the use of the church will bring all home to the heart and consciences of an increasing number of people; God has a claim on the souls of all; has a message and purpose for all. Perhaps some day a proper chapel, not a room fitted up to serve as such, may be possible for us to open out of the church and be a real part of the sacred building. The church is also quieter for private devotions. St. John's Chapel will still be used for Mothers' Meetings, Guild services, Bible classes, instructions, meditations, special services. In fact, it will be used more than the church has been used in the past.

The Crypt Chapel is to all practical purposes complete. There will be some necessary delay in getting the glass for the door in place, and a few other details are still to be attended to. There has been no attempt at ornament. Just a plain, pleasing appearance, and we think Mr. Sellers has succeeded. It will be remembered that the altar, which is of Georgia marble, is a memorial of Mr. Wm. Halsey Wood, the well-known church architect. He designed it after the pattern of the fourth century, and it was placed in his own oratory under the dedication of Our Lady. It was hoped that the chapel might have been so far completed that the requiem on the year's mind—he died 13th March 1897—might be celebrated there, but the unexpected delay prevented this.

An approach from the church by means of a stairway is evidently desirable, and we hope may be possible during the summer; it would have many advantages. Up to this time $712.47 has been available for this chapel; no appeal has been made, and not quite $200 given directly for it by less than a dozen people.

Endowment.

We sincerely hope that all those who love and value the ministrations of the parish may realize the importance of the endowment, and give as they are able.

Some can also leave a legacy; others can take out a life insurance in favor of the parish; all can give an offering from time to time, and remember it in their prayers.

All Saints' Home, 2034-36 Cherry St.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

The Clergy House.

A parish which is served by a number of clergy living together and with small stipends ought to take care that the clergy house is sufficient for the needs of the work. It is a matter of serious and vital concern that no unnecessary strain should be added from lack of thought and interest. The present building is not large enough for the amount of work that is expected. It ought to be enlarged, and the subject is presented to the members of the congregation. There is plenty of ground for the purpose.

Eight hundred and eighty-two Communions were made from February 20th to March 20th.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed Friday, June 3d, as the time of his visitation to St. Clement's to give the Sacrament of Confirmation. The clergy desire to have the names of those who wish to be prepared. Notice of the beginning of lectures, classes and other instruction will be given later.

The Stations.

The attendance on Friday evenings has been very large. There is a reality about this devotion when made with proper dispositions that helps a sincere Christian. Very often devoutly disposed people do not so much need to cultivate their minds as their hearts. If we are to learn to love God for Himself, we must cultivate the affections by meditation on His love as shown in the events of His passion.

Many persons have also made the stations on other days during the week.

Attention is again called to the change of hour for the Solemn Mass on Maundy Thursday; it will be at 9 o'clock.

Parish Notes.

Pew rents are due April 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the vestry Monday, April 4th, 2 to 4 P. M.

Every communicant is asked to fill out Easter Communion cards with name, address, and time.

Liberal offerings are asked at Easter for general expenses and the special funds.

Envelopes were sent out at the beginning of the financial year to all those who had used them during the past year. If any others desire a package they can obtain them by giving names to the clergy.

The election of Vestrymen will be held on Easter Monday.

On Easter Day, at the Solemn Mass, members of the congregation will be admitted at door of Parish Building up to 10.30 o'clock, when other doors will be opened. Admission to gallery only by ticket, and for special reasons.

The services during Lent have been very well attended, especially the daily Masses.

Attention has been called to what might be a misleading direction, in the last issue, as to worshippers "sitting during mass" at St. Clement's. We do not follow or care to introduce the Italian custom—our people kneel.

Rev. G. H. Moffett gave one of the noonday addresses at St. Paul's.

A large photo of Raphael's Sistine Madonna framed in dark oak has been given for the new Crypt Chapel.

The Rev. H. Parrish, who has been staying at the Clergy House, has gone to Toledo, Ohio, St. John's Church, to spend the rest of Lent and Easter Day. For six weeks he took the services at Calvary Church, West Philadelphia, the rector being ill.

The Rev. W. C. Clapp and Rev. E. Wright have also helped at Calvary on certain Sundays during Lent. Rev. C. C. Quin has taken services at St. Michael's, West Philadelphia and Hahneman Hospital. Rev. W. C. Clapp gave the Parish retreat at St. James, Washington, before Lent, and preached at Wilmington on third Sunday in Lent, and had service for nurses at Orthopaedic Hospital, March 8th.

Rev. G. H. Moffett will preach the noonday address at St. Stephen's Monday in Holy Week.

The palms will be blessed before the seven o'clock mass on Palm Sunday. The procession, according to the usual custom, at eleven o'clock.

Ashes made by burning the palms of last year were blessed on Ash Wednesday, and placed on the heads of those who were minded. It is a pious and scriptural custom used by the saints of the olden times, and followed by some modern sinners that they may remember that they "are but dust and unto dust shall return."

Fair linen, cloth and lace has been given for St. Katharine's altar and also for the altar of Our Lady. The candlesticks for St. Katharine's are in place.

Fr. Convers, formerly rector of St. Clement's, spent two days in Philadelphia. He gave an address to the Mothers on Thursday night, March 10th, said mass at seven o'clock on Friday, and gave the meditation at noon. Many old friends thus had the pleasure of seeing him and bidding him good-bye as he sailed for England on Saturday.

The Pennsylvania Company filed annual report of condition of Endowment Fund March 1st. It amounts to $2,303.10.

The second annual report of the Board of Managers of the Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital and Colony Farm has been received.

The matter of Epiphany Chapel has not yet been decided. Various plans of removal have been suggested, including one to go to the building at 17th and Summer streets, formerly Church of the Atonement; this would require some alteration of parochial boundaries.

The St. Barnabas Guild for Nurses held a service in the chapel on Tuesday, March 15th.

We gladly call attention to the appeal of the All Saints' Sisters printed below, as well as to commend the intention of the furnishing and adornment of the chapel which the Sisters desire to make a special memorial of their late Mother Frances Helen, who was the first Mother of the Community in America, and its Superior for many years.

The Sisters of All Saints have been requested to consider the possibility of extending their work in order to meet a twofold need, which arises from the conditions of modern life.

Physicians have long recognized the necessity of maintaining houses where temporary rest and retirement can be found by ladies who are overtaxed by the ever increasing strain of life.

The Clergy are equally urgent as to the importance of establishing houses for spiritual rest and refreshment for those who are wearied, burdened and perplexed by the anxieties or sorrows of their life in the world.

Both are agreed that these necessities can best be met in a Home under the care of Sisters, and it has been suggested that it will best serve its purpose, if located in or near some large centre of life.

Those to whom this plan commends itself, and who would be interested in helping the Sisters to establish such a work, are asked to address their communications to Retreats.

The Parochial Retreat on Ash Wednesday was made by a large number of people. The chapel was well filled at all the addresses. These were on the "Three Notable Christian Duties, Fasting, Almsgiving and Prayer," and were given by Rev. G. H. Moffett.

The retreat for Outer Sisters of All Saints took place in the Sisters' chapel, beginning Tuesday, March 1st, and ending Saturday, March 5th. The Rev. Thos. Bingham, C.S.S.S., was the conductor, the subject of the addresses being "The Our Father."

The retreat for members of Holy Cross Guild took place in the Sisters' chapel on the second Sunday in Lent. Every place was occupied. Rev. G. H. Moffett gave the addresses. The subject of the addresses was "The Transfiguration."

Rev. W. C. Clapp conducted the Men's Retreat on Mid-Lent Sunday; a number availed themselves of this opportunity. Some Old Testament characters were taken as subjects of the meditations.

Easter Day.

Communicants are reminded that every one ought to prepare themselves for Holy Communion on this day as the old rubric used to put it, "of which Easter shall be one." The large increase of communions during Lent would seem to promise an increase over last year.

Good Friday.

The Bishop of the Diocese has again signified his approval of such a relaxation of the strict fast as shall permit some food to be taken in the morning. The permission was requested on account of the prevalence of so much sickness.

St. Ambrose, who died in 398 A. D., talks about "saying mass" when he is speaking of celebrating the Holy Communion.

Special Preachers

We feel under very special obligation to those clergy who have preached for us on Sunday nights. It is a satisfaction that the congregations have been so large. Rev. Walter Lowrie kindly took the place of Rev. H. Parrish, who started West before March 6th, otherwise the order was as printed in the March number.

Selection from the Pen of Eugenie de Guerin.

"When we betake ourselves to Calvary, we see what it costs us to reach heaven. Oh, many tears, agonies, thorns, the vinegar and the gall! Have I tasted of all these? My God, take from me all complaining. Sustain me in silence and resignation at the foot of the cross, with Mary and the women who loved Thee."

"To the heart when it is sad, human props that bend beneath the weight of sadness will not suffice. This reed must have better support than other reeds. Oh, how well Jesus has said, come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden. It is only there in the bosom of God that we can weep tears that truly relieve us."

To her brother she writes:

"I speak of the things of eternity to all whom I love, for you see I do not love them for this world. It would not be worth while. It is heaven that is the home of the soul."

Editor ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE:

Dear Sir:—Last year the Rector taught us what prayer, love and energy could accomplish when he piloted the crusade to such a happy victory. This year the congregation might follow that precedent, and silently and systematically give for the payment of the mortgage debt on the plan set down by G. E. F. in his communication printed in the March number of the MAGAZINE. There is little doubt but that this could be accomplished were every one to repeat their last year's efforts. A.

The Crypt Chapel.

The altar is under the dedication of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The chapel is not expected to be used for public services, but only for special purposes. After the completion, the clergy will gladly give permission to members of the congregation to use the chapel for purposes of devotion.

Permission will also be given for bodies of devout persons to lie there until time of burial.

Have you Books to Give?

Any sort of books will be acceptable to the Sunday-school Library. Those that are unappropriate can be sold, and others bought for the money. So send us anything you can.

The music on Palm Sunday will be Tours' Mass in F. On Easter Day and Low Sunday, Gounod's Third Mass will be sung, with complete orchestration. This service was rendered here about six years ago under Dr. Tipton. Stainer's Festival Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis will be sung at Even-song.

Incense, Not "Roman."

An Englishman a short time ago happened to be talking to a Russian Bishop about the services we have in our churches. The Russian asked: "Do you use incense at every service?" "No," the man replied—"not at every service," smiling to himself when he thought how many services incense was not used at. "Oh, you ought to," answered the Russian, "it is nothing but pure Romanism to have any service without incense."

How strange! Protestants regard the use of incense as pure Romanism while the Russian Church, which is opposed to Rome as much as any, regards it as a mark of Romanism if incense is omitted.

"Why and wherefore?"

"The Southern Churchman."

This is the organ of our Evangelical friends, and in the past has been violently antagonistic to every aspect of the Catholic movement. The management and editorial work have been alike able, even if the latter was rather fierce.

For some reasons, of late, there has been a marked change in its reference to St. Elizabeth's Church and the work of the Companions. There was an appreciative kindness that was refreshing; and in a late issue attention has been called to the fact that in speaking of frequent and daily communion they have used the term "mass" rather than "celebration."

Children should submit themselves to their governors and teachers, because the latter design only their good both in the restraints which they impose, and the directions which they require them to follow. Observe the skilful gardener, how he prunes the irregular shoots, at the same time that he is careful to guard and encourage the tender branches which he leaves for fruit. Why does he do this? Wait till summer, and you will see the tree laden with fruit, the branches trained in their proper places, exposing their rich clusters to the sun; the whole a beautiful sight to the spectator, and promising abundant profit to the owner. But near it is another tree, which was not pruned in spring, and the branches of which were suffered to grow as they pleased. You see what is the consequence; it has no fruit in summer. What the gardener does to the tree, your teachers and pastors do to you.

Remember that your characters are not yet formed, but forming. A person is studying the art of painting, and is engaged upon his best piece. He takes it to his master, who adds a line in one place, and rubs out a false stroke in another. This he does every day till the work is completed. Is the other angry with his master because of these corrections? No, he knows that every correction is a positive benefit, and

The Rich and the Poor.

Work is the law of life. The rich are those who have received their wages in advance; the poor are those who labor first and afterward are paid. But work is the law for each. Not a meal can be had that some one has not labored to produce; if it is not yourself, then yours is the duty to give an account of the return you made for that meal. No one was ever born to be idle. Time lost is often a soul lost.

The principles of the business world are incompatible with Christ's law. Christianity cannot be reconciled with the greed, selfishness and ambition of business life. There is no compromise; a man cannot hold on to both, nor can he just drift into the Christian way. He must take a direct and decided step, a step which may cost him much or everything.

Old Back Numbers Wanted.

The following numbers of the first series of the MAGAZINE are needed to complete the Rector's file: Dec. '82, Jan. '83, Feb. '83, July '87, Dec. '88, Jan. '89, Mar. '89, Oct. '90, Dec. '90, Feb. '91.

If you have and will spare any number of the original series from 1882 to 1892, we will thankfully receive them.

The Crypt Chapel.

The portion of the cellar beneath the sanctuary is at last arranged; the small fourth century altar is in place. The dedication in honor of Ever Blessed Virgin Mary took place on the Wednesday in Holy Week, after the seven o'clock parochial mass, and many have availed themselves of its privileges for devotion. On Maunday Thursday the altar was beautiful with flowers and lighted candles to the glory of our Lord and in honor of the Blessed Sacrament.

Tuesday, April 12th, the anniversary of the Consecration of St. Clement's (1864) the first mass was said at the altar, and in spite of the very early hour the chapel was filled with worshippers.

There are still various things to be done in the chapel, and from time to time we hope money may be given for its decoration by those who value the privileges. Gas fixtures are needed; chairs, a vesting case. Money for heating and ventilating as well as for a stairway from the upper church.

On Monday, April 18th, a requiem was said for the repose of the soul of W. Halsey Wood, in whose memory the altar was given.

The New Confessionals.

The money needed to pay the amount of contract is in hand, although more is required to buy curtains and cover the incidental expenses. The boxes were ready for use about the middle of Holy Week; they are a decided improvement to the west end of the church; the quartered oak is of a beautiful grain, and the details of carving although simple, are well executed.

Rogation Intercessions.

Continued intercessions will be kept up on the Rogation Days beginning at the mass on Monday morning, May 16th, and lasting until 6 A. M. on Ascension Day. It is hoped that each member of the congregation may promise to use the intercessions each day at some definite time. Members of St. Vincent's Guild always undertake the night hours. We hope a larger number may share this year.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese will give the Sacrament of Confirmation on Friday evening, June 3d, at 8 o'clock. Instruction each Friday at 8 P. M.

Confirmation classes for girls at the Mission House on Monday and Thursday at 5 P. M. For women on Tuesdays at 7.30 P. M.

Father Benson, S. S. J. E., kindly came from Boston to preach "The Passion" on Good Friday; the arrangement was made too late for any public announcement; the church was crowded with a devout congregation. It was a very great privilege to spend these solemn hours under such saintly guidance and with such spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

The eleventh annual retreat of St. Vincent's Guild was held on Passion Sunday. The chaplain was conductor.

The retreat for St. Mary's Guild was held on Thursday in Passion week, March 31st. Rev. H. Page Dyer kindly gave the addresses. Forty members remained the whole day, and 24 others a part of the day.

On Palm Sunday, the blessing of the palms took place at 6.30 A. M., and those minded received them. At 11 o'clock the palms were distributed to all who took part in the solemn procession. Solemn Mass was sung; there was a large attendance of people.

Many people attended the masses during Holy Week; the change of hour for the Solemn Mass on Maunday Thursday did not interfere with the attendance, and gave more time for the preparation of the church for Good Friday. A great many worshippers availed themselves of the privileges of the Chapel of Our Lady.

Four hundred and ninety four communions were made on Easter Day, and while many strangers were present at the Solemn Mass and Even song, with a few exceptions they behaved as realizing it was God's house. The music of Gounod's third Mass was very well sung by our choir, with orchestral accompaniment; a quartette of horns added to the dignity of the procession. At Solemn Even song again a large congregation was present, and a solemn Te Deum was sung at the close of the procession.

Mr. Remont deserves our most grateful thanks for his faithful and untiring work.

Low Sunday the same music was sung as on Easter Day.

The 114th Annual Convention of the Diocese will be held in St. Luke's Church, beginning on Tuesday, May 10th. Notice has been given to the clergy to send in a certified list of the registered communicants of the parish to the Registrar of the Diocese.

Mr. W. A. Goodwin, a member of St. Vincent's Guild and organist of St. Timothy's Church, Roxborough, kindly played the organ at week day services during Lent. Mr. T. W. Sears, another communicant played at certain other services.

A lamp has been promised for the Crypt Chapel, also lighter and extinguisher. Chairs are needed.

Lace has been given for the altar of "Our Lady" and for St. Katharine's.

A carpet is needed for St. Katharine's altar.

Five hundred and ninety communicants have in some way made known to the clergy that they received Easter Communion. About 140 are still to be heard from; of these all but a few are known to have received communion at some time since last year.

The Paschal Candle was decorated again this year by a communicant as an Easter offering.

There has been paid out for the Crypt Chapel up to the present time $881.93. About $10 is still due; the heating and ventilation have still to be provided for.

The number of communicants of St. Clement's parish is 725.

Several parishioners are again giving time and care to the church yard, and hope to greatly improve its beauty.

The sexton, who lately underwent a serious operation, is reported as regaining his strength.

Church of the Epiphany.

The Bishop of the Diocese has sent copy of the petition of the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of Church of the Epiphany to change site of present Chapel to 17th and Summer streets, in order to accommodate such of their parishioners as may not be able to attend the proposed new place of worship, 13th below Spruce. The Bishop and Standing Committee are to consider the petition on Tuesday, May 3d, at 4.30 P. M., at which time objections may be presented.

This new site is within the boundaries recently assigned to St. Clement's parish. In the event of the Bishop giving his permission, there must be a rearrangement.

The Easter Music.

The opinion seems to be quite general that the music this Easter was superior to anything thus far accomplished by the present choir. To every parishioner interested in the work of the choir this must be gratifying, because it shows continued progress and improvement; whilst, to the active members of the choir itself, it affords deep and sincere satisfaction because of the hard and trying work they willingly endured for the purpose of achieving this pleasant result.

Easter Benefactions.

Earnest and hearty thanks are extended by the choirmaster and choir boys to the two ladies of the congregation whose kind thoughtfulness provided the boys with such tempting and palatable Easter eggs on Easter Day. The gifts were distributed in the choir room at the conclusion of the morning service, and came as a pleasant surprise to the unsuspecting little choristers who had labored with all the power and zeal at their command to make the great occasion a gigantic success.

These things may seem small and trivial matters to us staid "grown-up" folks who have left our childhood far behind and forgotten our youthful freshness of enthusiasm; yet we believe that Easter is a great and important day—the anniversary of a miraculous and wonderful event—and, if we take the trouble to observe, we shall not only find that the "small and trivial matters" referred to are momentous affairs in the estimation of a child, but we shall also be forced to admit that such little acts of thoughtfulness accentuate the beauty of the day and leave in childhood's memory wondering recollections which are, in many cases, never effaced while the divine breath of life continues to animate the mortal body; and which, perhaps—for who shall prove the contrary?—linger on forever in the tenacious faculties of that incomprehensible existence, the immortal soul.

Conversions.

The daily papers have recently printed extended accounts of the "conversion" to the Episcopal Church of certain eminent doctors of divinity, formerly connected with the Presbyterians, and these announcements have no doubt been the occasion of self-congratulations among some churchmen.

It seems to be the highest notice of missionary effort held by some of our people, lay and clerical, and especially of the bishops, to stand with outstretched arms ready to receive the dissatisfied, delinquent, unorthodox and recalcitrant members of Protestant communions. To get one of these "converts" to accept a prayer book and to find the places in the Psalter, is regarded as a triumph; to go further and submit to Confirmation completes the conquest. If he cordially dislikes the Presbyterians or the Baptists, his quondam associates, he is regarded as a "staunch churchman." By a peculiar process of reasoning it is sometimes predicted that some learned doctor whose erudition and literary skill have heretofore been devoted to overthrowing traditional beliefs, and to the advocacy of unheard-of theories of interpretation, will make an "excellent Catholic," if he only takes orders in our church.

Now much might be said of the inevitable imperfection of a convert's view, and almost as much of his motives in the case of the rank and file of ordinary people. There is often along with such imperfection a real desire to learn and to submit to the whole faith; every Catholic congregation can show examples of such development from feeble beginnings. But it is a very different matter with these accessions of a ministerial sort. These printed "reasons" only show how the motive has been chiefly a desire for personal comfort; and a tolerance which does not take into account a definite revelation of God.

Such conversions do not strengthen the church, they weaken and confuse it; they offend the faithful and scandalize those who contemplate a change for deeper reasons; there is in them little, if any, real repentance, and as a consequence the angels do not rejoice.

The Coming of the Holy Spirit.

There they continued where they were gathered together, the small band of Disciples, the mustard seed which was to grow into the great tree of the Catholic Church; there, secluded from the world and its distractions, in solemn retreat, they awaited the advent of the Comforter, musing on the past, on their intercourse with Jesus, whom they had heard, and seen, and looked upon, and handled; remembering the tone of His voice, His features, His form, perhaps tracing some resemblance, some look of His in the face of Mary, His mother, who was in their midst, and intent on the future, with holy anxiety picturing to themselves what this other Comforter should be, not knowing whether He would appear in human guise or as an angel of light, or whether He would be all divine; wondering how He would be to them what Jesus had been in His personal ministry, and how He would even have a closer fellowship with them, and that not for a time, but forever.

They continued in supplication, listening to every sound, expecting His arrival every moment, when suddenly the building trembled with the sound of a rushing mighty wind, and, to their amazement, there spread out upon them and around them from one centre a seraphic shower, tongues of fire like one vast halo of glory, and "sat upon each of them," and the Apostles were filled with the same spirit which had dwelt from the days of Nazareth in the manhood of Jesus. It was the enlargement of the Spirit's home in human nature; as He had been able to rest on Christ, so now the fiery tongue sat upon each of them, so calm and abiding is that Presence. Oh, dearly bought mystery! All the mysteries of our Lord led the way for this; His birth, life, death, resurrection, ascension, glorification were so many stages for procuring it.

The Apostles staggered beneath the mighty power of the Spirit's presence; they were insufficient to bear the influences of the divine illapse. * * * The Apostles were so carried away with the Presence which had taken possession of them that they showed marks of being in some exalted condition, some preternatural state. * * * It was a transforming power which the Spirit exercised within them; they went into that room earthly, they came out spiritual men. * * * They went in in darkness, they came forth enlightened; they went in fearful, they came forth courageous; they went in sober, they came out inebriated with the fire of Divine love, which had hitherto burnt in the sacred heart of Jesus; that fire now glowed on earth as well as in Heaven; the Lord had His fire in Zion and His furnace at Jerusalem. Whatever had been the previous operations of grace in the Disciples, whatever had been the endowments of the Spirit for the sacerdotal office, they remained in that upper room, helpless and unequipped, until by the coming of the Holy Ghost they became the temple of the living God and the Lord God dwelt among them.—"Hutchings: Person and Work of Holy Spirit."

It will bring sorrow to his many friends in St. Clement's Parish to learn that the Rev. W. C. Clapp has accepted the call which he received before Easter.

The Rich and the Poor.

Work is the law of life. The rich are those who have received their wages in advance; the poor are those who labor first and afterward are paid. But work is the law for each. Not a meal can be had that some one has not labored to produce; if it is not yourself, then yours is the duty to give an account of the return you made for that meal. No one was ever born to be idle. Time lost is often a soul lost.

The principles of the business world are incompatible with Christ's law. Christianity cannot be reconciled with the greed, selfishness and ambition of business life. There is no compromise; a man cannot hold on to both, nor can he just drift into the Christian way. He must take a direct and decided step, a step which may cost him much or everything.

"Another (church) carries on its own missionary operations, and gives us nothing."—Extract from report of North-west Convocation. The extent of the work thus alluded to, in its effect upon the Diocese, is perhaps realized in a way, but apparently not appreciated. The number of masses said at our altars, of spiritual help given to individuals belonging to many parishes in and outside the Diocese, may be taken as instances of this activity. We do not claim that we are doing more than we ought, but it may be that other parishes greatly praised for liberality in other ways are not doing their share. An evidence of our missionary work is the fact that in nearly every church in the city the Holy Communion was celebrated early on Easter Day. Some people remember when St. Clement's alone gave people this opportunity. Other results might be given.

Even in regard to money, the people of St. Clement's, we feel, have not been remiss. Large amounts have been given to various missions, etc., by individuals, the parish not being credited. It makes no real difference. Some of our people kindly furnish the clergy with the information, others prefer to give where they feel there is a need.

Rogation Days.

The intercessions were made with much devotion by a number of persons, many becoming responsible for a definite time and others taking part as they could arrange. The members of the Guild of St. Vincent were responsible for the night hours, from 7 P. M. to 7 A. M. Three days of continued intercession, each day with its general subject and special matters. The World, the Church, this congregation cannot fail to bear fruit and win a blessing for those who shared the privilege as well as those for whom prayer was made to God.

Ascension Day.

The services were the same as in former years, the number of communions made was somewhat larger than last year. The solemn mass was at seven o'clock, after which the choir and acolytes had breakfast in the upper school room. Later in the day the boys of the choir went on a picnic to Swarthmore with the Choir Chaplain, Rev. C. C. Quin.

Intercessory Prayer.

Again we have had the privilege as a parish of keeping the Rogation Days with continual intercessions day and night. No one can fully estimate the importance and value of such a custom. It is a witness and a protest. A witness to the reality of the supernatural world, that the all-sovereign God does exist, that He cares for the men and women living in the world, that He does hear and answer their prayers. A protest against indifference, worldliness, paganism, which treats God as if He was at a great distance, and that any one can live a true life by his own efforts. It is not necessary to discuss objections to power of prayer, there is no difficulty to the one who really loves God. The clergy would be very glad to have more requests for prayer sent to be publicly asked at Mass. These ought to be written down, and we are always very glad to print requests for prayer in the magazine. As individuals we ought to spend some time each day in intercessory prayer, both for general and special objects.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

The carpet for St. Katharine's altar has been promised.

A sprinkler for holy water has been given; it is of silver.

A vestment chest has been promised for the Crypt Chapel.

The lighter and extinguisher for Crypt Chapel has been given.

A set of six mortuary lights have been promised. They will be of wrought iron.

The Lady Chapel in the Crypt is usually open during the whole day for devotion.

Rev. H. Parrish has become rector of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, San Francisco, Cal.

Rev. W. C. Clapp begins his duties as Rector of St. John's, Toledo, O., on Trinity Sunday.

The Rev. S. Macpherson, of Nashotah House, will take duty at St. Clement's during the summer.

The Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital had a formal opening of their new buildings at Oakbourne on Thursday, May 19th.

The prayers of the people are asked for God's guidance and direction in the selection of a Priest for our mission work.

The photographs of the Crypt Chapel, recently taken, are very good, and can be seen and purchased at the Sisters' House.

The Bishop of the Diocese has issued two special prayers—(1) For our Army and Navy; (2) For our Soldiers and Sailors.

A pair of vases have been given for St. Katharine's altar, the cost being met by the savings of two children during their last illness.

In case the district west of Twenty-first street is included in our limits it will give us even more satisfactory limits than the present ones.

The gate on Appletree street is only open on week days for the early masses. This is to prevent the destruction of the grass and flowers in the garden.

The Rev. E. Wright took the services on May 15th at St. Andrew's, Buffalo, N. Y., the Rector being on duty at Camp Black, N. Y., as chaplain of a regiment.

Rev. P. Owen-Jones, formerly one of the clergy of St. Clement's, has been making us a visit. It was a great pleasure to us that he chose to spend his time of convalescence with us.

On Wednesday, May 4th, the year's mind of Mrs. Wolfe was said. The new black chasuble given by the members of the Altar Guild in memory of Mrs. Wolfe was used for the first time.

The Vestry at their last meeting voted to have the steam-pipes in the cellar covered with some preparation. This will be a great aid in economizing the heat, for the hot pipes will not be brought in contact with the cold air.

The crucifix for St. Katharine's altar came in time to be placed on the altar May 1st, the anniversary of the death of Mrs. Caroline Hollingsworth Wolfe, in whose memory it is given. Mr. Henry Vaughan designed it, and the work was done in Boston.

The Bishop in his Convention address gave a long list of important matters that had taken place in various parishes of the diocese, the payment of the ground rent of St. Clement's was not included. Subsequently when his attention was called to the fact he made a separate statement to the Convention in regard to it.

Epiphany Chapel has received permission to remove from the corner of Twenty-third and Cherry streets to Seventeenth and Summer streets. It is expected that the former property will be sold, and on the latter ground plans have been prepared to erect a new chapel and parish building. It would seem that a new assignment of our parochial bounds will be necessary because of this change.

The Diocesan Convention.

Three days of almost entirely useless talk on the part of a few individuals would about sum up the value and result of the meeting of the Convention. The report of the Board of Missions seemed to set up money as the only test of missionary activity. The report also contained a statement that certain parishes had refused to contribute, asking that the facts be learned and the Bishop requested to "take such action in the matter as he may deem expedient to bring any such parish and its rector to a sense of their canonical duty." The debate on this resolution and on mission work was most sad and painful. Although St. Clement's was not mentioned by name, it was the general impression that it was particularly referred to. The whole affair was so out of place that it aroused great opposition and was defeated. The spiritual work of missions, or even the reaching of people's souls, seems rather an unimportant division of the whole work. The whole machinery ought to be abolished; then the Church itself would have some chance to do spiritual work.

Guild of St. Lawrence.

A part of the plan of the Guild in its mission work was to gather gradually and without obtrusion, statistics that would not only afford a written and permanent record of each "mission case," available for the use of succeeding clergy and workers, but that would also give data for summaries and generalization which might be of more than local interest and value. The plan has thus far been but very partially fulfilled, but the following may be worthy of record. These statistics cover a period of three months, and embrace a territory which includes eleven of the twenty-five wards or districts which had been comprised in the Guild's field of operations:

1. Number of individuals in the visiting lists after deducting "removals," "lost sight of," "transferred," "lapsed," etc.	493
2. Proximate number of houses occupied by these individuals, and where calls have been made	215
3. Proximate number of houses visited in these wards	1,200
4. Number of baptisms from these wards	19
5. Number of children attending Sunday-school or Catechism from these wards	76
6. Number of women attending Mothers' Meeting with some regularity from these wards	46
7. Number of communicants	106

Some other and more general facts gathered during the systematic effort to trace out the names found on the Baptismal Register, are as follows:

Number of those known to have died.	216
Number of those with no address	295
Number of those who cannot be found.	104
Number of those who have left the city	131
Number of those who have moved from given address but can probably be found	220

An interesting item, and one which will give gratification, is, that of those who, once connected here, have moved from the parish, more than two-thirds are known to be in attendance at other parishes of our own communion.

Acknowledgment is made of bags received from Mrs. Von Leer, Mrs. Grubb, Mrs. Connelly, two from Mrs. Clay; a bundle from Miss Neill; several packages unmarked, which cannot be identified.

During the past year upwards of eight hundred pieces of clothing have been made under the direction of the Employment Committee for sale or for distribution.

During Lent 273 pieces of clothing were given out and $21.30 paid for work.

The Seashore Home.

The house will be opened on June 27th.

Application for admission should be made on Tuesday afternoons (3 to 5 o'clock), until June 14th. Sheets, pillow cases, tablecloths, blankets, chairs and baby carriages are specially asked for.

The collections on Ascension Day were given for the Home, and donations are asked from all.

Gladstone.

"The greatest layman of the century," as he has been called, is dead. Surely his place is among the noblest of the sons of his mother, the Church of England, for he taught, by word and by example, in all the enormous sphere of his influence, the lessons of religion she had taught him, that more important than party tenet or national interest was one's duty to God; that beyond all the glories of the world, its honors and its powers, lies one's direct responsibility to the Creator.

Gladstone possessed not only a mind beyond and above his fellows, but also a character of sterling worth. Even his bitterest opponents will confess that whatever he did he thought was right. We see in him a man immersed in national and international interests, honored with everything that the world could lay at his feet, and yet who, with it all, placed God first, and made the Catholic Church a more important factor than any worldly interest could be.

Let those who scorn the Church of England as un-Catholic and without living Christianity show any other layman to place beside him in Christian worth and influence. We are content to hold fast to that Church which in one century could produce two such men as Edward Bouverie Pusey, Priest, and William Ewart Gladstone.

Divorce and Baptism.

In the discussions now rife, preparatory to the meeting of the General Convention in October, when new and fuller canons on Marriage and Divorce are to be promulgated, one point at least is clearly established and is to be kept in mind: Where only one of the two persons living together, is baptized, there is nothing that binds him or her to the other, but he or she is free to marry some other baptized man or woman.

There is no such thing as marriage between a baptized person and an unbaptized. Hence each is free, if they separate, to marry elsewhere. St. Paul tells us in I. Corin. vii, that if a man have a wife that is an unbeliever, he is not on that account to put her away, if she consent to dwell with him, for the reason that perhaps the unbeliever may be converted; and the same is said where the wife is the Christian. But if the unbeliever depart, the believer is not bound in such a case. If the unbeliever refuses to live peaceably, the Christian is at liberty to contract marriage with a Christian.

Before condemning as sinful re-marriages after civil divorce, we should be careful to ascertain whether or not the parties were baptized, for perhaps no law of matrimony, either of God or of the church, has been broken, however we may feel that on some other grounds there is much to censure.

Secret Marriages.

Secret marriages have always been condemned by the Church. Any condition that makes it desirable to keep the Church ignorant of one's marriage must be a condition that makes such a marriage wrong altogether under the circumstances.

A clandestine or secret marriage is valid, just as marriages before a civil magistrate are, but to be married so implies a disrespect to God and a total indifference whether He gives His blessing or not that leads one to feel that that blessing may be withheld. If God has made matrimony a Sacrament, and has seen fit to provide special grace for those who enter the responsible and soul-testing condition of wedlock, it is the duty of everyone who prepares for marriage to make as the most important aim the obtaining of God's blessing.

"Every subordinate is bound to obey every lawful command of a superior officer; not every command of his lawful superior."—Church Times (English).

The Paschal Candle.

Fr. Puller spent Holy Week and Easter in Florence, Italy. His account of his visit is printed in the Cowley Evangelist for May. He was present at the washing of the feet of thirteen old men by the Archbishop in the Duomo. "Even to people who could not follow the words of the antiphons the service must, I should think, have been edifying, because it was comprehensible and because it preached the central Christian lessons of humility and charity." The description of the Easter Eve ceremonies is very interesting and vivid. "The holy fire, which is always kept alight, and which was originally brought in the crusading times from the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem." At the beginning there were no candles or lamps lit in the church, not even before the Blessed Sacrament. After the procession "there followed the glorious blessing of the Paschal candle, the most rapturous piece of Western devotion that I know. The Easterns have something even more rapturous on the same day. The Paschal candle was lit from one of the three candles on the deacon's staff, and then all the lamps and candles on all the altars and in all the chapels of the cathedral were lit from the Paschal candle. The symbolism of it all was exquisitely beautiful and deeply Christian. The risen Christ being a fountain of light to a world sitting in darkness and fulfilling His own words: 'Behold, I make all things new.' The ceremony dates from the fourth century and is quite worthy of that century." Nearly 1,000 communions were made at anglican altars in Florence on Easter Day.

"When indefensible claims have been put forward by Church authority, or flagrant evils have displayed themselves in the Church's practical system, a revolt of the Christian conscience takes place, which, for the time being, is fatal to discipline. * * * So, to a certain extent, it is now, when our final courts of appeal in cases of doctrine and discipline cannot, as at present organized, be defended on the lines of Christian principle."—Liddon's Special Occasions.

Dr. Landis, R. I. P.

The last number of Church Times speaks of the work and life of Dr. Landis in Corea. One of the speakers at the meeting in behalf of the Corean Mission says: "The Bishop was now mourning the sudden removal, by death, of Dr. Landis, whose devotion was remarkable. Bishop Corfe might be able to get another doctor, but certainly not another Dr. Landis. He loved the people and they were not easy to love. He lived in a little Corean house, and except for books, with nothing but Corean appliances about him and an entire absence of what Europeans deemed necessaries of life. Here he acquired a knowledge of the people such as had been rarely if ever equalled by anyone in Corea. It was one of the many mysteries of the Providential ruling of this world, that such a man, in the prime of life, should have been taken away just when he was in the midst of his work and things were promising to be more successful than they had been."

Bishop Corfe said there were no particulars of his death and says: "The simple, devoted, loyal, patient life of that man had made a profound impression on him."

Dr. Landis volunteered for this work when Bishop Corfe was on his way through this country; he had been greatly interested in Iron Cross work here with Fr. Field. Two years ago he made a few days' visit at the Clergy House while on a visit home.

Growth of the Catholic Movement.

It is most interesting to read in a recent magazine the account of the last twenty-five years' progress of our American Church.

It is a bishop who writes, and it makes one's heart rejoice to hear him expressing his thankfulness for the ever-growing Catholicity of the Church in faith, practice and ritual, for the formation of religious orders of priests (as the Holy Cross and the Companions), for the founding of many sisterhoods and the establishment and work of the Cowley Society.

When we recall that scarcely thirty years ago a vested choir was considered Popery by the ecclesiastical authorities of this diocese, and that only eighteen years ago our own dear parish was tried before the bishop and condemned for worshiping our Lord in the Sacrament, for Confession, for the use of vestment and mixed chalice, then surely we feel joy to find a bishop speaking in print of "Eucharistic Adoration and Penance," the abolition of black gowns and bands and the general introduction of real eucharistic vestments, "some of the handsomest chasubles and copes to be seen anywhere;" the increasing number of masses in churches and the greater reverence in the service, due to Catholic ritual. Surely we see that God's grace has been poured upon us bountifully when we consider the marvelous spread of Catholic truth. The "Oxford Movement" has become the movement of the whole Church, and almost every Churchman to-day is a "Puseyite," as such were contemptuously called half a century ago. In the article of which we are speaking the bishop tells us that to Pusey, "saint and scholar, we and the whole Anglican Communion owe a debt of incalculable weight," and that "the influence of Pusey, Keble, Church and Liddon is second to none." The whole article (in the "Church Eclectic" for March) is worth reading. Let us go on, ever with more trust, hope and thankfulness to God.

Christ is present at His own table to those who come by faith, and gives them spiritually to eat His body and to drink His blood. We know not how Christ communicates Himself to the soul of the believer who rightly receives this Holy Sacrament, but he knows that Christ has been with him and has deigned to enter his heart. A free-thinker once asked a countryman, "Why he went to church?" "To worship God." "Pray, is your God a great God or a little God?" "He is both, sir." "How can that be?" "He is so great, sir, that the heaven of heavens cannot contain Him; and so little that He dwells in my heart." This he knew for himself, and was not confounded by the scoff of the profane; and often does the Christian know, who has been receiving the Lord's Supper, that Christ has communicated Himself to his heart, and has made him to eat of heavenly food.

Parish Workers.

A body of earnest Christian people is needed in the carrying on of the ordinary work of the parish. "I want to do some church work" is frequently the outward evidence of an interior love of God; to find, discover, invent something that may be a help and not a hindrance is often a very serious undertaking, and the reason is that self-will and self-love have too much sway. If only people would faithfully perform what has to be done, and in the way that it has to be done, they will be of real help, but they get tired—their work must give an opportunity to show their importance, to manifest their superior cleverness, or to carry out some idea of their own, the result is that all this beautiful energy is wasted effort, it weakens the parish, it takes the place of religion, it supplies food for those whose vocation is to be "grumblers," a very uncomfortable sort of existence.

Unnoticed and unknown is the lot of those who are really useful, they do the routine, washing, dusting, scrubbing, ironing, cutting out, keeping the garden tidy, mending, cleaning, visiting disagreeable and uninteresting people and children, bringing children to baptism, teaching them, preparing for confession and looking them up for communion and attendance at mass; it does not require elaborate reports, or committees, or interviews, or notice, or appreciation, it is tiresome, exhausting, disappointing.

One of the tendencies of the day is over-organizing everything, and it is absolutely fatal in all religious effort. "Church people are so petty" was the remark of a practical layman the other day, and it is partly true, they are sensitive, fussy, critical to an unfortunate degree. It need not be so. Unity of action is necessary—the recognition of the responsibility that others have for our well-meaning, but mistaken actions. Originality is a great but dangerous gift, and ought to be carefully watched in church affairs.

Saint Clement's has well defined boundaries now. Our efforts ought to be directed, for the most part, within these limits in our aggressive mission work. While willing to minister spiritually to others who come to us, we ought to recognize our true vocation, our real influence. There ought to be a house-to-house visitation of our own district, it is to be hoped that this may be undertaken in the fall. We are anxious that many besides the faithful ones, who now give time and energy, may offer themselves for the disagreeable drudgery of the things that have to be done.

C. B. S.

There was no celebration of the Festival this year at one special place, but the different Wards were requested to arrange for services. The meetings of the Council and Annual Conference took place at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York. Vespers were sung by St. Saviour's Ward in the Chapel of St. John Evangelist on Wednesday, June 8th, at 5.15 P. M. The Ward consists of 59 members.

The prayer put forth by the Bishop of the Diocese, in which we petition God on behalf of all, whether of our countrymen or of our enemies, who fall in battle, will commend itself to all. We trust that many also are mindful of the duty of praying for the repose of the souls of the fallen. We notice with pleasure in one parish paper (the Message, of Grace Church, Elmira, N. Y.) that in that parish a weekly mass is said for this object. In parishes such as our own, where a weekly requiem is said the year round, abundant opportunity is given for fulfilling this pious duty.

Parish Notes.

The green dossal has been enriched by the addition of a canopy.

The choir boys had a picnic at the Park on Saturday, June 11th.

The 7.30 mass on week days will be continued until the end of June.

The Guild of the Holy Child had a picnic at the Park during the month.

No 8 o'clock mass on Sundays during July and August, and no sermon at the 9.15.

A great many members of the congregation have gone away for the summer months.

Rev. S. MacPherson, of Nashotah, has taken up his residence at the Clergy House, and will assist in the work during the summer.

Various members of the Altar Guild have worked along faithfully during the month, finishing work already begun, and preparing other work for the summer.

Those who had not been already admitted to Communion and had received the Sacrament of Confirmation, made their first Communion on Sunday, June 12th, at the 7 o'clock mass.

Three members of St. Vincent's Guild, with one of the clergy, took part in a service at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Rosemont, by invitation of the rector of the parish, on Thursday afternoon, June 16th.

Some people have not forgotten that the services of the Church are maintained during the summer and salaries must be paid; these thoughtful ones have already sent in their weekly offerings for the time in which they are absent.

Various appeals have been put out by different committees for funds for the relief of those who are engaged in the present war. These hardly seem to be the appropriate subjects for Church notices, and yet they appeal to the patriotic and loyal sympathies of all. No doubt members of the congregation, as good citizens, will do their duty toward those who are now serving our country in the field or on the sea.

The Rev. F. E. Mortimer sends us a little book, which we are glad to commend to the notice of our people—"Devotions Before the Blessed Sacrament." It consists of litanies, hymns, intercessions; particularly we would speak of "The Holy Place of the Tabernacle" and "Subjects for Special Prayer" as likely to be helpful to many in the practice of intercessory prayer. Copies of the book may be ordered through the Sisters at the Mission House.

It has been suggested that some members of the congregation might be willing to give money for the purchase of material for a white silk cope for St. John's Church, Toledo, O., the parish of which Rev. W. C. Clapp has just taken charge. This is an entirely appropriate way for those who may have received spiritual help to manifest their appreciation. All money for the purpose should be placed in the alms bason marked, or may be given to the rector.

St. Mary the Virgin's, San Francisco, of which Rev. H. Parrish is rector, has only linen vestments, and we would like to send enough silk to make a proper set of vestments, the Altar Guild of St. Mary's could, we are informed, make them up.

Both these parishes are outposts of Catholic truth and practice, and we are sure that this interest would be not only encouragement to those who formerly ministered here, but also to the people who are bravely standing for God's principles and the Catholic faith under very trying conditions.

The Seashore Home.

On Wednesday evening, June 15th, a strawberry festival was held in the school room for the benefit of the house at Point Pleasant. For some reason or other not as many people were present as we expected, but those who came of our own congregation or other friends seemed to have a pleasant time. The music, vocal and instrumental, was very enjoyable. The rooms were decorated with flags, and looked very pretty; those who worked to make it a success are to be congratulated. About $30 was realized, besides various donations in kind, which will be useful at Point Pleasant. It is expected that the first party will go to the Home the latter part of June. The appreciation of the people is shown by the fact that they are anxious to go year after year. There are always some discontented grumblers who are never satisfied with anything, who talk a good deal and complain because they can't have their own way, or because their children are made to obey and not permitted to make things uncomfortable to the rest; these may deceive some people, but it is to be expected. The house is always full, and more and more of our own people take advantage of its benefits every year.

Each member of the parish ought to take some interest in this work. It has been rather amusing the stir that some very wealthy congregations have made over plans of a similar nature, whereas many of our people treat the whole with indifference, and some with criticism; to the latter we can only reply that every work has its defects, and we are convinced there is less foundation for theirs than there is generally for such advice. The Sisters are grateful to all who subscribe each year of our own people or other friends, as well as to the generous persons who send donations of provisions or furniture.

John Douglass Brown, Jr., Drexel Building, is the treasurer.

The Children's Fund.

The amount given in December was only $104.50, $50 of this had to be given for the Infant School, and the remainder was all we have had for the children's entertainment at St. Clement's-tide, the Christmas festival of the Catechism, and the organist at the 9.15 mass up to May 1st; in other words, expenses have been $112.07, which leaves a deficit of $7.43 up to May 1st, with no money on hand to meet the cost of the children's picnic, or the organist for the rest of the year.

The Sunday-School Excursion.

On Saturday, June 18th, we had our annual picnic of the Sunday-school to College Park, on the upper Delaware. The day was delightful in temperature and clearness, and as the excursion met no accidents or difficulties, we had a happy day. The amusements consisted of merry-go-round, swings, toboggan slide and refreshments. The boat landed us about eight o'clock at the wharf on our return.

Mission Work.

Among the valuable auxiliaries to Church work in neglected sections of the city it is reported that a branch of the Christian Endeavor Society has been found useful. When this was stated in one of the convocations, the presiding officer evidently was not aware of its existence, although he was in charge of the mission. Fortunately the members were loyal to the Church and its teachings, and in kind but firm language they expressed their disapproval.

Ignorance Among Church People.

When one goes away from home and his parish, and meets other Episcopalians, he is very often astounded and shocked at the vast and awful ignorance of these, his fellow-churchmen. Who that has been taught the Catholic faith and belongs to a Catholic parish has not discovered this, when away in summer, at hotels, boarding-houses, or the homes of friends? Many so-called Episcopalians have not the dawn of definiteness about such fundamental doctrines as the Trinity and the Incarnation. Apostolic succession is an empty sound of syllables; the meaning and importance of the sacraments and the priesthood are unthought of.

This is not the result of prejudice or theological bias, but of sheer ignorance. One wonders what many priests can be doing, they certainly are teaching their people nothing. The people themselves are really gasping after truth, and will receive with avidity any morsel we have to give. Let us who have been taught the faith feel our responsibility to enlighten them. The campaign of Catholicity is the campaign of education. It is impossible for any Catholic to be anything but a missionary in these days. The influence of our lives and conversation, the regularity and zeal for our Church duties, as well as our knowledge of the faith are all equally powerful for missionary work.

Loyalty.

It is the highest desire of the faithful Christian to be a true witness to his Lord and Master, to put His honor before everything else, and never, of his own will, countenance or encourage those who are untrue to the only religion of God. An avowed pantheist is a dangerous person in the moral world, no matter how skillful or brilliant he may be intellectually his influence is fatal, his advice perilous, his example worthless. To use an official position to increase such a person's notoriety is a grave and serious error; to nominate such an one as the proper individual to give wholesome counsel to young men at a serious moment of their life evidences a very untrue Christian sense of responsibility; it can not be offset by honorary degrees given to highly placed Christian dignitaries.

The manner in which laymen play fast and loose with important principles is one of the discouraging features of the times in which we live. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

It is a well known fact that the distinguished individual who preached the Baccalaureate sermon before the senior class of the University of Pennsylvania has given up the Christian religion, and is a pantheist, one who does not believe in a personal God. This being no prejudiced opinion, but established by public utterances and published statements so manifest that even secular papers call attention to its dangerous character.

Religious Principles.

"I should not like to hurt their feelings" is not an uncommon remark that we hear in these early summer days from the lips of good people who intend to make a visit to Protestant friends. It is the excuse for attending religious worship other than that of the Church of God. It throws light on that petition of the Litany: "From all false doctrine, heresy, and schism, from hardness of heart and contempt of Thy Word and Commandment, good Lord, deliver us."

Better be true to God, and so, perhaps, bring friends to think of the absolute character of God's truth and so win them to that truth, than sacrifice one's principles at the call of counterfeit charity. So offend God and deceive those who are worthy, at the very least, of sincerity of action on our part.

Discipline.

"Christ gives to each of His members by the Sacraments, the virtue of His sacrifice, of His free self-giving to the Father of love. By the Eternal Spirit He offered Himself, and He gives us the same power and means of offering ourselves, and this is the reason for the tarrying of the Bridegroom; He is giving us time to learn the one business of life—discipline; to train the human heart and will in the exercise of the grace of Christ in the virtue of sacrifice, self-giving to God. Naturally every fallen soul lives in itself, for itself. God saves it by giving it a new nature. Christ Incarnate comes to be in it a new principle, a new life. But the will of each Christian has to assimilate that principle—to give itself up to that new life—to learn to exercise its new movements, methods, mysteries, powers."—Cowley Magazine, for June.

Declarations.

There has been a very disagreeable interference on the part of some honest, perhaps, but misguided, Protestants in London with worship in certain Churches. It has not reached a very serious or alarming stage, but some good people have become frightened, and have taken advantage of a conference of prominent priests to prepare, sign and publish a declaration asserting principles that most would agree to, but the meaning and motive of which many will misunderstand at the present time. It is a relief to find certain of the clergy, while agreeing to the principles, object to the time and manner of their assertion. The declaration hardly seems necessary; the benefits to be obtained seem doubtful. "Don't give comfort to the enemy."

Diocese of Shanghai.

It is a pleasure to learn that the Bishop of Shanghai has obtained the services of two experienced Catholic priests for the work of his jurisdiction. Several others of less experience are to join the mission. The Bishop, we believe, is to be in this country during the summer, and no doubt Church people in Philadelphia will have an opportunity of learning the exceeding wonderful outlook there is in China for mission work as the result of the changes that have taken place in the Celestial Empire. All accounts seem to show that the breaking up of the Empire could not fail to be of benefit, not only to those countries that obtained "spheres of influence" and coaling stations, but to the Chinese people.

The Church Congress.

Up at Pittsfield, Mass., on June 7th, the Church Congress assembled. This is a society for the discussion of moot ecclesiastical problems by great intellects. There are a few good men, orthodox and Catholic, who take part; there are others, also, who use this for their annual opportunity of venting all sorts of loose theology, advanced notions and pet theories. But there is a certain distingué air of intellectuality over it all.

The error those men make, who hold the faith and yet take part, lies in assuming that queer, uncatholic and unchristian doctrines, which were met by the Church centuries ago and refuted, are entitled still to a sober hearing and discussion. If that were so, we would have to go over the Nicene creed every century. Such erroneous doctrines require patient study and refutation when met with in individuals, but surely there is no justification for allowing them to be put forth, as if entitled to an equal place with the true faith.

Divorce.

A declaration intended to impress the importance of proper action on this subject by the next General Convention has been signed by certain Bishops and distinguished priests. The expressed intention being that all legislation must be in accord with the marriage service. This is eminently proper and right. It is unfortunate that the fact of baptism is not more clearly brought out in its bearing on the question. Exact theology is always based on definite principles; the principles laid down are:

"1. That the marriage law of the Church is clearly set forth in the marriage service; namely, that Christian marriage consists in the union of one man with one woman until the union is severed by death.

"2. That this law does not permit the marriage of any person separated by divorce so long as the former partner is living, whether such person be innocent or guilty."

Of course, Christian marriage is only where both parties are baptized, and the use of the marriage service by a priest for any others ought to be forbidden.

Mr. Gladstone's Funeral.

The simplicity and dignity of the arrangements of the public funeral of this great man must impress every one.

The lights burning about the bier while the body was lying in state; the crowds of devout people, men and women of all ranks, who showed their respect; the presence of watchers, priests and laymen who testified their affection and devotion.

When the body arrived at Westminster one of the Canons said prayers for the repose of his soul. This great man died as he had lived, a true Catholic, one who believed in and was not ashamed to practice his religion.

The English papers, both religious and secular, have, of late, naturally overflowed with Gladstoniana. Many of the incidents related bring out very strikingly the deep piety and reverence so characteristic of the man. One such, related by Bishop Wilkinson, of St. Andrew's, is especially affecting. One morning in last Passion Week the Bishop celebrated in the bedroom of Mr. Gladstone, he being by this time very feeble. In the beginning of the service Mr. Gladstone was lying down, but as it progressed his feelings of reverence became too strong for him, and he got out of bed and knelt on the floor. The Bishop recalled, also, Mr. Gladstone's having come to a church where he was celebrating many years ago, on the morning of the day when he was first called upon by the Queen to form a Cabinet. After receiving the Blessed Sacrament Mr. Gladstone remained so absorbed in devotion that he forgot where he was, and did not retire with the other communicants, but remained kneeling on the altar steps till the end of the service. What a strong, deep hold upon the verities of the unseen world is revealed by such incidents. They show what was the source of the man's strength, a life "hid with Christ in God."

The Church Congress has come and gone, held this year at Pittsfield, Mass. Full reports of the speeches delivered are not to hand, but from what have appeared it does not seem that any very startling pronouncement was made, though, especially in regard to Holy Scripture, there were some of the usual rash and sweeping assertions. Prof. Briggs, who made his first appearance there as a Churchman, was moderate in comparison with one clergyman, who announced calmly that the evidence for the acceptance of many Epistles of St. Paul as canonical is no better than the evidence for the acceptance of the productions of Hermas or Barnabas—thereby differing, however, from the Catholic Church. The speaker was probably a young man, but he might have remembered what Dr. Jewett is reported to have said to his students: "We are none of us infallible, not even the youngest of us."

The Church in England has been very much stirred up of late on the subject of ritual, and events have been taking place, in London which reminds us very much of the ritual riots of some thirty years ago, such as we find described in the life of Fr. Lowder. Since the trial of Bishop King, a few years ago, things have gone on very quietly in England in regard to these matters, but within the past month or two a certain very militant Protestant of the name of Kensit has entered upon an anti-ritual campaign in London. Accompanied with a band of those like-minded he has visited certain of the London Churches where a full ritual is in use, and has created some disgraceful disturbances. This has brought the whole subject up again before the public, and occasioned numerous clerical gatherings, producing the usual crop of manifestoes and declarations, which we suppose, like so many before them, will speedily lapse into oblivion. The whole agitation, however, shows us that the old militant Puritanism is by no means dead in England, and it shows us, too, what a different state of affairs we have to deal with here. Such a campaign as that of Mr. Kensit we cannot imagine here. But we need not take it as altogether a healthy sign that such is the case. The Kensitites are at least in earnest over religion, however misdirected their earnestness. But the comparative quietness with which the ritual advance in this country has gone on is not necessarily a sign of a corresponding acceptance of that which is signified thereby, and which is the only justification for its existence. In the early days of the movement every ritual advance was deeply significant, and the opposition that it stirred up showed that it was felt to be so. But it is not so now. We have seen many things formerly supposed to be very "High" taken up and used in churches where the Catholic faith is neither fully taught nor practised, and it may be that in the future we shall see, ornaments and practices which we regard as essentially Catholic similarly treated. We must, therefore, be on our guard against attaching too much importance to the spread of ritual, or congratulating ourselves on the absence of such bitter opposition to it as has lately been exhibited in England. The former is too often mere æstheticism, and the latter an evidence of easy-going tolerance, or indifference. What we, as Catholics, have to look to is that along with carefulness about and regard for the ritual of the Church goes an intelligent hold on the verities that these things stand for, and, especially, that the penitential aspect of our lives as Catholics is being more and more developed.

The Sanctuary.

That it needs many things is evident to all. Just now those whose duty requires them to officiate would say the greatest need is ventilation; it is very hot; as one looks up there in the day time, light seems necessary—the decoration on the walls and roof is shabby.

The platform on which the altar stands is built of ordinary pine boards; it would be more suitable if the steps and platform were of stone or marble, and a wainscot of marble on the walls, with proper piscina, would be a beginning for some elaborate ornamentation in the future. Of course, these things will come; there is no hurry. We will think about them and pray for the means.

Flowers for the Altars.

Thoughtful parishioners and other friends have sent flowers for the high altar, as well as the altar of Our Lady during the month. $17.25 has also been received from several different people to supply flowers for the altar of Our Lady.

Devotion.

St. Clement's people follow the teaching of their patron and strive to cultivate the love of God, an evidence of this is the attendance at week day and early Sunday masses during the hot weather. Love which overcomes hindrances and prevails over ordinary discomforts is a real power of soul, and leads on to perfection.

A Bill.

It is on the building over the way, "formerly St. Clement's Hospital," obtained by the efforts and prayers and by the money of St. Clement's people; the painted board nailed on the fence tells that the place is "for sale or for rent." One cannot help a feeling of sadness that it should be so; the building might be useful for many purposes.

All Saints Sea-shore Home.

The first party started out early on Monday morning, June 27th, for Point Pleasant to stay until Saturday, July 9th. By July 2d the household consisted of sixty persons, later on sixty-two; every bed occupied. There is no difficulty in finding worthy people and unspoiled children who need the change and appreciate the religious influence; in fact, every place has been promised to the end of the season. The clergy of the Associate Mission in Trenton, with other priests, have arranged for a mass in the chapel of the house on all week days.

Dr. Sinexon, in days gone by one of St. Clement's people, kindly examines all applicants.

The proceeds of the strawberry festival amounted to $35.37, besides donations of 35 pounds of sugar, 74 lemons, 5 quarts of ice cream and $10.00 in money, which paid for the berries, ice cream and printing of tickets.

It is much to be desired that the Sisters may feel justified in buying land on which to erect a building by the end of the summer. Send all contributions to John Douglas Brown, Jr., treasurer, Drexel Building, or Sister in charge, 2034 Cherry street.

The Acolytes at Point Pleasant.

Quite a number of the acolytes spent the Fourth at Point Pleasant. They went down Friday or Saturday before and stayed over till Monday night or Tuesday. As usual, harmony of fellowship and cheerfulness prevailed to make the holiday most enjoyable for all.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

The Rev. C. C. Quinn was away during part of July. The Rev. E. Wright expects to be away during August.

The choir will be absent on Sundays, August 21st and 28th and September 4th. Hymns will be sung at the 11 o'clock mass and mission service at night.

St. Mary's Guild had no office in July, the regular time would have been the evening of the fourth.

Messrs. Gara, McGinley & Co. have given an estimate for the repair of the roofs, the amount is $80.86, which was accepted, and the work has been completed.

In July number of Spirit of Missions the treasurer acknowledges from St. Clement's "a member" $7.00 and $5.00 from Sunday, specials for the Bishop of Shanghai.

Money has been promised for blue hangings for the altar of Our Lady in the Crypt chapel. Money has been given for a lamp, which it is hoped may soon be in place.

Several estimates for covering the live steam pipes in the cellars of Church, parish building and clergy house were received, the material selected was asbestos fire felt covering of H. W. John's Mfg. Co. The work has been completed, and we hope that much more satisfactory results in heat may be had next winter, as well as greater economy in coal.

Seventeen dollars and fifty cents were given by several people, who showed their interest in this practical form, for the purchase of a rubber hose for the Church garden. The grass can now be watered and kept in good condition in spite of hot and dry weather.

A small stoup, which is of considerable interest from its association and its age, has been given by one of our parishioners. It was found in one of the excavations in Rome. We are glad to possess this valuable antiquity. It will be placed on the wall of the Crypt chapel. The stoup is of marble, beautifully carved. There is no doubt of its genuineness. It is a great satisfaction that our people are moved to devote holy things to their original purpose, rather than keep them as articles of curiosity or drawing-room ornaments.

It is very satisfactory that so many people who are out of town for the summer have not forgotten Church expenses. This is quite right, yet we notice that failure to give toward the support of the parish while away causes much inconvenience elsewhere.

Some people are still interested in paying off the mortgage debt on the parish buildings; the trustees have on hand over $600. The endowment fund still increases; it amounts to over $3,000, which is held by the Pennsylvania Co.

A requiem mass was said on Monday, July 11th, for the repose of the soul of Capt. Alex. M. Wetherill, who was killed in the attack on Santiago.

Thursday, July 21st, was the anniversary of the death of Mother Frances Helen of All Saints Sisters. The year's mind was said in the Sisters' chapel for the repose of her soul.

A Little Crucifix for the Holy Child Guild.

Hereafter at Holy Innocent's Day each year we hope to be able to award to the most deserving member of the Guild of the Holy Child a little silver crucifix. Whatever member has shown herself most regular at mass and at guild meetings and whose conduct is most exemplary will be the happy child.

The crucifixes are the gift of a friend of the parish, and are in memory of her own little daughter who passed away to God in early childhood.

Society St. John the Evangelist.

For some time it has been felt that if the Society are to continue their work in this country they must have a proper house where they can live and receive those clergy and laymen who desire to spend sometime in quiet devotion. Their present house in Boston is a small wooden building utterly unsuitable, rapidly falling into decay. A scheme has been prepared and an appeal issued for money to erect a conventual house, containing a chapel, refectory, library, and a number of small rooms, in which clergy and laymen can be lodged during retreats. It is much to be desired that the committee who have kindly undertaken the matter may meet with encouragement. The amount asked for is very large. Another disadvantage is that Boston is not the centre for any general work; it is too far away, off in a corner of the country, and the city itself has no spiritual or religious advantages. This, while a reason for Boston needing the presence of the society, is an obstacle to its selection if the work is not to be confined to Boston, but to be general. We hope that the Father Superior may fully consider every aspect of the question before the society is finally settled in Boston.

Mission Work in Alaska.

"The Rev. Mr. Dickie and some of his people joined us in the first communion ever celebrated in Skaguay." We quote from Spirit of Missions for June, and learn that Rev. Mr. Dickie is "a young Canadian Presbyterian minister." We also learn that Bishop Rowe visited the place (which is in Alaska) on April 2d, after this remarkable performance, but there is no record that he confirmed this congenial Christian spirited Presbyterian and his "joining" people, or called the attention of the over zealous missionary to the rubric, which says "there shall none be admitted to the Holy Communion until such time as he be confirmed or be ready and desirous to be confirmed." This bit of information does not seem to have attracted the notice of the board of sixteen prominent bishops, fifteen distinguished clergymen and fifteen laymen who are charged with the Church interests; perhaps it might give rise to unseemly discussion. It is one of the items published to interest the laity.

The War.

One of the most interesting and encouraging facts of the war to a Christian is not the bravery and heroism of army and navy, but the evidence of faith in Almighty God in the men who are carrying on the war. The President issues a proclamation calling upon the people of the nation to assemble in their churches to give thanks to God for the unscathed triumph and pray for speedy peace. The captain of a battleship in the moment of victory bares his head and calls on the men of his crew to render thanks to God. An officer about to set out on a dangerous errand kneels down with his men and asks God's protection. In the serious moments of peril prayer is the natural language of the immortal soul, eternal facts claim the thoughts of man; he manifests his higher nature. It is to be expected that many a man will return to his ordinary life with more serious and earnest thoughts, resolved to live for God. It may be that many a man of army and navy will discover that he has a vocation to serve God in Holy Orders, and the character of self-denial, which he has cultivated for earthly warfare, will be useful for the spread of religion, the victory of the Church of God.

In the Living Church, of July 2d, we read that one of the "leading features" of Sunday, June 19th, at Chickamauga was a service conducted by the new chaplain of First Pennsylvania. There was a large attendance and short sermon. "The service was not strictly of the Church; it was distinctly interdenominational" (whatever that may be). "The entire service was a memorable one."

It is very encouraging to learn that on Sunday, June 26th, there was a mass at 6.30 A. M., and that spiritual work is being done among men at Camp Alger, one of the chaplains is able to have masses several times a week. It is an evidence that the priests are attending to the duties of their divine office rather than enjoying only the benefits of their military position.

It is noted in the English papers that the Bishop of Stepney asked prayers in St. Paul's Cathedral for all those who had departed this life in faith and fear of God. This is the first occasion that prayers for the dead have been publicly asked in the Cathedral.

Pennies.

On Easter Day some may remember that a remonstrance was made against the sacrilegious and covetous practice of some individuals who "put a penny on the plate" just for appearances. One of the Church papers spoke of the remark with approval, and its paragraph has been copied by an English Church paper. Certain people were afraid that friends of theirs might be offended. It might be those friends needed reproof, our own people would understand that nothing impossible is ever asked. The principle of almsgiving is not how little one can give and keep up appearances, but how much one can offer and glorify God.

"The Perils of Idolatry."

"The object of this book is to show that for Christians there is no peril of idolatry either in the worship of our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament, or in the use of the Crucifix, or in the honor that is given to the Blessed Virgin"—it is by Rev. Harry Wilson, who "has a talent for stating simply, attractively and concisely the faith and practice of the Church." We presume it is on the same lines, if not the same thing, as the paper the author read at the annual conference of C. B. S. in London, which put the subject in a very plain and clear manner. We hope the book may be obtained in this country shortly, as well as his book "A Good Communion," which "is intended to help communicants who are dissatisfied with their spiritual life."

The "Church Times" says that seven English Bishops wore copes at their ordinations on Trinity Sunday, including London and Rochester, and that a "magnificent cope with cloth of gold tippet" has been presented to St. Paul's Cathedral.

Correspondence.

EDITOR ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE:—Will you kindly state in your next issue the object of the Guild of St. Lawrence?

C. S. C.

Any of the clergy would probably be glad to explain the object of this Guild. Its work is sufficiently well known to render an explanation superfluous in these columns.

Catechetical Instruction!

Through the courtesy of Messrs. George W. Jacobs & Co., the publishers, we have received a copy of "The Little Catechism of the Chief Truths of Christ's Religion," compiled by a committee of the C. S. S. S. The work seems to be very carefully done, and we are glad to commend it to the notice of all who desire to have proper knowledge and give orthodox instruction to others. Simple as it is some of its information might benefit lay deputies to General Convention.

Panics.

Every little while there seems to be a religious fright on the part of some timid people, and in the excitement they turn against their friends and shoot them down. They seem to be engaging in that sort of pastime just now in England, the irreverent interferences of Mr. Kensit and his friends have frightened some cautious people; they do not agree with him, but fearful of what he may do, they turn upon their own friends in public and wound them. Such proceedings do harm, but do not disturb God's true work, which goes on. Rightly it is pointed out that a Catholic custom and devotion must be the inheritance of Catholics in the Anglican communion; even though it may be strange and unfamiliar to a good many, it is not, therefore, disloyal and wrong. One of the encouraging features, however, of the affair is that Catholic ritual and what are called the six points are spoken of as rightful expression of our devotion.

At the E. C. U. meeting Lord Halifax and other speakers spoke in strong and unmistakable tones. One has ever to keep in mind that obedience to the personal whims and demands of some individual bishop may be disloyalty and disobedience to God and His Church. A true respect for a bishop's power and office is often veiled under a positive, courteous and respectful "No."

The letter of seventy-two London priests in reply to the suggestions of the Bishop of London is the evidence of loyal and respectful obedience in things lawful. In all these agitations it is ignored that those who complain are themselves guilty of flagrant violation of almost essential customs and usages of the Church.

As compared with our brethren in England the clergy of the American Church do not usually display any very great eagerness for controversy carried on in the columns of the Church newspapers. This seems to be an essentially English trait, both religious and secular papers usually teeming with letters. Of late our own Church papers have shown much more of this feature, some of the subjects to be brought up before the approaching General Convention being the compelling cause. Amongst others the proposed canon as to the recitation of the daily offices has come in for a good share of attention, and, as was to be expected, no little opposition. Many of the American clergy already regard the recitation of Daily Matins and Evensong as of obligation, in view of the rubric of the English Prayer-Book making this requirement, which, having never been repealed or modified by subsequent American legislation, has the force of common law for us. For those, however, with whom this argument does not weigh, the proposed canon would add the express reaffirmation by the American Church of the duty of the daily recitation of the choir offices. Objections have been brought by numerous letter writers in the Church papers against this proposal, both as regards the public recitation of the services in Church and as regards their private recitation by the priest. In regard to the former the staple objection seems to be the difficulty or, in some cases, impossibility of getting a congregation. We venture to think that most of the clergy who have established and persevered in the recitation of the daily offices in their parishes have not found this to be the case. Where the people have found out that their priest is in earnest about it he has usually found himself with at least the "two or three" gathered together. And even when it happens that he has an occasion to say the office alone, we are old-fashioned enough in our belief in the power of prayer to think that the office said by the priest alone in the empty Church, offered to God as an act of intercession for his absent flock, might not be wholly without avail. It may seem a truism to say that, in this aspect, the efficacy of a religious service does not depend upon the number of persons present at it, yet many of the letter writers on this subject do not seem to realize it. Their utterances suggest only too plainly that there prevails to a considerable extent among us that sad perversion of the idea of prayer and of religious worship generally so common among Protestants, in which the subjective aspect is made everything, in which the test of the value of a service is made to be its immediate effect upon those actually participating in it. What we need to realize far more is the power and value of prayer, not as a means of religious self-culture, but as an actual means of obtaining blessings from God for others as well as for ourselves. Unless this be kept steadily in mind, prayer will end in becoming an unreality, and in our parochial life, in these days of multiplied agencies and parish machinery of one kind and another, we are too apt to overlook it. The proposed canon would place on record the mind of the Church; that the normal condition of things is that in which the parish priest is found day by day in his place in the chancel ready to lead the devotions of his flock, be they many or be they few, who can attend, or be it that the priest himself represents his flock before the throne of God. One correspondent argues that the private recitation of the offices takes up time that the priest could use in prayers more suited for private devotion, and draws a lively picture of a clergyman in the privacy of his study donning a surplice and rising up to address some imaginary "dearly beloved brethren." We venture to think that none of the clergy who say their Matins and Evensong daily will recognize in this humorous sally anything analogous to their own practice, neither the surplice, nor the "dearly beloved brethren" being among the indispensables for the private recitation of the offices. Neither do we think it to be their experience that these offices have been found unsuitable as acts of devotion when recited in private, or that by their recitation they have been unable to find time for other prayers of a more intimately personal nature. Many of the objectors seem to realize the truth of the adage, Laborare est orare, but what is at least equally needed among us in regard to the Church's work is to realize that the converse of this is no less true—orare est laborare—to pray is to labor, and often to do so much more effectually than the agencies appreciable by the world.

The Transfiguration.

"Does not Jesus to-day invite us to the Mount of the Transfiguration? Surely so, and it is not far off. Ascend to thine own chamber, O my soul, as to the Holy Mount, 'and when thou hast shut thy door, prav.' . . . Pray, it may be, for the sake of quietude and seclusion from interruption in the night season, and, as the Psalmist, arise at midnight to give thanks unto thy God. 'At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto Thee.' (Ps. cxix: 62.) 'In the night season did I sing of Him and made my prayer unto the God of my life.' (Ps. xlii: 10.) So seek and you shall not fail to find Jesus. Some day, when He will, perhaps when some premonition has been given you, some attraction of the Holy Ghost has been experienced, very likely after some act of mortification, or after some time of desolation and infirmity, breaking in upon thy darkness Jesus shall be seen transfigured before thee, and Moses, Elias, the law and the prophets, the divine oracle shall testify unto Him. Yes, and the voice of the Eternal Word shall speak with, as through, them, and the Almighty Father shall bear witness to His Beloved Son, whom knowing and in whom accepted you shall be enabled to go on steadfastly holding that which has been committed unto you in holy confidence unto the end.

"The mount, the witnesses, Jesus Himself are all at hand! And we are invited, yet we linger! Oh, let us arise now and obey the call. Should it please Him to delay the vision in chastisement for our sins, or to prove us, let us be assured that it will surely come, it will not tarry long, and then as the world's day returns, and our lives go on in the accustomed course, the remembrance of that which we have seen and heard shall abide with us to be recurred to again and again, as from time to time earthly cares and distractions of 'much serving' threaten to weaken that spiritual perception which we had won whilst sojourning in the Holy Mount, and to make dim the eyes of our understanding therein opened in some measure to 'comprehend with all saints what is the length and breath and depth and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge,' that we 'may be filled with all the fullness of God.' (Eph. iii: 18, 19.) Yea, this blessed memory shall be to us a quickening of that Divine Life, which is none the less ours, because here we have to die to the natural life, as He died for us a shameful death, who once was transfigured. It shall be to us a pledge of the final triumph of that Divine Life over all which is against us, and over all that is in us against Jesus, if only we will follow Him who was once transfigured and then crucified, dead and buried, but is now risen, ascended and ever glorified!"—Fr. Hollings.

We have a lot of odd copies of the old series should anyone want them.

All Saints Sea-shore Home.

The house at Point Pleasant has been overcrowded during the whole of the season. It has been a quiet and encouraging time, the people in the house have, with few exceptions, been all they should be. All Saints, the Church at Bay Head, has sent a collection of $68.73. Various other donations and collections are expected. The daily Mass has been kept up. The house will be closed on September 3d.

Father Osborne.

After an absence of a number of years, during which time he has been in South Africa and India, Father Osborne has arranged to spend several months in this country. While attached to the Mission Church in Boston his influence was greatly felt there, and also in other parts of this country. He was known and respected here. He will give missions and retreats in various places. He expects to spend St. Clement's Day with us in Philadelphia.

The General Convention.

In October in the city of Washington, D. C., will be held the meeting of this important body. Many and difficult questions are bound to come before it; the prayers of the faithful are much needed that our Communion may accomplish God's will rather than be popular and prosperous. There is a very manifest opportunity for the Church, if it has the courage to assert its true mission, to lead this nation into God's way. In order to do anything there must be no trifling. There must be solid, earnest, supernatural effort. Bishops must set an example of apostolic life and zeal, really have the cause of God and religion at heart, and make it the foremost and chief concern. To be sure they have had but little training or experience, but it is time that they realized that the office to which they have been called and the responsibilities they have accepted demand that they form their own priestly life and character, and see to it that our Seminaries and Divinity Schools train those who are looking forward to the Sacred Ministry. Pages of canons, with beautifully prepared sections and subsections about papers and forms and signatures and examinations will never accomplish this, technical training is needed just as much as it is for the army or navy. The life must be developed; it does not come by chance.

It is about time that we had the courage to claim what we are, and in spite of sneers and jeers to fling away the legal title that has fastened itself upon us; it has failed to prove its truth or usefulness. As a mask it has failed to conceal the real character of the Church; it deceives no one, and least of all those who may wish to dispute her claims. Some important doctrinal questions may be discussed; there is danger that these may excite laymen or clergy ignorant of theology to make speeches giving their views and opinions, which are not of the slightest importance and should have no influence. It is unfortunate that they have any opportunity to put them forth. We cannot begin too soon to pray that all may be overruled for God's glory; that there be no mistakes.

The Rev. A. W. Doran, priest in charge of St. Luke's Church, Chicago, has consented to undertake work as one of our clergy. He will be transferred to this diocese, and come into residence October 1st. He has had experience in mission work in Chicago, and will doubtless do good work at St. Clement's.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

Wednesday, September 14th, is the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross—a holy day of obligation for Guild of the Holy Cross. A special Mass will be said at 6.30.

Friday, September 16th, is the anniversary of the death of Edward Bouverie Pusey, priest and doctor. Some may desire to keep it in remembrance.

The choir has been absent on Sundays, August 21st and 28th, and will not return until September 11th. Hymns were sung at 11 o'clock Mass and mission service at night.

The storm of August 3d caused two rather bad leaks in the roof of parish building and two others in church roof; no great damage was done.

The grass on south side of church shows the benefit of the hose and sprinkler.

The anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Mother Frances Helen, of All Saints, was said in the Crypt Chapel Wednesday, July 27th.

The anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Hannah P. Smith, communicant and benefactress of the parish, was said in the Crypt Chapel on Saturday, August 13th.

Kneeling benches have been made for the pews on one side of the south aisle, the cost ($35) was met by the donations of two parishioners.

The carpet on south side of middle aisle had become very much worn; the good part, with that from south aisle, has been put down again; all the pews of south aisle will be left without carpet, stained and varnished and so can be kept clean more easily.

The whole cellar underneath the church has been whitewashed; the ceiling ought to be plastered, and could be if some one gave the money to pay for the work.

A gas connection has been put into the Crypt Chapel, and a radiator will, it is hoped, heat the chapel sufficiently A register in the wall opens into a pipe and so into one of the church chimneys, and some ventilation will be obtained.

The set of blue hangings for the Altar of Our Lady in the Crypt Chapel were in place for the feast day, August 15th. They are very handsome. The lamp for the chapel has been made by the Tiffany Co., of New York, and is in place.

A set of mortuary candlesticks of wrought iron have been ordered and received from Luetke Art Works, of New York.

We expect to construct a stairway from church to Crypt Chapel very soon, and to have the permanent glass put in the door.

Money has been given to construct steps of oak for the High Altar.

A set of Stations in relief has been offered for the church as a memorial The kind has not yet been decided on.

The Catechism and Infant School will resume on Sunday, September 18th, at 3 o'clock.

The 8 o'clock Mass on Sundays will commence on September 18th.

Notice will be given as to the 7.30 Mass on week days.

Mr. George Allison Armour, of Princeton, has given to us a die for a medal cut by Tiffany & Co., of New York, originally intended for St. Clement's, Chicago. Mr. Armour was the donor of the valuable St. Clement's stones now in our possession.

The supply of flowers for the Altar has been sufficient during the summer.

Quite a number of duplicates of old magazines have been received, and two bound sets, for which we are very grateful.

St. Lawrence Guild made a donation of $20 for children's play ground on Callowhill street.

The new parish banner is promised to us for St. Clement's day.

Rev. S. MacPherson, who has been assisting during the summer has completed his stay in the parish, and will resume his work at Nashotah.

Rev. E. Wright has been away during August and expects to return the beginning of September.

Mr. Wm. A. McClenthen, a member of the Guild of St. Vincent, enters the General Theological Seminary, New York, at the beginning of the term, to prepare for Holy Orders.

Choir Base Ball.

On Saturday, July 30th, the Church Choir went out to Roxborough to play ball with the Choir from St. Timothy's. The Roxborough boys had organized a club, and thirsting for renown, cordially invited the St. Clement's boys to come out and be beaten. And the invitation was accepted in full detail. They went out and were beaten, not simply outdone a little, but beaten by a score of which figures convey no comprehension. Nevertheless, they deserve praise and plenty of it. There was difficulty in getting together the regular players, and the game had to be played with only four or five of the regular nine. In spite of this discouraging beginning the boys stuck bravely to the work and played a plucky game. The St. Timothy's boys were famous little hosts. Magnanimous in every particular, they played good ball and took their victory as calmly and graciously as they would have accepted defeat had it been their lot. The Rector of St. Timothy's was present at the game, and displayed no little interest in his boys' good work. After the game all the boys went to the parish building and had a very acceptable lunch, victors sharing rations with vanquished in national style. The afternoon was most enjoyable, and the choir thanks its jolly hosts, and promises them a good thrashing next time.

It is announced that Lord Halifax the President of the English Church Union, will make a visit to this country during the autumn. Lord Halifax is an example of what a Christian layman can be.

Baptisms.

The number of baptisms in the diocese calls for some notice. A brief study of the parochial reports suggests that the number is far below what it should be, and it is a sad comment that in some parishes where much effort is expended in Sunday-school work large numbers of children being under instruction (?), or rather members, the record of baptisms is very much below what one might expect. There are 275 clergy in the diocese and 187 churches and chapels, 564 adults baptized and 4,156 children, an average of not quite 26 to each. This is not a very creditable showing for us.

His Holiness, Pope Leo XIII, is reported to have cabled to the Archbishop of Manila to put himself and clergy under the protection of the forces of the United States. This distinguished ecclesiastic not long ago issued a manifesto warning the people of Manila against Americans as despoilers of churches, etc. Now he must seek the protection of the irreligious Americans against some of his own spiritual children.

War Thoughts.

What a wondrous and inspiriting example we have had before our eyes during the last few months. Thousands of young men, in loyalty and devotion to their country's interests, offering themselves as soldiers—they have given up positions of honor, influence and gain to become soldiers, the "pay" was meagre, only a few dollars a month; the food was poor and plain, "hard tack and bacon;" the lodging was uncomfortable at best, tent, cot and blanket; the life was hard, monotonous discipline and drill, and before them the peril of battle and death. God and the Church has need of such enthusiasm and devotion. Some one has blundered, or many such would be at the disposal of the Church. Comfortable quarters, churches closed the greater part of the time, clergy seeking rest and change, exorbitant salaried ecclesiastics will never give the impetus for missionary movement, or attract self-denying lives. It is absurd on the face of it to expect it. What man requires is not timely addresses, but definite faith, absolute unchanging truth, heroic self-denial, hard living. One of the hideous blots on the Church to-day that rises to a crime is the idea that a clergyman is worth as much as any other man, and the salary is a business matter; it has taken the heart out of everything. No bishop or priest ought to take out of the treasury of God more than what is required for his own support. If he has a true vocation he ought not to expect "pay," but be thankful for "living expenses." His whole self belongs to God and the Church, this is the first claim; a rector on $5,000 a year is a mockery—a hindrance to religious life and efforts. The spectacle of "get what you can grab" is not very Apostolic.

Father Ignatius.

One of the saddest and most distressing items of news from England is that concerning Father Ignatius, who has lately submitted to a form of ordi nation at the hands of an ecclesiastic called Inar Timotheus. This is the same person formerly known as Pére Villatte, sometime ago connected with the Diocese of Fond du Lac. The zeal and devotion of Father Ignatius had won for him many friends, but this unfortunate act can cause nothing but sorrow. The whole affair seems to have been arranged and carried out in the most hurried fashion.

Vocation.

"Ordinarily we shall hear men round about us . . . . speaking of ordination as merely a profession; they speak of it—of 'going into the Church'—very much in the same way as they would speak of a man becoming a lawyer or a doctor; they look upon it as one of the various 'openings' which lie before him in life.

"Now, certainly ordination is a 'profession,' but it is also much more; it is the surrender, the giving up of a man's whole life to God for the highest good of his fellow men; it is a surrender to the special service of our Lord; it is a response to a distinct call.

"It is sometimes said nowadays that there is nothing to 'tempt' men to be ordained; that men of ability 'go elsewhere,' or there is so little to offer them in the ministry; but if men are thinking of being ordained with a view to making a 'good thing out of it,' with a prospect of an easy-going and comfortable life amid attractive social surroundings we need not regret that they do 'go elsewhere,' for vocation to the ministry implies a surrender—a man gives himself up to God to be used in His service. It may, indeed, be that God may call him to high office, to responsible positions in His vineyard, but all this is in His hands; the motive which, in the last resort, brings us in ordination to the feet of our Lord should be the conviction that He is calling us to Himself, and that we desire at the bottom of our hearts, though conscious of our own weakness and sinfulness, to respond to His gracious call."—Threshold of the Sanctuary.

The Angels.

"Think of that holy company, not 'as a mere feeling and a sort of luxury of the imagination,' but as a real help in our heavenly course. A real corrective to our diseased life. Am I playing my part in that vast order over which the angels watch? Am I in time in the celestial harmony? Is my worship in the courts of the Lord's house worthy to be joined with theirs, who see God as He is? Do I vex and weary my guardian angel with all the waywardness, frowardness of a spoiled child; or do I walk soberly and honestly along the paths of life under his guidance and protection? If our eyes were opened we should see ourselves, as did the servant of Elisha, surrounded with the armies of heaven; we should see our daily life, with all its cares and troubles and anxieties, stretching away, like a great ladder, into heaven, and angels ascending and descending on it. We should be reverent, pure, holy, and good, because we love God; because we fear His terrors and look for His glorious appearing, but also 'because of the angels.' We should count it among the restraints, as it is undoubtedly among the consolations of our spiritual life, that we are come 'to an innumerable company of angels.' And while the world in its practical Sadduceeism says that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit, we shall in this point at least agree with the stricter religion of the ancient Pharisee, and in faith, life and precept, to our intense comfort, yet wholesome restraint, confess both."—Canon Newbolt.

It is a truth often insisted on, but never sufficiently realized, that to estimate aright the importance of events or the true bearing of forces one needs to be removed to some distance from them. This is seen in the revisions we are constantly called upon to make in our estimate of the characters of great men as they recede from us into the more distant past, and in our view of the importance of events that have occurred in the life, either of the Church or the nation, as they also pass into history. Those who are in close proximity to them are constantly tempted to take an exaggerated view of their importance, more especially if they themselves are in any way concerned in them. We find abundant evidence of this in the history of the Church. That history is always the history of a struggle; a struggle against the world outside, and what is much more serious, against the world within the Church, against the foes who are of her own household. Ever and anon, in some particular part of the Church have come periods which we, looking back upon them now, see to have been crises in her history. Either external persecution, or what is so much worse, internal falling away in doctrine or practice has reached such a point that the faithful few are tempted to despair and to think that only some signal Divine interposition can save the Church. We, looking back, too, can see how that interposition has come often in a way most unexpected to those who looked for it. Such a period we can see, for instance, in the history of the Church of France in the middle of the seventeenth century in the then prevalent corruption of the life of the priesthood, when God sent Vincent de Paul to be the agent of such a wonderful reformation. Such a period we can see in the history of our own part of the Catholic Church in the early part of the same century, when all that was Catholic in her seemed in danger of extinction from the rising tide of Calvinistic Puritanism, and God raised up William Laud to be the instrument of her preservation. Such another crisis we see in the early part of this present century when a prime minister could tell the English bishops that it was time for them to set their house in order, and when spiritual life seemed all but extinct under the dead weight of worldliness and Erastianism. We know who did God's work then; their names are household words amongst us—Keble, Pusey, Newman—though many who to-day are reaping the fruits of their life-work refuse to acknowledge the indebtedness.

What we have to be careful about, however, is not to take too easily for granted that we are in such a period of crisis. There never has been, there never is, a time in which there does not exist in the Church much which her faithful children must deplore. At one time it may be corruption in life, at another laxity and error in doctrine, with the accompanying lack of discipline which permits it. Whatever it be, it is very easy, by allowing ourselves to dwell exclusively upon it, to grow pessimistic, and raise the cry "The Church in danger." In one sense this is always true, for as long as the Church is militant here upon earth she is in danger. But in the alarmist sense, which indicates a time of especial crisis, and seems to justify a despairing tone about the Church, we can see that this cry has in the past been raised again and again without justification. It has arisen in most cases from that unconsciously exaggerated view of the importance of events and movements with which we ourselves have to do, of which we have spoken above. Some persons are persuaded that such a period has arrived in the history of the American Church; nay, more, that this very year of grace is the turning point, and that if the coming General Convention does not do "something," there is nothing before us but general ruin and dissolution. A reverend doctor of divinity has circulated among the clergy an epistle setting forth with a wealth of detail this gloomy prognostication. With much contained therein we are in agreement, in so far as it deplores divisions in the Church and her lack of discipline, though our point of view is not that of the reverend doctor in question. We are far from desiring to minimize the gravity of these evils. We think they are deplorable, and ought to be the subject of much earnest intercession on the part of those who love and pray for the peace of Jerusalem. We think that many who write and speak with such enthusiasm of our "incomparable liturgy" and our Apostolic descent might, without going far, find much to modify their smug self-congratulation, and that the General Convention might, without much difficulty, find subjects calling for its action more important even than "change of name." Yet, admitting all this, and fully recognizing the gravity of it all, we do not for a moment grant that it justifies any such gloomy forecast as that we have referred to. To correct such pessimism we have only to consider what the history of our own Church has been. When we remember from what God has in time past delivered her, through what troubles and dangers He has brought her, we may truly say with the Psalmist "The Lord hath done great things for us already, whereof we rejoice." Yes, and not only rejoice for past deliverances, but on the ground of it look forward with hope to what He has yet in store for us. What experiment is there that could be tried upon a Church that has not been tried upon this Church within the last three centuries? Looking upon her, frozen stiff in that dead winter of Georgian Erastianism, one might well have said, "Can these dry bones live?" Yet how has God's south wind blown upon her and the spices of Catholic devotion flown out. The battle for Catholic doctrine and practice has been fought and won. True it is that with grief we are compelled to hear men, wearing the Church's livery and standing in her pulpits, teach doctrines subversive of the faith they are pledged to uphold, but that they are suffered so to do is proof only that the Church has suffered her discipline to fall into abeyance. That loss does not affect the being of the Church, though it assuredly does her well-being, and it behooves all of us who have that well-being at heart to be earnest in our intercessions that it may be restored to her, and that her chief pastors may have courage to do that to which they have so solemnly pledged themselves, "banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to God's Word." That is the battle that lies before us, this battle for discipline. A harder struggle, it may be, than any that has gone before, but one to which, remembering God's signal mercies to us in the past half century, we may look forward with quietness and confidence.

"No man is certain that he is good who does not desire to be better, and when you begin to be unwilling to become better then you begin to cease to be good."—St. Bernard.

We have a lot of odd copies of the old series should anyone want them.

Vestments.

A request was made in the July MAGAZINE for donations of money to provide a white silk cope for St. John's Church, Toledo, Ohio, and a silk chasuble for the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, San Francisco. It is to be hoped that, now that the people are beginning to return to the city, sufficient money may be given to buy the material for these vestments. Only $16 has been sent up to this time, from seven persons.

Father Field.

The papers tell us that Fr. Field spent a week during September at Camp Wikoff, Long Island, where he ministered to the sick and consoled the dying. His spare time was spent in work among those who were recuperating from the rigors of the Santiago campaign. Each night he held a meeting, when the tent was crowded with soldiers, and many waited to talk with him afterwards.

All Saints Seashore Home.

The last party came back on Saturday, September 3d, after a very satisfactory season. The house was very crowded all the summer, and we hope that there is no deficit. The Sisters are grateful to all who have so kindly and generously assisted in this work, whether by helping in the care of the Home or by money. Year by year it becomes increasingly manifest that some more permanent and convenient arrangement ought to be made than the one that has been extended to meet each need, and carried on only by very great self-denial on the part of those who have been responsible for or volunteered for the work. The need is indeed great, and we realize that it can be met only by special generosity on the part of a few; but we are not without hope that God may put it into some one's heart to supply the need.

Mission Work.

Now that each church in Philadelphia has definite parish bounds, the mission and charitable work is much simpler and the responsibility limited. For instance, St. Clement's must look after such people as are definitely connected with the congregation, wherever they may live, but refer all others outside our parish to the parish to which they belong. It takes away the sentiment, fascination and charm of indiscriminate and undefined responsibility, and gives us a real work to do—dull, disappointing, uninteresting it may be, but sufficient. It does not confine our spiritual efforts, but it does relieve us of that indefinite feeling that perhaps we ought to help each one, wherever they may live and whatever they may be.

As a general thing, those who come from a distance are unworthy, and the real duty would be not to help them. We can now know thoroughly our own district, helping only the worthy ones, but our own faithful people, wherever they may live, will still be sure of our sympathy and care. A certain class of unworthy people seem to think that, because some member of the family has been baptized, or at some time "belonged," a claim has been established; but the alms of the faithful are asked and given "specially for those who are of the household of faith." The impenitent unfaithful ones have no right to demand. The Prodigal, when he sought the father's house, felt that he was not worthy to be called a son.

Much and serious harm has been done by indiscriminate relief.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

Pew rents are due in advance October 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the Vestry Room Monday, October 3d, to receive payment of pew rents and for renting pews and sittings.

The offices of the various guilds of the Sodality of St. Clement will be said this month as given in Calendar.

The Rev. C. C. Quin will take charge of the Men's Bible Class first meeting Sunday, October 2d.

The choir returned on Sunday, September 11th.

The old confessional boxes in St. John's Chapel have been removed.

The Red Cross have obtained the use of the building at Cherry and Lambert streets, and it is to be prepared as a hospital for sick soldiers. It was formerly known as St. Clement's Hospital, but has been vacant for some time.

The Rev. A. W. Doran will have charge of the Mothers' Meeting and act as chaplain of St. Mary's Guild.

Several hundred dollars for pew rents and envelope pledges are due the church. Such obligations have the first claim upon a Christian's income, and come before summer jaunts and holiday pleasures.

The clergy are under very great obligations to the authorities of the Medico-Chi and Presbyterian Hospitals for permission to visit the soldiers who have been sick in these institutions.

The attendance at the Sunday services is increasing, and the return of many members of the congregation is cheering to us.

The clergy may be found in the Clergy House on Monday evenings, and are glad to see the men of the congregation.

The 7.30 o'clock Mass on week-days has been resumed.

St. Lawrence's Guild will have a meeting on Tuesday, October 4th, at 10 A. M., to arrange for the work to be done during the coming winter.

The Vestry at their last meeting, by resolution, accepted an offer made to provide and place in the church a set of stations of the Cross. The particular kind has not yet been selected, but it is hoped to have them in place by the beginning of Lent.

The second game of base-ball between St. Clement's and St. Timothy's Choirs was played at Roxborough on Saturday, September 24th, and resulted in another defeat for St. Clement's. This game was much better played than the first, and was very interesting.

The General Convention.

This body meets once in three years, and consists of the House of Bishops and House of Clerical and Lay Deputies (four of each order from each diocese). The opening service is to be in Washington, D. C., on Wednesday, October 5th, and meetings will be held each day afterwards for about three weeks. Several important matters will be discussed—the Name, Divorce, New Constitutions and Canons. The prayers of the people are asked for the guidance of God, the Holy Ghost.

A parish house for the Church of the Annunciation has been built and opened for use.

Philadelphia Hospitals.

These have been freely opened for the care of sick soldiers from all the camps in this country, as well as for the men returning from Santiago and Porto Rico, regulars and volunteers. All sections of the country have been represented. The care and attention of the physicians and nurses (trained and volunteer) has marked their work as heroic as well as patient. It is certain that many lives have been saved by the prompt and efficient response to the emergency that so suddenly developed at every camp where the soldiers were massed.

The Catechism.

The Catechism will hold its sessions in Chapel on Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock. But at 3.45 P. M. the school will go into Church for the magnificat and closing exercises.

The basis of the teaching will be the Catechetical Instruction No. 2, which is a new little book founded on the McGarvey Catechism, but for younger minds.

The list of our teachers, so far, is: Miss Keen, Miss Price, Miss Jenkins, Miss Janney, Miss Mulholland, Miss Sutherland, Mr. Promis and Mr. Goodwin. Mr. David Coles is Librarian and Secretary.

Many persons in the parish are failing in their duty towards the children under their care. Our Catechism and Infant School would be far larger if parents would realize that the spiritual training of their children is more important than anything else in life. It is better to give your children a good moral example and a good spiritual training than a million dollars with an immoral example, or a life of religious ignorance.

A Bible Class for Girls.

On Sundays, at 3 o'clock, we hope to have a Bible Class for older girls. Any over fifteen years of age are invited to attend. The meetings will be in the choir room. There are a great many young girls who are a little too old to attend Catechism. All these should make a special effort to belong to the Bible Class, for it will offer them a very instructive as well as interesting hour on Sunday afternoons.

Mortgage Fund.

Six thousand dollars is still the amount of mortgage on the parish building, and the Trustees of the Sinking Fund have $695.00 to their account, and $292.50 more will be paid to them by resolution of the Vestry, early in October, this being the amount of six months' interest on old ground rent. So they will have nearly $1,000. Yet comparatively few people have given any money.

Pews.

The working man was standing before his priest. His blackened hands and rough shoes betokened the laborer in some foundry. "I can't go to church," he was saying, "in these clothes and looking like this. Think of me walking up the middle aisle in these rags. The best I can do is to sneak in late and stay by the door."

What a sad commentary on Christ's Church. Obeisance must be made to the god of riches before a man can come close to the God of Love. The rich sit near God's altar, but there is no place for the poor, and the poor are to blame as much as the rich, for by their fear of appearances they acknowledge the standard of money as if the true norm.

The pews are the cause of the trouble. First of all, and worst of all, the rented pew system. We call the church the House of God, but we let out the floor, like the town lots of a western speculation, in small sections to the highest bidders. The man who offers the most money gets the best site. Practical religion becomes a commercial affair, a business bargain—of necessity, therefore, the worshippers are divided on the basis of financial worth.

But behind all this is the pew idea—itself all wrong. We are so used to it that we, and the architects, seem to think a pew an essential feature of church construction. A heathen of any religion from Radanoka to Nova Zembla would be struck by the free and easy terms we are on with our God—we have seats to sit down and worship in, and he never dreamt of that before in a divine temple.

Such was not the Christian idea until Protestantism brought it in, in the last few centuries. Churches were built (and are still in many places) with no fixed seating. Stools obtained at the door and easily carried from place to place, is what we find in old churches in Europe. With such an arrangement the question of rich and poor vanishes. A Greek Catholic thinks a stool beneath a man's dignity even during the sermon, and the few chairs are kept for the women.

The pew, essentially Protestant in principle, has been a curse to the Church. Every tendency towards its abolishment should be encouraged.

A Question.

There is an anomaly in our American Church system. We are trying to hold two conflicting principles, and sooner or later they will be in direct opposition.

As Catholics we acknowledge the power and authority of the priest over his people in all spiritual matters. He is the shepherd of the flock, to lead them in spiritual pastures, to feed them with all the riches of Christ, giving them new life in Baptism, forgiveness of sins in Absolution, and food for the soul in Holy Communion.

On the other hand, then, imagine a flock dictating to its shepherd what pastures they are to enter, controlling his actions, dismissing him at short notice if he does not conduct his office entirely to their liking, and electing another to take his place. As a French writer says (who recently visited America): "I asked how it was that priests who assume the power to pronounce absolution and forgiveness are at the same time practically without power even to retain their places or to pronounce their flock right or wrong, since the sheep have only to get together and vote to eject the shepherd from the fold when it pleases them so to do."

In other words, our belief in the priesthood is incompatible with our Protestant system of criticising, controlling, ejecting and electing our spiritual pastor. As the realization of the priesthood grows, the other idea cannot help but be attacked; or perhaps we foolishly may endeavor to hold the priesthood in theory, and the other in practice, and have as a result that certain hollowness and unreality in our belief in the Catholic Faith, which we meet with all too frequently.

Of course there is truth on both sides; there is a legitimate authority of the priesthood, and a legitimate power of the laity. But our Church, when the Oxford movement found it, had given itself over to the lay side of the question, and now, with the advance of Catholic principles, a readjustment must be fought out, on the basis that spiritualities are under the direction of the clergy; however, temporalities are the concern of the laity.

We cannot attempt here to define the relations of clergy and laity as evidenced in Church history from Apostolic times; our purpose is merely to point out the outlines of the controversy.

Superficial Religiousness.

There is a sort of religious optimism which would fain hear "smooth things," and only smooth things, as to the condition of the contest between good and evil in this world. The best corrective of this tendency to self-illusion will be found in passages of the Gospel, which remind us that our Lord came to bear witness unto the truth, and therefore not to attenuate or gloss over those darker facts of our spiritual history, and those more sombre aspects of religion which the "natural" man—or as St. Paul's phrase would be better rendered, the unspiritual man—is only too glad to avoid looking at, as persons with sensitive nerves instinctively turn away from a gloomy or "distressing" picture, with a sort of wish that it could be curtained off from view. But as Nature has terrible facts for which she provides no curtain, facts which she insists on holding up straight before us, even so does religion refuse to accommodate our delicate susceptibilities by sparing us the contemplation of truths which inspire dread. St. Augustine, in one of his inevitable controversies, had to point out to assailants of the Old Testament that the Gospel also had a severe side; and we in our day shall be none the worse for being reminded, as a great modern preacher expressed it, that "the Gospel revelation spoke as sternly as did the law when truth required outspokenness." —Canon Bright.

Lord Halifax writes, in answer to a request for a statement of his views. We quote a part of the reply from the Church Times of September 9th:

"People talk as if the things complained of were being forced by an aggressive clergy upon a reluctant laity. The exact opposite is the truth. It is the laity who have found the money to build the churches in which the practices complained of are in use. It is the laity who throng those churches. It is the laity who find funds for the maintenance of the clergy connected with them. It is the laity who are quite determined to fight for their own and the Church's rights on these matters, and to prevent the Church of England from being again degraded in outward appearance, and in the character of her teaching and practice, to that unhappy condition from which, by the blessing of God, she has happily, to so great an extent, shaken herself free.

"The laity will not acquiesce in the abandonment of this ancient ritual of the Church, which they have learned to love. They will not consent to be deprived of the opportunities for attending a daily celebration of the Holy Eucharist. They will not tolerate being deprived of the means for Communion when they are sick, or in the case of any sudden emergency, secured to them by the reservation of the Blessed Sacrament.

"Nor will they stand the discouragement of the practice of habitual confession. On this point, and it is the last upon which you ask for my opinion, I have only to repeat again what I have already said in the columns of the Times. The deplorable fact which emerges from the correspondence which has appeared on this subject is the indifference which it shows on the part of most of those concerned to the real needs of souls, and the little consciousness they seem to possess of the evil and horrors of sin.

"People want to be told plainly:

"(1) The sacrament of penance is the law of Christ.

"(2) It is the law of the Church of England.

"(3) It is a sacrament which they are free to use or not, as they please, on their own responsibility.

"(4) Free Englishmen will not tolerate the attempted intrusion on their liberty in the matter.

"(5) (And above all) If some are too cowardly and too unmanly to face their sins, don't let them suppose for a moment that they can make others such cowards as themselves."

St. John's Teachings.

"St. John is in a peculiar sense the geographer of the spiritual world. His first Epistle is our chart or hand-book of the Life of God in the human soul. . . . There is no mistaking the more prominent features; they stand out in statements so unlike aught else in human speech except the very words of our Lord himself. . . Each truth taken apart from the context seems perfect and complete in itself. . . Contemplating with undistracted sight the force and beauty of each separate truth, the soul may yield itself to each, first to one and then to another, and may thus be successively fascinated, possessed, transfigured, changed by each from glory to glory.

"This character of teaching—always most forcible—is especially needful for those who are recent converts to the faith of Christ. To them the lines which separate truth and falsehood, sin and holiness, are not as yet so clear that the sight of these bold and prominent landmarks can be dispensed with. Such persons are still to a great extent feeling their way. That which may be a platitude or an axiom to others has for them all the welcome freshness of a newly discovered and original truth. Writing for such as these, who sit in the lower forms in the school of our Blessed Saviour, the Apostle of Love makes himself at once understood by them; while yet his words, that seem so simple, reveal an unfathomable depth of truth to those who know our Lord best and longest. In mapping out the new life for beginners, he does not forget the needs of those who are most advanced. The New Life which our Lord has by His Spirit shed upon the Church, is in this Epistle drawn out from the recesses of the soul into the public highway of human language. Here we note the essence of this life—Communion with the Father and His Blessed Son.

"Here we see its ideal—nothing less than perfection in the ways of God. Here we study its calm yet firm grasp of revealed dogma, its sense of remaining inner sin, yet of abounding light, streaming from the unction of the Holy One, its profound opposition to the spirit and maxims of corrupt human society, which is called the 'world.' Here, above all, we are taught to understand that which is in some respects its most characteristic feature, and the certain secret of its attractive power over the hearts of men.

"The 'love of the brethren' is unfolded to us as being the shadow of that Heavenly Love which shone in its brightest splendor upon the Cross."—Canon Lidden.

At present there is being issued by a company of eminent Protestant divines a commentary on the New Testament under the name of "The Expositor's Greek Testament." The gentlemen who are doing the commenting are men of eminence, selected from the different Protestant denominations, and no doubt fairly representative of the state of opinion therein. It needs only the appearance of such a work as this to demonstrate how completely Protestantism has drifted from what was once its sheet anchor, the one thing above all others for which it stood—the infallibility, the absolute inerrancy of the Bible. The time was when the theory of verbal inspiration prevailed largely among Protestants. From some of the comments of these modern Protestant leaders of thought it is difficult to see where room is left for any theory of inspiration, however attenuated. "It is greatly to be desired," says the writer of the introduction, "that devout readers of he Gospel should be emancipated from legal bondage to the theological figment of inerrancy." Nevertheless it was upon such a "theological figment" that Protestantism was founded, and that being gone it is hard to see upon what it is founded, except upon the principles that every individual Christian (or, perhaps, only the "Higher Critics [?]") is the absolute and final judge of what portion of Holy Writ is inerrant. The position is one of absolute subjectivity. "The Bible is inspired, if it inspires you," this is what it comes to finally. It has taken Protestantism three centuries to come to this, not that the principle is yet fully accepted by all who claim that name; only the watchmen on the lofty towers of the Higher Criticism have as yet caught the full glow; the host beneath are still in partial darkness, but ere long they, too, will be emancipated from their "legal bondage." When this happy time comes then will be seen in their full beauty the fruits of the "dissidence of dissent and the Protestantism of the Protestant religion." What these will be we can gather by contemplating the already shifting mass of contradictory theories and speculations covered by that wide-stretching name.

In this same Commentary there is one other significant statement made in connection with the passage in St. Matthew giving the account of the institution of the Holy Eucharist. It has often been asserted by Catholic writers that the entirely subjective character of the Protestant conception of religion left no place whatever for the use of sacraments, and that Protestants who continued the use of these ordinances were inconsistent and illogical. It is interesting to find this view so fully corroborated as it is by such excellent Protestant authority as this Commentary. The commentator on St. Matthew's words says "the question is raising itself in some thoughtful minds whether discontinuance . . . . of the use of sacraments would not be a benefit to the religion of the spirit."

Let our readers carefully consider what this means. This Christian commentator is treating of an ordinance admittedly instituted by our Lord Christ, and equally without dispute practiced by His disciples from the beginning. The conclusion seems to be irresistible that the "thoughtful minds" of the nineteenth century know better what is for "the benefit of the religion of the spirit" than did the Founder of Christianity.

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP.

The General Convention.

Very little of a definite character seems to have been accomplished in Washington; much that was dangerous has been prevented. The life of the Church can assert itself undisturbed without the risk of being hindered and thwarted. The assembly has attracted much notice, and the proceedings have been fully reported in the daily newspapers. The Church, although it controls only half a million of the 70,000,000 in the country, a fact to which a dignitary of another portion of the Catholic Church contemptuously referred, does influence a much wider circle and command respect and attention of those who do not agree with her. Another opportunity is afforded for the Bishops and other dignitaries to go back to the place to which they have been truly called and to begin real work for God, looking to the end, and not frightened by the attacks of those who do not accept the old faith. Some of the votes have represented the opinions of individuals rather than the old principles of God's truth, but serious mischief, we hope, has been prevented.

The Christian's Manual.

This book of instruction and devotion, containing the chief things which a Christian ought to know and believe to his soul's health, is a very practical and valuable one, and is commended to the attention of devout people.

All Saints' Sisters of the Poor.

All Saints' Day is the special festival of the Sisters, who have for so many years assisted in the mission work of this parish. All the collections on that day will be devoted to the support of the mission work, which is under their charge. The Sisters would be glad to receive second-hand clothing of all kinds suitable for men, women and children, which they distribute to our own worthy parishioners. Groceries of all kinds are very useful; send to Mission House, 2036 Cherry street.

The support of the Sisters ought to appeal to the interest of every member of the parish. The Vestry makes an allowance each month, and a few people of the congregation generously supply food, either occasionally, or, in some instances, at regular times. The rent has to be paid on 2034 and interest on mortgage of 2036, with repairs (the Vestry pay the taxes and water rent). The support of this work is St. Clement's mission work in this diocese and city. We can hope for no help from others, and up to the present have had not even the sympathy of the authorities of the diocese. As we know our cause is just, and the work is for God's glory and the welfare of the Church, we must do it cheerfully and according to our ability. There are many people of the congregation who are generous to all sorts of humanitarian schemes that are destitute of any religious aim who neglect and so hinder this work that God gives them to do.

It is not to the credit of this city, that is noted for philanthropy, that it has never done anything toward establishing in proper house any community of Sisters. New York, Boston, Providence, Baltimore have not neglected the opportunity. Philadelphia owes more than any of these to those under religious vows, but a small house on Cherry street for All Saints' and another on Lombard for St. Margaret's are the only provision that is made. The retreats held each year have outgrown the small chapel in All Saints' Mission House, so that many who wish to take advantage of them are unable through lack of room. What a blessing it would be if some person to whom God has given the power would provide a place for devotion. We have grand buildings devoted to all sorts of athletic amusement, art cultivation and educational purposes. We appeal for one where souls can retire for meditation, prayer and to learn the will of God; where souls may be trained in the love of God.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

Leaded glass for the door of the Crypt Chapel has been ordered.

Two small stools for the Crypt Chapel are the gift of Mr. Joseph Earley.

Solemn Mass will be sung at eleven o'clock on the Sundays in November.

An office of Bona Mors will be said on Mondays during November after Even-song.

The lamp which has been offered for St. Katharine's altar we hope may soon be in place.

The carpet now on the foot-pace of St. Katharine's altar was the gift of a member of the congregation.

The Rev. E. A. Larrabee, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Chicago, preached on Sunday night, October 16th.

Our grateful thanks are given to those who have so regularly supplied flowers for the High Altar and Altar of Our Lady.

Material has been given for a curtain for Chapel of St. John the Evangelist; to be hung across the part where the old confessionals were.

Members of the congregation are asked for subscriptions of money for altar flowers for St. Clement's Day and Christmas.

An oaken chest for the Crypt Chapel to keep vestments, etc., belonging to the chapel, has been offered, and is now being made.

A handsome silver chalice has been promised to the Church. The silver one now in use is often barely large enough for our Sunday communions. The new one will be somewhat larger.

The Mass at 7.30 during November will be requiem on all available days. The clergy will be glad to have names written and handed to them to be specially remembered on particular days.

A request has been made to print the introits and graduals of the mass and the antiphons of the magnificat. This could be done if some one would pay the cost. The clergy ought not to be expected to make the venture.

Rev. A. W. Doran began his duties as one of the priests of the parish October 1st, his letters of transfer were accepted by Bishop Whitaker October 4th; all the clergy are now members of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

The Crypt Chapel was used on October 11th and 12th for the body of Mrs. Mary Hagert, an old communicant of the parish, who died at Dingman's Ferry. A Requiem Mass was said at the Altar of Our Lady on October 12th.

A member of the congregation has given sufficient money to replace the steps and platform of the high altar with new ones made of oak. It may be that some one would wish to give a new carpet, the old one is somewhat dilapidated.

A flight of steps has been built from the passage way on the north side of the choir down into the cellar, so that access may be had to the Chapel of Our Lady in the crypt of the Church, the expense has been borne by one member of the congregation.

The Epiphany corporation have taken possession of the property at Seventeenth and Summer streets. They have torn down the old building and are now erecting a very complete church and parish building on that site. We understand that all the work now carried on at Twenty-third and Cherry streets will be transferred there. No doubt there will also be some change in our parish bounds because of this change.

Altar Guild.

The annual meeting will take place on Thursday in the octave of All Saints. Mass will be said at 9.30, the office said, a short address given, after which the business meeting will be held. There is considerable work on hand for the parish and outside; some applications to be acted on. The gifts are limited by the amount of donations at their disposal, and the number of workers available. It has been suggested that an exhibition of our embroideries be held some time during St. Clement's tide, and we hope that it may be arranged. Notice will be given of the day on the bulletin board.

The Music.

It is with very great regret that we announce the resignation of our faithful choirmaster, Mr. Remi Remont, who, undertaking the work when there was little material, has for five years patiently devoted himself to the work. With hindrances and difficulties that he only knows fully he has kept ever before him the interests of religion and of St. Clement's, and accomplished the result that we now enjoy. Those who so freely criticise ought to remember that the comparison with choirs who have an unlimited appropriation is neither fair nor just, and at St. Clement's we value behavior even more than musical success. Too many choirs that captivate and charm are a disgrace to God and religion in their actions.

The Banner.

A new banner for the parish, designed and executed in the work-room of the All Saints' Sisters, Baltimore, is almost complete, and is promised for St. Clement's Day. A description of this beautiful specimen of ecclesiastical needle work is deferred until the next number of the MAGAZINE. The whole design has been carefully planned, and the work carefully and lovingly done..

Formerly St. Clement's.

Whether others like it or not, the building at Cherry and Lambert streets, as a matter of fact, was bought and enlarged by money given and collected by members of St. Clement's Church. The corporation at present holding the legal title have made some arrangement with the Red Cross Society for its use as a Convalescent Home for soldiers. It is satisfactory to see that the Evening Telegraph did not ignore the beginning of its history when giving the news of the new arrangement. That hospital was a noble and brave venture of devout people of St. Clement's, for which we shall always claim the credit and insist upon others giving us our due.

Facts are stubborn things; they may be forgotten, for memories are short, but they cannot be changed.

St. Lawrence's Guild.

The Guild has held several meetings during the month, and the work for the winter is being planned and arranged. The case of each person asking help will be investigated; if worthy, arrangements will be made as fast as possible to relieve in the best way, or to direct to those who ought to be responsible. Donations of cast-off clothing, groceries, meal tickets, lodging house tickets, as well as money, will be thankfully received. The Guild has undertaken to help in the support of two of our children at the Sisters' House in Baltimore; $2.00 a week is needed for this, and an appeal is made to members of the congregation to aid in this particular case. Visitors are needed for several districts. There ought to be people who would undertake this work, and do it faithfully and thoroughly. Those who begin and do not carry out disgrace their own spiritual characters and harm the cause of religion; the test of true religious effort is perseverance.

Vestments.

Nine dollars and twenty-five cents has been given by four persons toward the cost of a set of purple silk vestments for St. Mary the Virgin's Church, San Francisco, of which our friend, Rev. H. Parrish, is rector. The silk has been purchased, and the members of the Altar Guild hope to have them ready for use in Advent. More money is needed to pay for the cost of materials.

Sixteen dollars and twenty-five cents has been given by seven individuals for the purchase of white silk for a cope to be given to St. John's Church, Toledo, Rev. W. C. Clapp, rector. Apart from our individual interest and desire to share in the work of these, our former clergy, we ought to remember that it is truly and really mission work, as much as sending pianos, Brussels carpet or partly-worn ball dresses or books of evangelical piety.

Catechism Notes.

The chapel seems to do splendidly for the catechism. The new system of lessons arouses a great deal of interest, judging by the number of diligences given in.

We should have more children. There are many who belong to families of the parish who never think of coming to Sunday-school.

If your children go to the catechism, get them to show their diligences to you.

The attendance at 9.15 Mass is not what it ought to be.

The Memorial Cross of the Holy Child Guild.

The memorial cross, to be awarded each year to that member of the Guild of the Holy Child who has been most regular and well behaved at Guild meetings, Sunday-school, and Mass, has been given to Jessie Forrester. The cross is of silver, and is attached to a long silver chain, so that it can be worn around the neck. The cross is the gift of a friend, in memory of her little daughter. The next one will be awarded on Holy Innocents' Day.

St. Katharine's Guild.

The new Guild of St. Katharine seems to be started under favorable auspices. The work of its members will be to do some task each month for the benefit of missions or other church work. The Guild is divided into two wards; the Junior is for girls over fourteen; the Senior is for those over eighteen, who are confirmed. May God grant that those who follow the rule of St. Katharine's Guild may be faithful unto death, as St. Katharine, their patron, was.

Fifth Annual Report of the Clothing Club—November, 1898.

The object of this club is to help mothers to buy clothing for their younger children by taking care of such sums of money as can be saved each week for that purpose.

Money may be brought to the school on Sunday afternoons. A card marked with the amount sent will be given to each child bringing it. Shoes, clothing for boys, hats, etc., will be bought for club members and sold to them at a discount. The clothing will be sold in the school-room every Monday.

The ladies in charge of the club desire to thank all those who have helped and encouraged them by donations of materials, half-worn garments, and the making of new garments. Thanks are also due to Strawbridge & Clothier, Dewees, and to the Eastern Penitentiary for discount on all goods purchased from them.

Donations of money, materials and half-worn garments will be thankfully received, and may be sent to the Parish Building, 2024 Cherry street, in care of Miss Katherine Smith.

All Souls' Day.

Names of baptized persons to be mentioned in the Mass on All Souls' Day should be written on paper, and sent to the clergy; the date of death should be put down; also at which mass it is desired to be remembered. Those who have died during the past year will be mentioned at all masses, others at one of the masses. Vespers of the dead will be said on Tuesday, November 1st, at 5.15 P. M. The offerings on All Souls' Day will be for a fund to buy lots for a burial ground for faithful parishioners, who may thus have proper Christian burial.

Novena—Nov. 14-23.

Memorial for the parish (to be said daily):

Ant.—I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring.

V.—O Lord, look down from heaven.

R.—Behold, and visit this vine.

Let us pray.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who dost govern all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplications, and grant unto this parish all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare: schools in which to train the young in Thy faith and fear; ministers to labor in this portion of Thy vineyard; a Church restored to the beauty of holiness. Strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; rouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; bring all to be of one heart and one mind within the fold of Thy Holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Holy Name: through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The "Book of the Compassion," Father Benson's "Manual of Intercessory Prayer" and "Manual for Intercessory Prayer," edited by Dr. W. W. Webb, are suggested as suitable for further devotion. Will not all take part in this union for prayer?

The collections on St. Clement's Day will be for the Endowment Fund of the Church, which is held in trust for the parish by the Pennsylvania Co. for Insurance on Lives, etc. (See MAGAZINE February, 1898.) Every communicant ought to feel bound in conscience to give generously for this purpose, "yea and beyond their power," for "other men labored and ye are entered into their labors." We must share in the merit and blessing of providing for others who are to come after us.

The procession of Guilds belonging to the Sodality of St. Clement will take place on Friday, November 25th. All members are asked to take part, wearing their medals, not being ashamed of the mark of salvation with which they were signed in Holy Baptism. Women and girls will meet in the upper school room to put on their veils; men and boys in Chapel of St. John the Evangelist. They should come not later than half past seven o'clock.

Tickets for the Parish Tea, price 25 cents, may be obtained at the Mission House, 2034 Cherry street, from the Sister in charge. Any surplus is placed to the credit of the Poor Fund.

All communicants of the parish are reminded of the obligation of making their communion during the Festival, the hours for hearing confessions will be posted on the bulletin board in the corridor.

Saint Clement, Martyr and Bishop.

Licensed for use by the Bishop of the diocese.

Collect:

O God, who makest us to rejoice in the yearly solemnity of Blessed Clement, Thy Martyr and Bishop, favorably grant that we who keep his festival may likewise imitate his fortitude in suffering, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle, Phil. iii: 17; iv: 4:

Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample.

(For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ:

Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.)

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself.

Therefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved.

I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord.

And I intreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellowlaborers, whose names are in the book of life.

Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice.

The Gospel, St. Matt. xxiv: 42-48:

Watch therefore: for ye known not what hour your Lord doth come.

But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.

Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?

Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

Critics.

The temper of our age is essentially critical. Every one knowns all about how everybody else should act, and without knowledge or information gives advice and criticises faults and failures. It is the sign of degenerate times; it pulls down, wrecks, lays in ruins, but does not attempt to build up.

Every congregation is full of these irresponsible, self-appointed workers, who are forward in undertaking, slack in performing, careless in carrying out, reckless in changing, prompt and bitter in complaining and blaming everybody but themselves, unrelenting in abusing those who interfere or remonstrate. Yet how much of true and valuable effort is destroyed by this unhappy disease. How useful to God's cause if only they loved His commands and desired His promises. Clothed with humility they might lead many a soul to the Lord; as it is, they are unhappy, discontented, miserable, a prey to evil thoughts and desires, making shipwreck of faith, hewing a path of ruin and destruction that leads not to God or heaven.

Catholics and Missions.

Catholics get accustomed to abuse and misrepresentation on floors of diocesan conventions, in private conversation, in partisan committees or public religious journals. It is no secret that they are not trusted.

No priest has yet been elected a missionary Bishop who represents or who is classed as an "extreme man"—that speaks for itself—and it is only within a very few years that such a one elected by any diocese could be confirmed.

A well known prelate, who for many years has enjoyed a handsome salary and the perquisites, not a few, of a wealthy parish and important diocese, has in a public address tried to persuade the rabble that what some parishes spend on elaborate services others give to missions. It is all very clever, but it is not true. Some rectors and Bishops get $10,000 a year, and there's where the money goes—the alms of the faithful support city establishments, sea-shore cottages, mountain camps, with carriages, steam launches and other trifles thrown in.

The Catholic parishes do not attract the rich in swarms, because these want not convictions and principles, but up-to-date notions and opinions. We are not afraid or ashamed of a true comparison, and dispute the accuracy of the plausible rhetoric of this Episcopal orator.

Names of Churches.

Of the 3,864 churches in our Communion in the United States in 1891, 385 of them were named after St. Paul. Next there were 367 dedicated as Christ Church. Then followed St. John, 366, and after that, to our great misfortune, 279 called Grace. (Not a single English Church has this title, and, indeed, it seems to be an Americanism pure and simple.) 178 were dedicated to St. James, 142 to St. Luke, 136 to St. Mark, 11 churches are called St. Clement.

It is interesting to contrast these titles with the most numerous ones in the English Church. This is the English order: St. Mary, 2,453; All Saints, 1,844; St. Thomas, 1,577; St. Andrew, 1,250; St. Peter, 1,043; St. Michael, 718; St. John 654. No English church is called Zion, while we have 37. They have only 1 Church of the Epiphany and we have 32. They have 2 of the Good Shepherd, and we have 67.

Naming churches after mysteries or articles of faith is a Roman practice not customary in the English Church, for example: Ascension, Redeemer, Epiphany, Nativity, Atonement, Transfiguration, Annunciation, Advocate, Redemption. The story is told of an English Churchman visiting New York and passing by the Church of the Incarnation, because from the name he was sure it was Roman.

There are some names in American churches which are meaningless or fanciful, such as Heavenly Rest, Holy Fellowship, The Reformation, Grace, and Zion. Others, while not quite so unworthy, are unfitting, as Reconciliation, Covenant and Regeneration. Probably when the day comes that the misnomer "Protestant Episcopal" is removed from our Church and Prayer-book, some congregation will call itself in fond memory "The Church of the Protestant Episcopal." What does St. Luke's Epiphany mean?

In certain localities, fortunately, there has been an attempt to arrange names appropriately; for example, in Worcester, Massachusetts, the first parish Church is called All Saints, and its daughter churches have been dedicated in honor of the Evangelists St. Matthew, St. Mark and St. Luke. In one place the churches are named after the archangels St. Michael and St. Gabriel. From these instances it may be seen what harmony and beauty, in a large scale, we might have had in our church dedication if we had acted with thought and reverence.

The dedication of a church should be carefully studied before deciding upon it. The history of the saint or name should be in some way appropriate to the parish or the circumstances. An example of a fitting dedication is the soldiers' chapel at Governor's Island, which is called after St. Cornelius, a Centurion; or a church in Concord, Mass., which is well named the Holy Trinity, for its worshippers lift their praise to the Triune God from the midst of a heretical Unitarian society.

After all what do we mean when we dedicate a church to a saint? What does it imply in the church's consciousness? Perhaps we may be able to discuss that subject on another occasion.

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP.

Workers.

Any members of the congregation who are willing to undertake visiting or give time for doing the many things that have to be attended to, in connection with our parochial work and charities, are asked to come to the meetings of St. Lawrence Guild on Tuesdays at 10 A. M., when they can arrange with Rev. A. W. Doran, who has charge of the mission work, or the Sister in charge.

Advent.

This solemn season of the Church must ever call to our minds the serious consideration of our lives. Judgment is real; eternity is real; Christians ought not to delay their preparation. Advent has its own duties; it yearly presents its own most important lessons. It has its warnings and encouragements. Don't let the throng of other things crowd out Advent preparation. "Watch, for ye know not the hour." The immediate preparation ought to be an earnest and thorough one, for a good Christmas communion; to receive Him, the world's Saviour, in the prepared room in the inn of our life.

The Bishops' Pastoral.

The loving greeting of the Bishops to all the "well beloved in Christ," was read publicly in the Church after due notice, on Sunday, October 30th, after the High Mass, in the presence of quite a large number who were minded to hear it. So different from former letters, breathing a true fatherly spirit and displaying an affectionate concern in the whole work of "this ancient church." A sign of changed conditions is the recognition of "the earnest and effectual work" of "the devout women who in sisterhoods are bearing their faithful witness and turning many to Christ," and the invocation of the Holy Angels toward the close, "May the blessed angels who minister unto the heirs of salvation waken us all out of sleep, as the prophet of old was wakened, and make clearer to us the vision of the Source of life, the mission of the Comforter."

Epiphany Chapel.

The corner-stone of the new chapel was laid on Thursday afternoon, November 17th, by the Bishop of the Diocese. The greater part of the exercises took place in the Orthopœdic Hospital, on account of the bad weather. The attendance was very small. It seems to have escaped the memory of all that the district in which they were and of which they were speaking was included in St. Clement's parish. It is an extraordinary thing that sensible persons should imagine that because they choose to ignore facts, or because such facts are not to their liking, that they can compel people to believe that the facts do not exist. On several public occasions statements have been made as to the spiritual destitution of this neighborhood. These attempts would be only absurd were it not for the fact that their motive apparently is unkind, unjust and cruel. The location of the chapel at Seventeenth and Summer streets will probably make a rearrangement of our parish limits necessary.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

Vespers of the Dead were sung on November 1st at 5.15.

The Altar Guild have a great deal of work planned for the coming winter.

Bona Mors devotions were said after evensong on Mondays during November.

A lamp offered by a parishioner has been placed before the altar of St. Katharine.

Bible Class in St. John's Chapel beginning Tuesday afternoon, November 29th, at 4 o'clock.

The platform and steps for High Altar will be of oak, and be in position by Christmas Day.

We should like to see many more people contributing regularly for the expenses of the parish.

Many names were sent in for remembrance on All Souls' Day, and at other times during November.

The novena for the parish was observed November 14th-23d. The memorial was said each day after evensong.

Mr. Remi Remont, at the request of the Vestry, has kindly consented to remain in charge of the choir until after Christmas.

The alms on All Saints' Day for mission work amounted to $29.77. The alms on All Souls' Day for burial plot were only $8.61.

"The English Gradual" may be obtained at McVey's book store for five cents. It contains the introits and graduals sung at the Mass.

Persons desiring to become members of the congregation are asked to obtain letters of transfer, that they may be enrolled on our list of communicants.

Already a number of adults are under instruction for Baptism, Confirmation and Communion. The Clergy and Sisters are always glad to give individual instructions to those who are in earnest.

The set of purple silk vestments consisting of chasuble, stole and maniple were sent to the church of St. Mary the Virgin, San Francisco, Rev. H. Parrish, Rector, in time to be used for Advent.

On the 1st of each month the Accounting Warden has to pay out $575.00, and besides this, coal, gas, repairs, taxes, interest and other incidental expenses. We manage to keep out of debt, but only a very careful examination of the accounts can explain the way we do it.

Mr. W. A. Goodwin, organist and choirmaster of St. Timothy's Church, Roxborough, has been elected organist and choirmaster by the Vestry. He takes charge of the choir after January 1st, and we ask for him the kind assistance and sympathy of the members of the choir and congregation. He is not unknown to us, for he is a member of St. Vincent's Guild.

Christmas.

Every faithful communicant is urged to make a proper use of Advent, preparing for Holy Communion. Wednesday as well as Friday should be kept as a day of abstinence, the whole season being spent in such serious fashion as is fitting for those "who wait for their Lord."

We ask liberal offerings on Christmas.

St. Clement's-tide.

The first Vespers were sung in the Chapel of St. John Ev., on Tuesday. Many people made their Communions at the early Masses, though not as many as last year; the morning was very wet. At the Solemn Mass, Gounod's "Third Mass" was sung with orchestral accompaniment. The new parish banner, a description of which will be found elsewhere, was carried in the Procession.

Father Osborne's sermon on "Christian Oblation" must have lifted many a tired soul to renewed effort. $410.85 was given for the endowment fund, and there was also offered by some generous and loving friend a release for the $2,000 mortgage on the Parish building. This completes the payment of that $4,500 mortgage raised in 1890 for deficit in current expenses. We may indeed thank God and take courage; there remains only $4,000 now on the Parish building, with $1,100 in hand toward the payment.

The Bishop of the Diocese wrote:

With the prayer that the observance of your festival may be spiritually helpful to you and your congregation, I am

Faithfully yours,

O. W. WHITAKER.

Letters were also received from Fr. Field and Rev. D. I. Odell.

Wednesday night a good crowd attended the Parish Tea. We missed some familiar faces, and wished many others had cared to come. It is the only time in the year that we all meet face to face. Our good friends who have furnished music in past years came again willingly and cheerfully. They helped us much by their presence and the music. Another friend, Miss Reilly, gave two recitations under trying circumstances. The rector made a few remarks, and Father Osborne gave an exceedingly interesting account of the work of the Society in South Africa.

Father Osborne again preached on Thanksgiving Day a wonderful missionary sermon, "Glory to God in the Church." His visit to us has been a very great privilege, and we hope may bear its fruit in our lives.

The Procession of Guilds took place on Friday. This is always a very delightful feature of the Festival; it is an opportunity to glorify God with the body, to test the reality of our Christian service by an outward act. The rector of St. Peter's preached for us this year again. Rev. R. M. Paine, of Mt. Calvary, Baltimore, was present in choir.

Saturday night the stereopticon again delighted the children, and the Rev. Charles B. Carpenter gave a description of a trip to Greenland, with scenes.

On Advent Sunday, Father Huntington preached at St. Clement's for the first time in over three years, to the joy of his many friends, in the morning on "Worship," and in the evening "Life in Christ."

The Exhibition of Parish Vestments and Embroidery on Wednesday, the octave day, completed a very happy and pleasant Festival.

Great credit is due Mr. Remont for his faithful kindness in preparing the musical part of the services, and the choir for their cheerful attendance and rendition of the music.

The acolytes, as usual, did not neglect their part of the preparations and serving, while the many who assisted at the different services must have felt some encouragement as to the future.

We make our acknowledgment to the preachers for their kind words of cheer, counsel and comfort. God grant that we may all make a living sacrifice of our bodies for the Glory of God, availing ourselves of the privilege of the heavenly feast, living our true life, worshipping God, that we may see Him when He comes again.

The Procession of Guild.

On Friday night, November 25th, the Annual Procession of the Guilds of the Parish took place. It was the first time that the new banner was carried at the Procession of Guilds. Rev. R. H. Nelson, of St. Peter's, preached the sermon. The order of Procession was as follows:

Contributions to the Vestment Fund, no matter how small, will be most acceptable, and may be given to the rector or to the treasurer of the Guild.

Philadelphia, November 3d, 1898.

St. Lawrence's Guild.

The annual report of the Guild is printed in this number of the MAGAZINE. A summary of its work and some results of its efforts was printed in the June number. Several of the members have resigned, and very few of the visitors have reported as yet for the work, while donations of money or of clothing to replenish the treasury and closets have been lacking. A donation of $2 has been received, and meetings have been held.

The Guild desires to give tickets for food and lodging to such as are deserving. A great number of those who apply are evidently not deserving, but some few are worthy of that temporary relief. They would like to give an opportunity to those in misfortune, and to whom a start is worth so much in putting them again in the way of earning a living—and they have found it a help to many who are struggling, to sell partly-worn garments, and give others garments to make, so helping them in the support of the family. These things can only be done so far as the means are put at the disposal of the Guild.

Mrs. Day is in charge of the bags. She is in the school-room every Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, or a postal card to her or Rev. A. W. Doran will procure a bag. The Monday afternoon sales will take place as soon as we have garments to dispose of.

Clothing.

Very few bags to be filled for the weekly sales of St. Lawrence's Guild have been called for. The weekly sales have not been held, owing to the empty cupboards. We make another appeal for clothing of every kind, both for St. Lawrence and for the Sisters. We shall be thankful for anything and everything.

Christmas Dinners and Mothers' Supper.

The Sister in charge asks, as in former years, donations in money and provisions, that dinners may be furnished especially to those of our own household at the Christmastide, that their lives may be brightened and cheered at the time of the Saviour's birth. The usual supper for the Mothers and their invited friends will take place on Thursday, December 29th, and money and provisions are urgently asked for this as well as for the entertainment of the members of the various Guilds.

October, 1898.

The Mother Adelaide Frances of All Saints', kindly furnishes us with the following simple description of the banner prepared by one of the Sisters:

The banner made for St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, is three feet by five, and was designed and embroidered in the work-room of the Sisters of All Saints', Baltimore.

It represents St. Clement clothed in the Pontifical robes, standing beside the rock. In his hand is the pastoral staff; behind him the Anchor of Hope, to which he was bound when cast into the sea.

Encircling the figure is the heavy golden chain, symbolic of those chains, now glorified, which once dragged him to his martyrdom.

In his mitre shine the jewels of devotion, and from his staff gleams the light, which shines for those who, doing the will of God, "shall know of the doctrine."

On either side the panel is a rich orphrey, with the figures of the saints, Vincent and Lawrence, robed as Deacon and Sub-deacon, and below them, Catharine of Egypt, and Cecilia, types of learned devotion and assiduous duty; twining round them, is the Living Vine, the type of Christ our Lord, whose fruitfulness is the Saints; the background is the Violet of Penitence.

Above all is the vision seen by St. Clement on his way to his death.

"The Lamb in glory standing on the mountain," adored by cherubs in the enshrining clouds. The vine no longer distinguished by its earthly coloring, but glowing with the transforming brightness of the beatific vision.

The theme of the whole banner is, apparently, the splendor and magnificence of the Church—the Communion of Saints, and the glory which shall be hereafter the reward of those who have come out of great tribulation, and made their robes white in the Blood of the Lamb.

Imitation.

In the pride of our material greatness most Americans resent the statement that we are an imitative people. On account of our progressiveness and originality in lines of invention, manufacture and government, the truth is overlooked that literature, art, music, architecture, indeed all the nobler creations of human intelligence have had but little added to their treasures by our efforts, and that little is based upon and guided by what the Old World has already produced.

Yet, if our national feeling were not in a large measure false pride, we should acknowledge the immense influence the principle of imitation has on human existence, and admit with gratitude the assistance we have had from those endowed with other abilities than our own.

We hear it often said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, but as a witness to the fact that broad as is the power of imitation in molding national and individual character yet its motives may be very diverse. We translate the phrase as if it said imitation is the sincerest form of praise. The word flattery has a bad sound and a bad meaning. A man flatters by affirming something excellent in another when his concern is not that his statement is true, but that it may redound to his own advantage. So with the false imitation; as long as it gets the praise of the true it cares not for the essential beauty of the truth itself. The true imitation is that which, beholding what is intrinsically good, aims to copy it without thought of anything but doing homage to the truth.

We see then that imitation is in itself concerned with morality, consequently we should expect that its influence would extend into the sphere of spiritual things, and be governed there by the same conditions.

Nor are we mistaken. Our Saviour's command "Be ye perfect as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" is the foundation of all true imitation. God is the "Supreme Goodness," and it is the characteristic of goodness to communicate itself to others. The ideals which every man deserving of the name sets for himself, and toward which he strives, are in themselves an implicit proof of the existence of God, Who is the sole perfect standard worthy of imitation. It is only inasmuch as anything else approaches that standard that it is fitting to be copied.

St. Paul therefore says: I Cor. xi: 1, "Be ye followers of me even as I also am of Christ." This is simply a translation of the standard into terms which men can more easily grasp. This is true imitation. So through all the spiritual realm where God's goodness or power has been bestowed by Him or gained according to His commands by the creature, the secondary standard becomes safe to follow.

But we must be on our guard, for there is an imitation of God which is not only erroneous, but sinful. It began when Satan in heaven declared "I will be like God," and strove to usurp His throne. His copying of God's works and attributes is not that he may give Him glory, or primarily that he may conform himself to God, but that he may deceive God's creature into awarding praise and honor to himself. Wherefore, in the spiritual world we find the strange paradox of almost all of God's works offset by an unreal, but cleverly executed, imitation of the devil's.

Just as in the common parlance of the shop, an imitation is an article which usurps the place of and passes for the real thing under hurried scrutiny, but lies exposed to the more careful test.

"The devil," says a spiritual writer, "is the ape of God;" a comment which covers the entire field of what we have been saying.

Instances of this fact are too numerous to follow out in detail, but some few we may consider briefly. Since God is omniscient, the future lies as open to Him as the present or the past, and portions of this future He has seen fit to reveal at various times to His faithful servants for their assistance and edification. The devil taking advantage of man's falling away from what God has definitely revealed to His Church of the future life and our communion with the souls of the departed, has filled the world with fortune tellers, spiritualistic mediums, theosophists, etc., pretending to supernatural powers, and drawing away numbers of unstable souls "intruding into those things which they have not seen vainly puffed up by their fleshly mind." Some good Church people are much disturbed because these persons are able to accomplish some very curious results, as though Christ had not called Satan "the prince of this world," and as if that mighty, though perverted, intellect, pondering the ways of the world since its creation, had learned nothing of the laws of its control.

Then again, God's working of miracles to attest to men His power as Creator or the truth of the doctrine He revealed. Once attested God's revelation needs but exceptionally the confirming force of miracles. "Blessed are they which have not seen yet have believed." Yet to the unbelieving how well the devil blinds and obscures the faith "by the signs and wonders" he produces to deceive if possible the very elect by modern faith cure, so-called Christian science, and divine healers. "Only by their fruits ye shall know them." God never meant physical wholeness to be the sum of man's perfection, otherwise he is a beast and not a man. God has provided for the more needful healing of the soul in His Catholic Church, yea and for the healing of the body in the Sacrament of Holy Unction when compatible with the highest good to the soul. Christian Science lectures at $100 per course show the baseness of the imitation as compared with the real

Then again, as it was a mark of our blessed Lord's ministry that "He went about doing good and healing all that were sick," so it has ever been a mark of the work of His Catholic Church in the world—as witness her hospitals, orphanages, refuges and schools, but she, like her Lord, always lays stress on helping men's souls through what she does for the bodies.

Satan, that he may draw men away from the light and life of the Church, has in these last days raised up an increasing number of philanthropic institutions, and efforts drawing their first inspiration from the church in which avowed infidels and agnostics are indeed toiling for the betterment of men's minds and bodies, but in no sort to the saving of their souls.

Lastly, that we may not unduly prolong our examination of the devil's imitating of God's work, let us take such a case as the desire in man's soul for God's pardon. Anyone who has dealt with souls in sin who are not hampered by prejudice knows that once the weight of sin is realized and the goodness of God. the whole longing of the soul, no matter how repentant, is "Oh, if I could only know that I was forgiven." The devil hard pressed for an answer to such a cry has invented several devices. Absolve yourself, he replies. Believe you are justified, and you are. You need no one between your soul and God. This is indeed a pleasant and a dangerous counterfeit, for "the heart of man is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." Left to absolve itself it becomes either self-righteous or despairing. To the less earnest soul the devil suggests that the agony over sin committed in time will grow more bearable and finally pass away, so that he makes forgetfulness of sin equivalent to absolution of it. No souls are more securely his than those whom he persuades to accept this imitation.

And still again, the devil drugs the conscience of the guilty soul by softening the name of sin with the pretense that it is not so bad after all, and God has shown no great evidence of anger over it.

Sacramental confession; no, never, cries the devil. It is degrading; you will be priest-ridden; it is weakening to character. Nothing, perhaps, does he attack so fiercely, and to nothing does he more persistently oppose his imitations, for "he seeketh his own glory."

Let us then "try the spirits whether they be of God." Between the imitation of sincerest praise furnished by the Catholic Church, in which is the fulness of Him that filleth all in all, and the imitation of flattery purposing only to steal from the glory of God it will not be hard for us to judge. "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrits . . . for ye love the praise of men more than the praise of God."

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP.

Fire.

On Sunday, December 4th, fire was discovered in the upper sacristy of the church. Fortunately the heat had melted the solder at one of the joints of the water pipes, and the stream of water was keeping the fire under control. There was little damage done beyond a hole in the floor, and the woodwork around the wash basin.

The Church of the Ascension, Chicago, was almost completely destroyed by fire on Christmas night. The loss is a very serious one to the congregation, and can but test the devotion of the people to the utmost. Our deepest sympathy is with the hard-working rector who, with many discouragements, has nobly fought for the Church and Catholic faith in this Western city.

The Rev. Thomas McK. Brown, Rector of St. Mary's Church, New York, died suddenly. The burial took place on Thursday, December 22d, many clergy and laity showing respect to his memory by attending the services. A Requiem Mass was said at St. Clement's on the day of burial. God rest his soul.

Of your charity pray for the soul of Sister Georgina of All Saints', who entered into rest December 21st (Feast of St. Thomas, Apostle) and was buried December 23d. The body was brought to the Crypt Chapel on Thursday, and watched by the Sisters of All Saints' and of St. Margaret's, St. Vincent's Guild, and members of the congregation. The Offices of the Dead were said on Thursday night, and Masses in the Crypt on Friday morning at 6.30, 7 and 7.30. At 9.30 the Burial Office, Solemn Mass and Absolutions in the church. The members of St. Mary's Guild, and other women sang hymns, and Mr. Balsley played the organ. Rev. R. H. Paine, the chaplain of the community, and Father Sargent were present, as well as the clergy of the parish. During the years in which she has been in charge of the mission work, she has faithfully performed the very important duties of her position; her piety, conscientiousness and rare common sense prevented her from losing a sense of responsibility in sentimental or popular considerations. She was ever a ready and wise counsellor for God's people. The Christ Child had for her a beautiful gift at the holy season—Himself—He whose will she had lovingly obeyed. No expression could possibly convey our appreciation of the surgeons and physicians who attended her, and of the authorities of the Presbyterian Hospital. Any who desire the privilege of giving any amount for the burial expenses may give it to the clergy in a marked envelope; later we will decide upon some memorial. The burial was in the Sisters plot at St. John's Churchyard, Waverly, Baltimore.

The New Chalice.

The design for this has been very carefully prepared by the Gorham Manufacturing Company, of New York. As the size had to be rather large, it was thought best to have the chalice rather massive and heavy, and this seemed to suggest the use of various detail of the Norman period of architecture, and so furnish something of a bond with the architecture of the church.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

Twenty-five Christmas dinners were sent out to the poor.

A lighter and extinguisher for St. Katharine's Altar has been received.

A new pair of vases have been received for the Altar of the Crypt Chapel.

It is proposed to place the old parish banner in a suitable frame, and hang it in the acolytes' room.

The cross on the high Altar, because of an accident, has been refinished by the same firm that made it some years ago.

We are greatly indebted to the clergy who made long journeys to preach at St. Clement's on Sunday nights during Advent.

We gladly acknowledge the receipt of Evangelical Tract, No. I, entitled "What is the Episcopal Church?" by the Rev. W. C. Clapp.

The new oak steps and platform for the high Altar are finished. They take the place of the old ones that were only pine boards, and had become very shaky.

The responses to appeal for Children's Fund have been generous and kind. Twenty-two persons have given $145.50; the amount needed is about $150 a year.

The attendance of women at the Thursday night meetings has been very encouraging. The intercessions and answers to questions are an important part of these services.

The Clergy and Sisters desire to thank the members of the congregation for their kind sympathy and offers of help at this time, as well as for thoughtful kindness in other ways.

A number of people have joined the various Guilds this fall. The rule of life with common prayer devotion and purpose cannot fail to help those who desire to know and do the will of God.

St. Mary's Guild have given a new missal. The silver mountings which they gave some years ago have been placed on the new book; they have also given some new prayer books for the clergy stalls.

The hymn for St. Clement's Day, printed in the MAGAZINE, November, 1897, was furnished us by a friend. It was a copy of a hymn used in one of the churches in London, dedicated to St. Clement.

Owing to insufficient notice, we suppose, the exhibition of the church vestments on Wednesday, November 30th, was not largely attended. The collection was very interesting, and deserved more extended interest.

Owing to so many rainy Sundays, the collections for several weeks have not been as large as they should be. Some people forget the responsibility of money, and will save from charity for their personal uses.

A Requiem Mass for the repose of the soul of Stewart Stone, Priest, and formerly Vicar of the Church of the Holy Comforter, was said in the Crypt Chapel on Monday, December 12th, the anniversary of his death.

A gas radiator has been placed in the Crypt Chapel. It is hoped that in this manner sufficient heat may be obtained. The stairway from the north aisle of the church (within the swinging doors) can be used to get to the Crypt Chapel.

Rev. H. Parrish writes to acknowledge the set of purple vestments, and to thank the friends who contributed, and the members of the Altar Guild who made them. They are the handsomest set owned by the parish. The burse and veil, it is hoped, may be ready for Lent.

Father Field kindly gave the meditations at the parochial retreat on Friday, December 16th. The number of persons making the retreat was not as large as was expected. We imagine persons do not realize the labor and expense involved in arranging such spiritual exercises, to say nothing of the blessings they might obtain for their souls.

A new picture, Murillo's, "The Holy Family," framed to match the other picture, has been hung on the wall of the Crypt Chapel, and is a loving memorial of Sister Georgina. Two oak stools have been given by Mr. Joseph Earley, and the stoup, given some time ago, which was found in the ruins of one of the churches in Rome, has also been placed in position. Two large vases, ordered at the suggestion of Sister Georgina, were used for the first time while her body was in the chapel, and are a memorial of her and of her devotion to our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament.

Of your charity pray for the repose of the soul of John Neill, communicant of St. Clement's Church, whom God in His loving wisdom took suddenly to Himself on Sunday, December 11th. He received the Blessed Sacrament on the morning of that day at St. Luke's, Germantown, and at 5.30 his soul was before God.

On Tuesday afternoon the body was brought to the Crypt Chapel and placed before the Altar, friends and members of St. Vincent's Guild taking the watches until the hour of the burial office. Wednesday morning a Requiem Mass was said in the presence of the body, his friends assisting. At 11 o'clock the burial office was sung in the church, and the absolutions given. John Neill loved God and His Church, In his religious duties he was ever careful and particular in the discharge of all responsibilities, whether as a Vestryman or in other parochial claims. His religion was a part of his life and character, and its principles influenced him in his business life and relations; men knew that he was a Catholic, for he was not ashamed of the fact. May God grant to his soul sweet and abundant rest, and a joyful resurrection.

At a meeting of the Vestry of St. Clement's Church, held December 18th, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That a record be made upon the minutes of the Vestry of the death, on December 11th, 1898, of John Neill; and further, that there be entered therein an expression of appreciation by the Vestry of the fact that his death is a personal grief to the members, and his loss a severe blow to the parish of St. Clement.

Having been connected with St. Clement's since 1882, and since 1885 almost continuously a member of the Vestry, acting during that time for many years as Accounting Warden and as Secretary; having taken an active part in the direction of the Working Men's Club, St. Clement's Hospital, the Guilds, and in all parochial matters; having frequently acted as a representative in the Diocesan Convention; his earnest and devoted service to St. Clement's Church during all these years has been felt, and relied upon, and appreciated by his associates of the Vestry.

May God rest his soul, and grant him a joyful resurrection.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Mrs. Neill, and that it be published in ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE.

F. D. WETHERILL,
Acting Secretary Committee.

Catholic Faith and Practice.

Dr. Mortimer has again put the church under obligation to himself, for the careful preparation of the chapters contained in Vol. II, just published. Especially the chapters on matrimony and Roman objections to Anglican orders are valuable and clear statements of the position of the Church. We particularly call attention to these because the study of them would steady and establish many a drifting and ignorant individual.

547 communions were made November 27th to December 25th.

Christmas Tide.

The keeping of the festival had a deeper reality to us this year than usual. The different Masses were well attended, and willing hands made the necessary arrangements complete and perfect. Three hundred and twenty-one communions were made. Many faithful people were detained through sickness; not many, we think, through carelessness or forgetting God.

The Solemn Mass at 11 o'clock was attended by a devout congregation. The choir sang Gounod's Third Mass, with orchestra and harp. It was only an additional evidence, if such were needed, of the faithful, careful work of Mr. Remont, and the loss the parish sustains through his resignation. The Catechism Féte was in the afternoon, and Solemn Even-song, Procession and Te Deum at night. The offertory was not as large as we hoped; many are unnecessarily behind in pew rent and offerings. The whole amount was $527.46; of this, $150.36 was for endowment; $33.97 for mortgages, $100 for enlargement of Clergy House, leaving only about $225 or $100 extra for Xmas money. This does not pay for the extra cost of our services, etc. We do not forget that flowers, Children's Fund, dinners and suppers are in addition, but these come from the faithful few; the many members of the parish gave practically nothing to testify their love of the Incarnate God. God pity and pardon all who spend only on themselves and families: they are pretty far from the kingdom of God.

The Catechism.

On the fourth Sunday in Advent there was a written examination on the work done since September in the Catechism. Twenty excellent papers were handed in. Three or four were practically perfect. The silver medal for the best paper was given to Emma Barraclough. Other good papers were by Teresa Mullen, Virginia Finney, Jennie Johnson and Charles McCloskey.

On Christmas afternoon the awards were made for the writing of diligences in the past term. Rewards were given to Charles McCloskey, James McElroy, Harry Hosfeld, Jennie Johnson, Lillie Johnson, Clara Frettin and Olga Irvine.

Before Christmas all the children brought some article of food for the poor. Two very large clothes baskets were packed to overflowing with vegetables, canned goods, oatmeal packages, flour bags, pickle jars and other good things to make Christmas more joyful for many a person.

Sister Caroline will have charge of the Infant School, beginning with January first.

The two classes of children from the Blind Asylum will leave us about the first of the year, as they are to be moved to the new home at Overbrook.

We hope to have a Bible Class for older boys in a few weeks.

The Christmas tree and entertainment for the Infant School was on Wednesday, December 28th, at 3 o'clock.

The Catechism had their entertainment the same evening.

Spiritual Notoriety.

We surely ought to thank God that one of the devout practices of holy religion that He has taught us in the Anglican Communion is, not to boast publicly or publish in newspapers the names of converts. It would be rather a difficult work, for the number coming to us seeking our spiritual advantages is so very large that it would be a daily item of news. The custom is artificial; the idea and motive back of it is vulgar.

The Bishop of New York varies his methods. His spiritual exercises are not all from Manresa. We suppose he says the Litany sometimes, not being hindered by other weighty duties, such as preparation of convention addresses, or after-dinner speeches. It is to be supposed that he does not omit the clause "from all false doctrine, heresy and schism," yet he has not denied the published reports that he was present and officiated in some capacity at the laying of the corner-stone of a building called the Church of the Strangers, in his see city. Such an exhibition is more fatal to the success of missions and spread of the Catholic faith than those matters that the distinguished prelate speaks of in public utterances before his Diocesan Convention. It is hard to understand these appearances as fulfilling the readiness "with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away from the Church all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to God's word, and openly to call upon and encourage others to the same." Of the same nature seem to be public congratulations to Protestant bodies on the completion of numbered years of separation from the Church of God. Such divisions have no use in the fulfilment of our Lord's prayer "that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee; that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me." Their existence is only a testimony to the pride and self-will of men, and approval of them wounds the heart of many a one who is striving to be faithful and true to the Body of Christ.

An interesting event happened a while ago in Brighton, England. At a meeting an accusation was made against one of the priests and the confession of a girl. The priest demanded an investigation, when the charges broke down and the Bishop of the Diocese writes to the person who made the original charge that, "a full, frank and ample apology be made as openly as was the original charge, is imperatively demanded of you, unless you would forfeit your character as a Christian and a gentleman, and prove yourself wholly wanting in self-respect."

We wish we could reprint Lord Halifax's speech and Mr. Russell's paper at meeting of E. C. U. One sentence might well be spoken to unwilling half-hearted, fair-weather friends, as Lord Halifax calls them. "Christians have generally supposed that the Church was constituted to teach the world, not that the world was intended to teach the Church. . . . Mr. H's advice seems to be that the Church should water down her distinctive teaching as a religious society to suit the tastes of those outside her."

We would quote with approval the words of Rev. R. A. J. Suckling, Vicar of St. Alban's, Holborn, London. "The Bishop is a constitutional officer of the Church, and while he cannot ask obedience to his own private views, he can ask obedience to the law of the Church, and when those laws are indisputable, the request from a Bishop that they should be carried out is a 'godly admonition,' and the priest by trying to carry out such an order is endeavoring to render to his Bishop 'canonical obedience.'"

The position of affairs in England; the evident willingness of Bishops who know better to cater to the hastily formed or prejudiced opinions of "the man in the street," and to act at the demand of their clamor, is evidence that the Catholic movement has still work to do. Every parish priest knows the unscrupulous tactics of the Italian missionary enterprise, and it is no surprise to find that now they are insinuating doubts that can only result, as one of their own clergy has called to our attention, in infidelity. Last summer the only response made to a courteous act was a vulgar sneer and covert praise in one of their journals. They seem to want to run the Christian religion as though it were the biggest thing of its kind, using corresponding methods. Then the fatal idea of bettering people's material surroundings, happiness by "settlements," and its kindred evils is one of the distressing symptoms of artificial effort. Souls are immortal; they need God and truth, and nothing else can satisfy them.

We are getting to the end of the century, and may look for a struggle, sooner or later the movement must come to this country. We ought to prepare to meet it; sentimental leanings to Italy or paganism is not the material to make good soldiers.

What a pleasure it is to meet a fair and honest antagonist. Whatever his failings, his frankness makes one feel honored in being associated with him, if only as an opponent "worthy of his steel." Catholics have been so blindly and bitterly accused that their chief care was for "ecclesiastical millinery and chancel gymnastics." They have been so persistently called "Papists" and "apists," and have been so roundly denounced as disloyal and traitorous, it does one good to have a member of the "old school" of churchmanship, especially the editor of a large journal, admit that Catholics are the life of the P. E. body to-day.

He says quite truly that definite and constant teaching is the mark of a living church; that his own friends do not teach their people, and the "Ritualists" have gained their success through assiduous and unwearied teaching of the truths they believe.

How good it sounds to hear him denounce the political harangues, sociological lectures and talks on ethics, which many have substituted for the Gospel of Christ, and now "the Ritualist" who was once condemned for his lack of regard for the holy ordinance of preaching, gets credit for practicing it most effectually. Truth evidently is beginning "to be mighty and prevail."

The writer quoted surely remembers the time when his "school of thought" taught, and taught assiduously, but their house has fallen because it was not builded on a rock. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." The new-fangled doctrines of the sixteenth century, which have overlaid so much of the teaching of the English Church in the past, rested on man's authority, and in spite of the hour long sermons in which they were expounded to the faithful, they were rejected with logical correctness by those who considered their own private authority as good as the preacher's individual judgment.

And why does the writer blame his friends? They have only accepted the inevitable, and made ethics, politics, economics and other "ics" do duty in the place of doctrines the people would not hear because they "know not the voice of strangers."

The only other alternative was to preach the whole Catholic religion on God's, and not man's, authority. But this would have been like the horrid Ritualists who go about "preaching the Gospel to every creature," and "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

In other words, it is confessed that the prayer book, like the Bible, needed a key to unlock its treasures, and that key was not man's intellect, however powerful, but the teaching of the Universal Church. The Catholic priest then, in spite of his disloyalty to the veneer of Lutheran and Calvinistic phraseology overlaying the old historic faith of Anglican formularies, is the only really loyal teacher in her fold.

The old tree and the dead branches next spring might say to the new green shoots, Here, you don't look like us; you go in too much for external show; you are disloyal to the order of things as you found it, but the new shoots have got the life of the old tree in them, and soon they will be the tree. Query, How much longer will the P. E. Church carry her dead branches?

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP.

Why and Wherefore?

This is a title of a valuable little book published by the Young Churchman Co., Milwaukee. It contains a short article, page 45, called "Incense Not Roman." This was quoted in the MAGAZINE some time ago, and the credit awkwardly given. The article has been reprinted in several exchanges, which have also copied the awkward reference.

St. Vincent's Guild.

The Feast of the Patron was kept on Sunday, January 22d, the members of the Guild made their corporate communion at seven o'clock. The annual dinner took place at the Clergy House on Monday. Those present seemed to enter into the joy of the occasion and to have a good time.

Enlargement of Clergy House.

The generous donation of $100 by a member of the parish for this purpose at Christmas makes it not inappropriate to refer to the matter. It is in response to a suggestion made several months ago. The house 2026 Cherry street is not large enough to carry on the work with the least amount of strain. There are rooms enough for the clergy to eat and sleep in, to accommodate their visitors and guests as a usual thing, but only at times by overcrowding. The kitchen and dining-room are small and gloomy, and there is no place for those who perform the ordinary household duties to sleep; they must come from the outside. The inconvenience of this must be evident to many. The only way in which it can be remedied is by donations of money; the vestry cannot incur any debt or mortgage. It is over five years, we believe, since the congregation has been asked to give anything for the Clergy House. There may be a few more who may be enough interested in the matter to give or promise something. Our dear friend John Neill had drawn a rough sketch of an entirely new house, and desired to undertake its building this year. We are not so enthusiastic about the raising of so much money, but we feel that it is not too much to hope and expect that the congregation may enable us to have a house large enough to carry on the work of the parish, which is theirs surely as much as ours.

Another gift of $50 has been received and a conditional promise of $300 in addition.

The Seashore Home.

About $500 has been set apart for the purchase of land on which to build a proper house. Sister Georgina had the matter much at heart, and it has been suggested that special donations and subscriptions for this purpose would be an appropriate way to mark our appreciation of her life and work in this parish. If a sufficient amount could be raised it would be fitting to have the house built as a memorial, but if that cannot be accomplished, a generous amount to be used only for land or building would be suitable. One offer of $100 has been received.

The Crucifix for the Holy Child Guild.

The silver crucifix and chain for that member of the Guild of the Holy Child who has been most regular at Mass and Sunday-school, and also well behaved, was awarded to Minnie Griffiths on Sunday, January 1st, at 9.15 A. M.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

The various Christmas entertainments were enjoyed by the Guilds and others interested.

The Bishop White Parish Library Association reports $21.00 as received from fourteen parishioners of St. Clement's through Miss A. S. Brown.

The new choir-master began his duties on January 8th, but during the following week he was unwell and unable to attend to his duties. On January 15th Mr. Gaff very kindly took his place.

A member of the congregation, the same one as last year, has made a generous subscription toward paying interest on the mortgage of the Mission House, 2036 Cherry street. Two or three others help in this matter. The person referred to has paid part of the amount for the current year.

The Christmas music was a joy to us all; it was not unmixed with sadness, for it was the last loving service of Mr. Remont and Mr. Gaff, who have for five years so faithfully borne the burden and responsibility of the music at St. Clement's. Duty nobly fulfilled never expects thanks, but on the part of those who witness it and share in its results it ought to call forth admiration and appreciation.

The executor of the estate of Mrs. Wentz has at last paid the money due the Church, less the inheritance tax. It amounts to $47.50. $25.00 was paid by the Church about 19 months ago, at the time of burial, for the services of the choir, with the expectation that the legacy would be paid over immediately, but we have had to wait. The remainder, $22.50, has been paid into the endowment fund.

About one year ago it was suggested that members of the parish might insure their lives for the benefit of the Church. One has informed us of the carrying out of this. We hope to hear of others having done likewise.

Mortgages.

On the parish property there is now $4,000 on the Parish Building, with something over $1,200 on hand toward it, reducing the amount to $2,800. Is it too much to expect that this be paid by next St. Clement's Day? It would be only a little over $2,000 to be raised. If all the people really loved their Church it could be done without any one feeling the loss; $5 from every communicant would more than do it. If we could only reach those who dispense themselves from giving as they are able. Over one-half of the congregation do not pledge themselves in any way. Most of these could do it if they really tried or cared. Religion is not a luxury, but a necessity to right living. If all the members of this congregation gave as God prospers them, it would not be many years before all debts on the property were paid, the Church property beautified, the Clergy House enlarged, a Sisters' House bought, Seashore Home built, and other things done for the good of the parish. More money is now spent on trifles and from good nature than would accomplish all this. A few people of the congregation give beyond their earthly power, because they love God and appreciate, others conscientiously, and a great many just so they need not feel they get religion free, a great many more as little as they can help. Let every one give each month for mortgages that they may get in the Book of Life.

Lent.

Ash Wednesday, the first day of Lent, comes on February 15th. It will be observed as a day of parochial retreat, the times of addresses being 10 A. M., 12 M., 3.30 and 5 P. M. Those desiring food must give in their names in writing to the Sister in charge at the Mission House. An opportunity will be afforded to make an offering for expenses. It is hoped that many persons will arrange to make the retreat for their soul's health, and not simply come for the addresses. Every person should make a definite rule during Lent, in addition to their ordinary one, as to prayer, fasting and almsgiving. It is helpful to keep Wednesday as a day of abstinence, and ordinarily not to eat meat except at the principal meal of the other days. Last year the attendance at the daily Mass was the evidence of a sincere desire to live near to our Lord, and many others might come if they really loved Him. There will be the usual addresses at Even-song, and a list of services will be printed.

The offerings for the expenses of Advent retreat amounted to $9.86, and the expenditures, including F. Field's expenses, amounted to $20.61.

The order for new stations has been delayed through pressure of other work, and we fear that we may not be able to have them this year.

Fifty-two dollars have been received for the Sister's burial expenses from four members of the congregation; three other persons have sent money to the Mother Superior.

Controversial Tactics.

Not long ago a statement was made in a religious paper under the direction of Catholics of another name, reflecting on the English Bishops, and giving Lord Salisbury as the authority. The clipping was sent to him, and his secretary has replied, denying the statement. It has been forwarded to the paper, with the request that it be printed, as this would, of coure, be the only honorable and Christian course.

Respectfully submitted,
REV. A. W. DORAN,
Acting Treasurer.

Our thanks are heartily tendered to the firm of Blaylock & Blynn for a large donation of hats and trimmings, which will find a ready distribution through our clothing sales.

We hope our own people will find occasion to remember us in like liberal fashion. So far there have been few calls for bags, so that our supplies for those who come have been exceedingly meagre.

The Employment Committee have been working faithfully cutting out garments, and soon we hope, by orders from those who want clothes and sewing on the part of those who need work, this branch of our charity will adjust itself nicely.

Clothing sales are now held Thursday nights, after Mothers' Meeting, and once a month on the last Monday afternoon in each month.

Let us repeat again our urgent need of many bags full of worn clothing, and donations from the members of the parish, whose charity to the poor we are supposed to represent and dispense.

St. Nicholas Guild.

St. Nicholas Guild for boys is meeting, as usual, every Saturday at 10 A. M. Attendance ranges from fifteen to twenty-five or thirty.

On the Saturday after Christmas we had the Guild Festival, consisting of a short service, and then the giving out of presents and the consuming of refreshments. The latter were consumed.

The associates of the Guild at present are Miss Julia Neill, Miss Neill, Miss Hart, Miss Fryer, Miss Allibone, Miss Sharples, Miss Starr, Mrs. Lea, Miss Lea and Miss Joline.

We now have dues—one cent a week—to cover breakage.

All young boys of the parish are invited to come to the meetings. Those who do come seem to enjoy it.

The Parish House.

We live in days replete with new versions of Holy Scripture, newly-found explanations of texts that were a candidly admitted difficulty to our less-learned forefathers, and wonderful discoveries of new "sayings of our Lord" so that it takes a great deal to startle us in the way of manipulations of Holy Writ.

Yet I think one of the most important of these changes has received rather inadequate attention. I refer to the discovery about the year 1880 of a set of canons for church government, containing the now well known statement "Let no Church among you be suffered to remain without its parish house."

Personally we have not been privileged to see the manuscript of these new canons, nor have we had a clear statement of the authenticity and genuineness of the same, but our belief in their existence and importance rests on the evidence of our eyes, and the incredible zeal which has seized our Church in abandoning old methods of preaching the Gospel to make use of the new.

However, we must be pardoned, if failing to find authority for this translation in the writings of the fathers and practice of the ancient Church, we condemn this wonderful discovery as a "dangerous innovation." Facts are with us, since to quote a recognized authority, "the parish house, as a missionary agent, is and always will be a dismal failure."

This we take to be so because the parish house teaches a different religion from the Church, and leads men to stop short of God. It represents on the one hand an apologetic support of the verities of the Christian faith, and on the other a pleasant and deceptive substitute for religion.

The parish house only postpones the crucial point of religion, the yielding of the will to God and His revelation, and sometimes it prevents it entirely.

It reminds us of nothing so well as the old game of hide and seek. The parish house Christianity says to the modern man and woman, now we know you don't want religion, but you are interested in improving yourself; you are just as willing to pay the Church for an entertainment as an opera company; you always get a return for your money and trouble, with a little religion thrown in extra. The trap is all too plainly in view, and the victims say "well, we will take all these nice things, because they are offered us so cheap, but we will have good care not to get drawn into any of this religious business."

This plan is not manly or straightforward, nor does it speak with the voice of Catholic authority. Church and State have never been advantageously combined, nor can Church and club get on any better. After all, our Saviour summed it all up when He said "My kingdom is not of this world." Don't let us then burden it with wordly methods.

The Cry of Disloyalty.

There is a great hue and cry against the Catholic clergy of the Church in England and America on the charge of their disobedience to authority. It is said that while the Catholic clergy are strong in teaching the doctrine of Church authority, yet in practice they are utterly regardless of Bishops, canons and rubrics, when they find such in their way. These charges resolve themselves into two complaints: (1) That the clergy go beyond the letter of the post-Reformation rubrics and canons of the Church; and (2) that they disregard the demands of individual Bishops.

Undoubtedly these complaints arise from an altogether perverted idea of the authority to which our obedience is due. Let us consider and reply to them.

In regard to the first, that we go beyond the letter of the post-Reformation rubrics and canons of the Church, we would reply that if it is to be said that there was a sudden and complete break in the Church of England at the Reformation in all matters of doctrine, discipline and worship, how can any honest man justify the present claim of the Church in England to the property and endowments which were intended to maintain the old faith and worship? Parliament, however, and the courts have decided that the pre-Reformation laws of the Church are always binding unless repealed.

Besides, a priest is ordained by the Bishop not merely to be a minister in the Anglican or Protestant Episcopal Church, but "for the office and work of a priest in the Church of God," i. e., the whole Catholic Church; he has, therefore, relations and duties not only to the limited time and area in which he lives, but to the Catholic Church of all ages and times—that is the very term of his ordination contract. As a fact, then, that priest is disloyal to his vows who insists on confining himself to post-Reformation rubrics or laws, if by doing so he has to act contrary to the spirit of the whole Catholic Church. We do not sneer at the Prayer Book, but as a work limited in its scope, and prepared at a most disturbed period of Church history (a period least fitted for such a task) it is exalted out of all proportion when it is made the sole and complete guide for all circumstances of the Church's worship. Sometimes it is required by loyalty to Christ in His Church and to ordination vows to go beyond the four corners of the Prayer Book to learn how to do things which the Prayer Book itself allows or enjoins. Of course, where our present formularies modify pre-Reformation usage, obedience must be frankly given to the modifications. But the Church of England, as part of the Catholic Church, must have laws and customs which are not explicitly expressed in her own special rubics or canons. To restrict her to those which have been enacted by her local authority since the Reformation reduces her to the level of a Protesant sect.

To the second charge, that we disregard the demands of individual Bishops, we reply that if there is one thing that our Church repudiated at the Reformation it is the theory of Papacy, which is in its essence the autocratic rule of one man, and which is as intolerable in a diocese as in the whole Church. Obedience to an individual Bishop is not an absolute obedience, but a strictly limited one. There is an authority to which Bishops, as well as priests, must bow, namely the laws of the Catholic Church, and in their rulings they must observe obedience to this authority. Orders given which disregard the law of the Church, universal or local, and in which the Bishop endeavors to rule his diocese according to his own prejudices, must be set aside in deference to that higher authority. Who would feel bound to obey a Bishop if he broke one of the explicit rubrics of the Prayer Book? Why then should he be obeyed if he breaks a law of the universal Church? We deny that there is any parallel between a priest regulating his obedience to his Bishop by the law of the Church, and a judge disregarding the law of the land and giving judgment according to his own will. The real parallel is between an unjust judge and a Bishop who disregards the laws of the Church, and rules his See simply according to his own theories.

Bishops should study and understand the teaching of the Episcopate of the whole Church. They should also remember that S. Ignatius says nothing is to be done in the Church without the priests, no less than without the Bishops. The Bishop of a diocese is the centre of its spiritual life, and to him is due canonical obedience, but he is not an autocrat to judge all things of himself, but is subject like the priests to the laws of the whole Church of God.

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP.

An Entertainment.

On the evening of February 9th Professor Barrington gave a conjuring exhibition to the children and to the mothers. The sleight of hand of the Professor was so wonderful that grown people, as well as children, had a delightful evening. It was the best conjuring entertainment we ever had, and our thanks are due to the Professor for the pleasure he gave us.

Memorial for Sister Georgina.

It seemed at first that we should try to build a house at Point Pleasant, but upon a more careful consideration of the whole subject it has been thought best to bend all our attention to raising money to provide a more suitable house for the Sisters and mission work than the present houses. All the reasons cannot here be given, but important ones surely are the advantage of a larger chapel and mission room, then several sums of money are available for this that could not be had for the first plan.

We, therefore, appeal for generous donations from every member of the parish and other friends, and we hope that the various Guilds may take up the matter and do their share. It seems best that names and donations should be published.

The New Chalice.

† A. M. D. G. In memoriam piam Stewart Stone, Sacerdotis quandam Vicarii Ecclesiae Sancti Parocliti qm. obiit xii Decembris MDCCCXCV. R. I. P.

Such is the inscription on the base of the very handsome chalice, a memorial of Rev. Stewart Stone, given by Elizabeth, his wife, to St. Clement's Church; a plain paten is also included. The work was executed from a special design by the Gorham Manufacturing Co., of New York.

The chalice is 10½ inches high, with a large base and bowl; the base is pentagonal, after the pattern of the others belonging to the Church; all the ornamental detail is Norman; there is a small crucifix on the base, and a very beautiful diamond. The vessels were blessed and solemnly offered for use at the offertory on Quinquagesima Sunday, with the special intention of the giver; the sacred vessels were afterward used at the Masses of the day.

Bona Mors.

The names of members of the parish are desired who are willing to take watches during the time bodies may be lying in the Crypt Chapel awaiting burial. Members of St. Vincent's Guild are always ready, and some few others have volunteered to assist in the last rites for the holy dead, seems to share both spiritual and corporal works of mercy, and we may not doubt such loving offices have special grace as a fruit. We would hope that this might lead to the formation of a Society of Bona Mors in connection with the Sodality of St. Clement.

St. John Chrysostom.

The rector, Rev. Joseph Sherlock, of this church, situated at Twenty-eighth street and Susquehanna avenue, earnestly appeals for money to complete the building. Twelve thousand dollars has been spent on the basement, which has been used for seven years for all parish purposes, $13,000 more has been paid and pledged, and $12,000 must be provided for. It is a worthy object, and ought to commend itself to the generosity of those who have God's money at their disposal.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

Solemn Mass on Maundy-Thursday at 9 o'clock.

Donations of money for Easter flowers are requested from members of the congregation.

The Vespers of the C. B. S. will not be said on March 12th on account of the retreat for men.

A black burse and veil in memory of the Sister Georgina has been given for use in the Crypt Chapel.

The storm of this month opened several places in the roofs of our buildings so that the water came in.

The purple veil and burse for St. Mary's, San Francisco, was sent off in time for Ash Wednesday; also, a priest's surplice.

The pressure of other duties has prevented the decision as to new Stations of the Cross, which we had hoped might have been in place for Lent.

Twelve dollars have been received from two persons for deficiency in expenses of Advent Retreat. This leaves a small surplus ($1.25), which is devoted to Ash Wednesday expenses.

An alms box has been placed in the Crypt Chapel. Offerings not otherwise specified will be used for purchase of things still needed; gas bracket, ventilating pipe and register, chairs, etc. Money for flowers so marked may also be placed there.

We learn from the newspapers that the will of Miss Robins bequeaths $500 to the rector of St. Clement's, to use at his discretion. This is another encouragement for the Endowment Fund; it is the third legacy that we have received, the others have been paid over to the Pennsylvania Co.

The body of Miss Emily Robins, a communicant of the parish, was brought to the Crypt Chapel at six o'clock on Monday, February 6th; members of the congregation kept the watch all night and Tuesday until two o'clock. The Requiem Mass was said in the Crypt Chapel on Tuesday morning, at 7.30 o'clock.

The blessing of palms will take place at 6.30 A. M. on Palm Sunday, and they will be distributed to those minded to receive them before 7 and 8 o'clock Masses at choir gate; at later Masses they may be obtained at the door. The solemn procession will be at 11 o'clock. The faithful are reminded that the palms are to be reverently preserved and burned, not thrown away when no longer kept.

The members of the Altar Guild are working very hard, and expect to have the new purple chasuble finished ready for use on Palm Sunday. The design for the orphreys is a beautiful new one, a vine with shields, on which the instruments of the Passion are embroidered. The principal shield will have the "Ecce Homo." This will be done in the work-room of the All Saints' Sisters, Baltimore.

Ash Wednesday.

In spite of the severe weather a number of people were able to get to church to receive communion, as well as to receive the ashes after the custom of the early Christians, reminding them that they were but dust and shall return to dust.

A larger number of people than usual made the retreat. The Rev. A. W. Doran gave the meditations, the subject being "The Rebuke of St. Paul" (Acts xxviii: 27). "Lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and should heal them."

The donations more than covered the expenses of the retreat.

Easter Communion.

The cards will be ready in time to be signed and handed in. Every communicant is earnestly requested to fill out a card and send it in. (1) We are sure then of the fact of their communion, even if made elsewhere. (2) We have their correct address, and (3) it helps to our knowing before hand how many are likely to be at each Mass.

Those who are not communicants of St. Clement's are asked to fill out cards, for the third of the above reasons.

Every Christian who has been confirmed is morally bound to make their communion at Easter, and to endeavor to be in a state of grace so as to make a worthy communion; the times that the clergy will hear confessions will be found below and also on the notice boards.

It is hoped that persons will arrange to come on earlier days of Holy Week, so as not to crowd Easter Even; especially those who make first confession, or after long absence.

Easter Confessions.

The hours of the clergy during Holy Week will be as follows:

Rev. G. H. Moffett—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, 10.30-11, 4-5, 7-8; Good Friday, 9 A. M.-5.30 P. M., 7-9; Easter Even, 0-12.30, 2-5.30, 7-10.30.

Rev. C. C. Quin—Thursday, 4-5; Good Friday, 4-5, 8-9; Easter Even, 4-5, 8-10.

Rev. E. Wright—Thursday and Good Friday, 4-5; Easter Even, 4-6, 7-9.

Rev. A. W. Doran—Thursday, 3-5, 9-10; Good Friday, 11-12, 3-4, 7-9; Easter Even, 3-6, 7-10.

Envelopes.

The financial year of the parish begins on Lady Day (March 25th), and a supply of envelopes will be sent during that week to each one who has used them during the past year. There must be a great many communicants of the parish who do not give regularly or conscientiously. Envelopes and rental of pews are the established methods, but only about 250 out of our nearly 800 communicants give through these channels. Some few of this number are unable, some are children with no income, but a great number, we are sure, do not give as their religion teaches them, but do serious harm to their lives by this failure. These last use and abuse their spiritual privileges. It is certain that a great many more people could and ought to give regular amounts; if they cannot promise each week, they might give a certain amount each month. The many stormy Sundays show that these people do not lay aside each week, they just count as clear profit for themselves what they have "saved" by not going to church.

St. Katharine's Guild.

St. Katharine's Guild meets once a week, on Tuesday evenings, and once a month the office of the Guild is sung in chapel. Fingers are kept busy on the evening when there is no office in doing various kinds of work, useful as well as ornamental. Miss Jenkins, Miss Ogden and Miss Newman have been admitted as associates. Full members so far are nine in number and probationers not a few.

Some Lent Thoughts.

The exquisite harmony which the Catholic Church displays in all her actions is an additional argument to her loving children for the residence of the Divine Spirit within her, although, like many other proofs, it is unseen by the prejudiced eye.

Take for instance the order and succession of the Christian year. How well our experience have taught us the more than human utility of it as a whole and the marvelous adaptation of its parts.

Not the least striking feature, when we examine closely, is the fitness of the Church's seasons to the natural seasons. Who at first sight would be convinced of the fitness of Lent coming in the spring? Yet spiritual writers have dwelt on it repeatedly.

God even in the Old Testament demanded the first fruits of all things for Himself. So in Lent by conforming ourselves with special closeness to the pattern of His dear Son for 40 days, we give our tithe of a new 365 days to God at the period when the life of the earth is in its beginning.

Again, by her penitential discipline, as it were, clearing away, ploughing and sowing she prepares her children for bringing forth new fruits to God.

With spring a new commercial year begins, the Church leads us to seek first the true riches.

With spring a new round of social life appears, the Church strengthens her children against its enticements.

With spring a new life of legislation, plans, theories and inventions begins its course, the Church holds up the Gospel as the true basis of all.

Nor lastly does the Church disdain to remedy the humours of the body brought on through the violent changes of winter by the manner of diet she prescribes than which nothing can be more healthful.

But Lent is of even more vital necessity to the world than in any of these ways.

The ancient prophet said "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." If we believe in the justice of Almighty God, and have our eyes open to the increase of crime and sin in the world, how shall we not apply these words to the human race, and hasten to use the first forty days of renewing life to appease the anger of God which must be so terribly enkindled.

Suicide, doubt, casting off the Catholic faith, greed for money have ruined the world afresh since last year. How shall it be rescued without new saviours? You think your life of small account in its influence and power, you have been planning chiefly for improving you own soul this Lent, but Jesus calls you to follow Him, "to fill up His sufferings" for your fellow-men, by virtue of the implanting of His divine life to imitate Him in turning aside the anger of our Heavenly Father, and thus to continue His work of saving the world.

How little we believe in the pains of hell, how infrequently we tremble before the thought of God's inexorable justice, how small value we attach to the power of prayer and intercession are all shown in the very moderate and formal way in which we keep Lent.

Disloyalty.

At a meeting in London on January 13th, attended by 220 incumbents, important resolutions were passed, and sent to the English Bishops.

"That by canonical obedience is meant obedience to the Canons, and to the Bishop of the diocese calling on any individual to obey the Canons and to conform to the law, usages, customs, and rites of the Church which have canonical authority." Proposed by Rev. G. Bayfield Roberts, vicar of Elmstone; seconded by Rev. Canon R. Rhodes Bristow.

"That the clergy owe it to the whole Catholic Church of Christ' faithfully to refuse to obey any demands, even though they come in the name of authority, which conflict with the law, usages, customs, and rites of the Church, whether œcumenical or provincial, which have canonical authority." Proposed by Rev. C. N. Gray, vicar of Helmsley; seconded by Rev. J. Wylde, vicar of St. Saviour's, Leeds.

"That the reservation of the Blessed Sacrament in parish churches for the bona fide purpose of communicating the sick and dying, and ceremonial use of incense being 'laudable practices of the whole Catholic Church of Christ,' and both being included in the directions contained in the Ornaments' Rubric, the right to such reservation and ceremonial use of incense cannot and must not be abandoned." Proposed by Rev. E. G. Wood, B.D., vicar of St. Clement's, Cambridge; seconded by Rev. the Hon. Henry Douglas, vicar of St. Paul's, Worcester.

The above seems to be an unanswerable statement as to the loyal position of Catholic priests (those in fact as well as theory). The article in the last MAGAZINE, "The Cry of Disloyalty," was a condensation and restatement of an editorial in the Church Times. The conflict in England is largely political, and may lead to the disestablishment and robbery of the Church. Up to the present time there has been no attempt in this country, except in a few places. In this connection we desire to call attention to the fact that at the noonday services held under the direction of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at St. Stephen's and St. Paul's Churches, only one priest in sympathy with Catholic truth is announced to make an address, the rector of St. Peter's Church. This may or may not be significant; it does not appear to be an accident. Protestantism is a failure; its "spurious philanthropic craze" is a dismal failure, and it will be beaten also if it attempts the persecution and riot treatment. The Church Standard acknowledges that the so-called ritualists are the only ones who teach their people anything, and might have added are the only ones who are doing any real spiritual work.

Bishop Satterlee, a Champion of Protestantism.

The Bishop of Washington has sent us some appeals for funds to build his cathedral, which, he says, is to be "the representative Church of all American Protestantism." The only motive we can see for making such a statement is to draw money out of Protestant pockets. But surely it is a mistake for several reasons. First, because sectarian eyes cannot be shut up much longer with the idea that our Church is the representative Church of all Protestantism. History denies this statement and present facts make it absurd. Ask the dissenter in England to-day, in the midst of the present religious agitation, If the English Church is the representative Church of Protestantism — a Church which has always distinctly rejected even the name of Protestant--hating even the garment spotted by sectarianism. And what his English brother has known always the intelligent American Protestant is realizing fast that this old theory, imposed by Romans, and fostered by unread Episcopalians, is not true.

Then, again, how can there be a representative Church of Protestantism when the Protestant theory of individualism and private judgment makes every man his own bishop, and every office desk a chair of theology? "Cathedrals" and "Bishops" are not in touch with Protestant principles, and the wise Protestant will suspect a trap.

Strange it is to hear of Bishop Satterlee building a church for the "Creedless Gospels." One of his pet phrases used to be "I am a Catholic, gentleman; remember, I am a Catholic." A white black bird is a rara avis, but a Protestant Catholic is still rarer.

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP.

"Demands."

"There are so many demands at St. Clement's," is the excuse that some people give for not responding to a special opportunity that God gives to conquer "covetousness which is idolatry," according to Holy Scripture. In many cases these persons are fully able, do not give one-tenth of their income (as far as one can judge) for religious and charitable purposes, or practice real self-denial that they may resist temptation and work out their salvation without fear and trembling.

Dear friends, the only person who "demands" is God. He alone has the right. You are reminded of a responsibility or a privilege, and you are responsible to God. If you do not settle with Him now, He has appointed the day.

"I have so many demands on me." Perhaps the real owner desires you to give up some luxury; to live more plainly. God knows His own purpose for you. Do not thwart it. You are only a steward, and the unjust steward will one day stand before "The Rich Man" and hear the words: "Give an account of thy stewardship." In that moment no excuses will avail; no regret or tale of how many friends entertained, or banquets given, or popular subscriptions advertised, only the account kept from God, His Church, and His purpose. The robbery of God in the matter of tithes and offerings goes on successfully, and friends give shelter who have shared these benefits, but while you can purchase notoriety and flattery, you cannot purchase in this way eternal life.

All Saints' Sisters of the Poor.

Nearly twenty-one years ago this community established a house in Philadelphia and undertook work in St. Clement's Parish. The blessings that have come; the souls that have been cheered, helped and strengthened during these years, God alone knows. The trials of those who have lovingly labored are only known to Him. Philadelphia for many years owed to this community the only presentation of the religious life; through their life and influence many others have found a true vocation not only in All Saints', but other communities. For many years they had a home for trained nurses, and through these nurses many sick beds were made more endurable. As a result of the exacting work here, more than one Sister has been disabled, and in December the Sister in charge died. It seems only right to mark our appreciation of this work at this time, and it was the wish of many to make a loving effort to raise a sufficient sum of money to provide a house that might serve more adequately to meet the needs of the work, and particularly where provision might be made for a larger chapel.

It is evident, or ought to be, that we may rightly appeal to every member of the congregation to give something, particularly such parents as have not been called to give a son to the ministry or a daughter to religion. Further the general benefit of the city entitles us to hope that many others may respond who have been benefited directly or indirectly, either in spiritual or charitable ways. The response so far has been very encouraging, and expect subscriptions when a fuller list is ready. John Douglass Brown, Jr., Esq., Drexel Building, has kindly consented to act as treasurer. Subscriptions may be sent to him or put in the alms basins at any service and marked All Saints' House Fund. About $2,000 is available at present. We would like to have about $6,000.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed Monday, May 29th, at 8 P. M., as the date of his visitation to St. Clement's for the purpose of giving Confirmation. Classes will be formed after Easter, and the Clergy request that the names of those desiring to be prepared may be given to them or to the Sisters as soon as possible. The first address will be on Friday, April 7th, at 8 P. M. in the Chapel of St. John Evangelist.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

A new rug for the Crypt Chapel has been promised.

A new hymn board for the church has been put in place.

One hundred dollars has been received or a Christmas Crib.

The cost of repairs to roofs of our various buildings will amount to $99.76.

A crucifix to hang on the wall of the upper school room has been given and is in place.

Election of Vestrymen will be held on Easter Monday, April 3d. Polls open at noon.

We are under very special obligation to the preachers who have so kindly come to us on Sunday nights.

We hope there may be a large Easter Communion and liberal offerings for current expenses and special funds.

Pew rents are due April 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the vestry room, Monday, April 3d, 2-4 P. M.

A Paschal Candlestick of brass has been given in memory of a communicant of the parish, and will be in use during the great forty days.

Two hundred dollars have been received as a donation for enlargement of Clergy House. This makes $350 on hand, and $300 more promised on condition.

Do not put off your confessions until the end of Holy Week. If you can arrange, come on one of the earlier days, and live in a state of grace until you have made your Easter Communion.

Envelopes were sent out during last week to all who had used them during the year, as well as some who wished to begin to give regularly. Anyone who desires a package can ask one of the Clergy.

On Easter Day, members of the congregations will be admitted for the Solemn Mass at the door of Parish Building up to 10.30 o'clock, when other doors will be opened. Admission to gallery will be only by ticket and for special reasons.

Every communicant of the parish is asked to fill out the Easter Communion Cards with name and address, as well as time and place of communion. Strangers expecting to make communion at St. Clement's are also asked to fill out cards, that we may have an idea of communicants expected at each Mass.

The many disagreeable Sundays since St. Clement's tide, has caused a very decided falling off in our revenue, amounting to several hundred dollars. This is very serious and sad. It will require generous offerings at Easter for current expenses, as we suppose members of the parish do not wish salaries and bills to be unpaid.

Rev. E. Wright.

It is with great regret that we have parted with Mr. Wright as one of St. Clement's Clergy. For the first time in his life he has been separated from the parish. In his new work at Christ Church, Danville, Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, he has our best wishes, sympathy and prayers, not that he may be successful or popular, but that he may work for the glory of God and good of souls. The election as rector and his departure was one of those sudden affairs that come, and it seemed right to arrange so that he might go immediately. Of course the work of the other Clergy has necessarily been increased, but our faithful acolytes have as usual given time and loving labor.

Good Friday.

The Bishop of the Diocese has again approved of the relaxation of the strict fast. This will permit persons to take some food in the morning without any scruple. The permission was asked on account of the prevalence of so much sickness.

Father Longridge will preach "The Passion" on Good Friday.

Easter Confessions.

The hours of the clergy during Holy Week will be as follows:

Rev. G. H. Moffett—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, 10.30-11, 4-5, 7-8; Good Friday, 9 A. M.-5.30 P. M., 7-9; Easter Even, 0-12.30, 2-5.30, 7-10.30.

Rev. C. C. Quin—Thursday, 4-5; Good Friday, 4-5, 8-9; Easter Even, 4-5, 8-10.

Rev. A. W. Doran—Thursday, 3-5, 9-10; Good Friday, 11-12, 3-4, 7-9; Easter Even, 3-6, 7-10.

Communicant List.

This list must be kept as accurately as possible. Quite a number of names now on it have not made their communions for a long time, and if they neglect their privilege and duty, the names must be removed as achial communicants. Careless neglect is very serious in its consequences. Those who are ashamed of Christ their Lord now, will find Him at the judgment ashamed of them, and hear the words, "Depart, I never knew you." There are also quite a number of persons who attend the services regularly, and consider themselves members of the congregation. We would suggest that they should obtain their letters of transfer and be enrolled as communicants of St. Clement's.

Retreats.

The men's retreat was made on Mid-Lent Sunday. Not as many as usual kept it.

The mothers' retreat was held on Thursday, March 16th. Rev. A. W. Doran was conductor. The subject of the addresses was "Hagar in the Wilderness." About sixty women made the retreat.

The retreat for St. Vincent's Guild was made on Passion Sunday.

The retreat for Holy Cross Guild was made on Passion Sunday. Father Langmore was conductor. About thirty made the retreat.

The retreat for the Outer Sisters of All Saints' began on Tuesday, March 21st, and ended on Saturday, March 25th. Father Langmore was the conductor.

Acting Treasurer.

Mortgages.

The treasurer of the Sinking Fund has on hand about $1,700 to pay toward the mortgage of Parish Building, which amounts to $4,000. The Vestry have appropriated the amount of interest formerly paid on ground rent, $585, and $90 of former mortgage interest; this makes $675 a year. We would ask other donations of money. Will not every member of the Parish try to give $5 by St. Clement's Day? Some can give more, others not so much.

The New Chalice.

The Gorham Company has courteously furnished us with a very careful and exact description of our new Chalice. We quote extracts:

"The Chalice is very striking in design, and quite different from the conventional patterns. . . . Its singularity consists, however, in its massive simplicity and beauty of outline and proportion rather than in any elaboration of detail or enrichment, for it is fashioned on the lines and in the spirit of Norman work of the Twelfth century. As the Chalice was wanted in a severe and bold style, the work of the Twelfth Century was selected as most suitable for the purpose, since the best examples of that period, although lacking the grace and elegance of the later styles, are beyond criticism in the matter of popularity, and have a severe and chaste beauty of their own. The base is pentagonal in plan or five-lobed, an unusual arrangement, as they are generally made either round or six-sided. The panels of the base are decorated with columns and Norman arches. The only other decoration on the base is a small crucifix in low relief. The stem is also five-sided, straight, severely simple, merely ornamented at the centre with a massive round knot, consisting of interlaced circles in relief. These circles are enriched with a simple ornament, and are suggestive of the interlaced arches so often seen in the Norman buildings. The calyx encircling the lower part of the bowl is the only portion which boasts much ornamentation, it being enriched with the conventionalized natural forms which the Norman architects some times used around their carved doorways, etc.

"The Paten is a perfectly plain disk 6½ inches in diameter, a little more concave than usual and decidedly thick and heavy in the centre with the edges thin to facilitate the removal of crumbs from the Corporal. It was thought best not to give the silver the usual mirror-like polish of new work, but to substitute the more artistic finish which looks more like well kept old silver." A very pure diamond is on the base; the inscription is on the under side, the Paten and inner surface of bowl are gilt, and the lip of Chalice is made very thin.

"Spurious Philanthropy."

"Philanthropy is not religious faith. The greatest infidels have been men noted for their humanity. Increased solicitude for the temporal happiness of men is even a distinguishing feature of the religious doubt and denial which are so widespread and so conspicuous at this time. Skepticism concerning the fundamental articles of religious faith and the dogmas of theology has encouraged the substitution of mere philanthropy for the religious faith which looks beyond time and sense. Consequently churches are turning their passionate feelings toward charity, socialism, and various other devices for ameliorating the merely temporal condition of men. They act as if this earth ended all, while religion teaches that the everlasting life beyond the grave is all; that light affliction here is relatively of only momentary consequence, and desirable even as discipline, necessary as a schooling for the true and eternal life which is to come."—N. Y. Sun.

Easter.

God Himself has crowned the festival of Easter as the Queen of all the Church's days of rejoicing.

So great has He accounted it to be, that He was not satisfied with its being celebrated once in the year with the greatest honor men could pay, but for its dignity He decreed not a monthly, but a weekly memorial as a continuation of its joy.

Nay, further to show men His exalted estimate of "this day which the Lord hath made," he removed His blessings from the Sabbath on which it seemed so irrevocably placed, and caused it to shine upon the day of Resurrection. How could God have more strongly indicated that the glory of His rest after the works of creation had been surpassed by the glory of His rest after the work of redemption completed in the person of His dearly beloved son!

Just as the doctrine of the Resurrection subordinated all other truths of St. Paul's preaching to itself, so Easter draws all other seasons in its train. It is the glorious sun; they are attendant planets. No festival rivals its unalloyed happiness. Those that go before, like Christmas and Epiphany, are dimmed by the shadow of the approaching cross. Those that follow, like the Ascension and Whitsunday, denote but the receiving of the spoils of its Easter victory.

Easter is like heaven, for it shows us Lent stretching like a dimly-remembered life of suffering and temptation, all forgotten now in the enjoyment of God's promised reward.

Easter is the angel of God's presence sent to guide us into the Canaan above.

Easter is the Balm of Gilead for every heart that is suffering or mourns its dead.

Has not God endowed Easter with His own transforming glory?

Souls at spire and altar, roadside and banner, lifting on high the sign of infamous death, now become the sign of enduring life.

Consider well the burial ground turned into a peaceful "sleeping place," and its countless citizens with their feet toward the East, and the Cross at their head, all witnesses of the fact of that first Resurrection.

Think, too, of men saved from being beasts by the virtue of hope shining within their hearts, and that hope receiving the great abundance of its light from Easter Day.

Have we laid hold on that hope? Have we made it a real part of our lives?

I said that Easter brought unalloyed happiness, and so it does in itself, but men mar it as they have done all other gifts of God.

How many persons you see in church on Easter Day, who have no share in the Resurrection of Jesus. It is fashionable to go to church that one day in the year. It is quite the thing to make one's communion.

These souls are deceiving themselves into thinking how cleverly they got rid of Lent; how comfortable it is not to be tied down all the year with church duties. But God sees how small value they place on Him and His gifts. God does not let them slip in and steal the reward for which the faithful have toiled. They have not been willing to suffer with Him, so they have no claim on the crown; they expect to go back to-morrow to their old manner of living, proving that they have not been raised in newness of life. These have "no part in the first Resurrection."

So there is comfort for the patient plodder who arrives weary but successful at the end of Lent, for one who has crucified the flesh like Jesus; who prayed as He in the garden; who has scourged the body by fasting; who has stripped it of its possessions in almsgiving. To such an one the Easter blessing is assured.

There would have been no Easter without Good Friday—"no man is crowned unless he strive lawfully"—"he that entereth not by the door, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

Americanism.

The Holy Roman Church, we know by this time, for we have been told it so often, is the true and only seat of Christian unity and concord. Anglicans and Greeks have no voice of authority. This is the first promise of their syllogium. The second promise that "certain persons" have wickedly been holding the dangerous and disturbing tenets of "Americanism" for His Holiness Leo XIII. says so, and has published an Encyclical to condemn them.

The conclusion is: (1) This doesn't count. The Roman Church is in perfect concord; everybody has accepted the Encyclical; or, (2) No one really held these views, even if the Pope thought they did, it was just a diversion to furnish exhilarating exercise for the infallible voice of authority. The old story of "not guilty, but don't do it again;" or, (3) Both parties say these other fellows are terrible. I am so glad they are condemned. Really, you know I have no occasion to change my beliefs; the Encyclical doesn't condemn what I hold.

But the famous "'man in the street" is calling out, "Hi, there, how will I know Mr. Papal, unity and infallibility, when I see him?"

However, speaking more seriously, this little description among our brothers of the Roman Communion is a comfort as well as a grief.

A grief because we do not rejoice in a growth of discord in any branch of the Christian Church. A comfort because we are thereby assured that our "voice of authority," while not furnishing encyclicals every month is a truer basis of unity and concord than the ultramontane theory. On this subject the unanimous memorial to the Queen of the English Church Union, numbering 35,000 members, passed on February 28th, is not a bad sign of growing Catholic unity of the very best sort.

"What is Americanism?" Far be it from us to define what the Roman Pontiff has not successfully defined. Is it the principles of Father Hecker, founder of the Paulists, the condemnation of whose "Life" in French the Pope approved? The Paulists assert it is not. Is it the Archbishop of Ireland and his confreres in such volumes as "The Church and Modern Society?" Prof. Schell, of Würzburg praised Archbishop Ireland in his books, and the Vatican has put them on the index.

But Monsignor Ireland writes a beautiful letter of adherence to the Papal throne.

If we might venture an opinion as to what Americanism is, we should describe it as the attempt to harmonize the theory of the supreme, infallible Vicarship of the Roman Pontiff, with the growing sense of national spiritual needs in the United States.

The fact of nations being corporate units in God's structure of the human race has been continuously lost sight of in all Papal aggression and maintenance, but is a truth most forcibly inculcated by the historic documents and principles of the American people.

Americanism then meant the plan by which certain Roman Catholics in this country, and a few abroad, desire to reach and attract the people of the United States with the vision of a great patriotic national church in only nominal dependence on the foreign see of Rome.

A beautiful ideal, perfectly true and laudable in itself, but perfectly illogical and impossible to reconcile with the modern theory of Papal infallibility and jurisdiction also accepted by this "forward movement" among our Roman friends. So then we fear this family squabble must go on until the conclusion is forced as it has been before, that nationality and papacy are contradictory terms in eccleciastical government, and a foreign Pope cannot meet American problems. You can't have popery without the Pope, but like forty Roman priests since 1893, you can find a national Catholicity in that which is by right, and will be soon in name, the American Church.

Consequently while strong minds and pens have carried our war for national churches "into Rome," we can take our turn of sitting on the fence, and while Anti-Americanism, headed by Professor Schröder, of Washington, call their opponents "neo-Protestants," "Gallicans," "Liberals" and "Heretics," and the Americans reply with "German Jesuits," ranks among the German clergy, "as stupid a set of blockheads as the Black Forest ever produced." We smile, and say, "Dear me, you fellows musn't fight; you've been telling us that in very Anglican."

We print the letter of Canon Carter written for the great E. C. U. meeting in London. This priest over ninety years old is well able to speak for and to Catholics.

CLEWER, February 27th, 1899.

MY DEAR FRIENDS AND BRETHREN:

My name is associated with the important statement which I should have wished to propose for the acceptance of the delegates of the various branches of the English Church Union to assemble at Cannon street, had my age and health permitted me to do so. Such association is due, I suppose, to the fact that in years past I shared in contending for what we called the "Six Points" as one of those who carried on that struggle to the end. We all know that struggle, through the blessing of God, was successful. Those with whom I then worked happily, have, for the most part, passed away, to be succeeded by a body far larger, but as firm, to bear their witness in a conflict no less eventful and important. For now as it seems the world has arisen against what we hold to be the truth, and there are uncertain sounds, uttered by those in authority, that make it necessary to affirm plainly and boldly what we believe. It is time therefore for our great and growing body of the faithful, so happily united in combined action during very many years, to speak out and say its say, before the world. I am thankful to be with you in spirit at this great gathering, and we at Clewer in our different chapels shall be offering the Blessed Sacrifice at our altars together with the great body assembled at St. Paul's Cathedral imploring our Lord's support in our endeavor to maintain the Catholic Faith as it has been transmitted to us.

In all true affection and communion of feeling believe me to be ever yours in our Blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, T. T. CARTER.

Canon Body writes to the same meeting concerning the Declaration: "Its value to my mind lies in the assertion of the continuity of the English Church since the Reformation with that Church before, and of its consequent inherence to the one Catholic Church and connection with the Church of Jerusalem, the Mother of all Churches. This position must be asserted, maintained and fought for regardless of all consequences."

MY DEAR MR. FIELD:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends, who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP.

The Sanctuary.

In reply to inquiries from several members of the congregation, we would state that the walls of the Sanctuary are in a very shabby condition and could be much improved in appearance, but there is no fund that would pay the cost of such work and the vestry have not sufficient balance in hand to undertake it. Further it would seem at the present time that we have so many other important matters that demand our attention that it would not be wise to attempt anything. It would seem very desirable to pay the rest of the mortgage on the Parish Building before we undertake this further matter.

Diocesan Convention.

The 115th Annual Convention of the Diocese of Pennsylvania will be held in Church of St. Luke-Epiphany on Tuesday 2nd day of May, 1899, at 10 A. M.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed Monday, May 29th, 8 P. M., to give the Sacrament of Confirmation in St. Clements. Instruction each Friday, 8 P. M. For boys, Tuesday and Thursday. Girls at Mission House. Women at Mission House.

John T. Blake.

Another member of St. Vincent's Guild has entered into rest, his body was brought to the Crypt Chapel on Sunday, March 26th, and remained there until Tuesday when the burial office and mass for the repose of his soul was sung. The body was vested as an acolyte and with the Guild medal. May he rest in peace.

In Memoriam.

Inasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God, in His wisdom, to take to Himself our beloved brother, John Thomas Blake; therefore,

Resolved, That we the members of the Guild of St. Vincent desire to record our deep sorrow and the sense of loss we feel in our bereavement.

That permitted as we have been to share in the works of this Guild for many years, and having enjoyed the great privilege of being co-labourers with one who was ever faithful in performing his duties as an acolyte, we wish also to express our gratitude to Almighty God for the example of his regularity in performing his spiritual duties and his fortitude in suffering.

"Eternal rest grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him."

The Fruits of Persecution.

One result of the agitation in England in regard to Confession and the Mass has been that more confessions and communions have been made than usual. "If we suffer with Him we shall be glorified." It was only to be expected, the Church of England and the church in this country are the Body of CHRIST, the doctrines, customs, practices are these that have CHRIST'S approval and blessing. The Holy Spirit lives in the church, guides, illuminates, defends it. The gates of hell shall not prevail. Some members of the English Parliament suggest that no Priest belonging to the E. C. U. shall receive an appointment to any parish, but the work is of GOD and these, if they persist, will be found to be fighting againt God.

Parish of St. Clement.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

Friday, May 12th, is the anniversary of the Laying of the Corner Stone in 1856.

A small picture of Christus by Gabriel Max has been given for the Crypt Chapel.

A small picture, Our Lord on the Cross, has been given and hung in the lower vestry.

A fair linen cloth, beautifully embroidered, has been given for the Altar of Our Lady.

The outside door of Crypt Chapel is closed on week days after Evensong and is not open on Sunday.

A parishioner has given a five gallon can of oil for the lamp in the Crypt Chapel, also wax candles for the Altar.

A white silk mat beautifully painted has been given in memory of Sister Georgina for the missal stand of St. Katherine's Altar.

The new Epiphany Chapel at 16th and Summer Sts. is approaching completion. The old building at 23d and Cherry Sts. is for sale.

465 communions were made on Easter and 437 cards have been sent in. $1,588.99 was received for all purposes at the various services.

The organ was played each afternoon during Lent at Evensong through the kindness of Mr. Goodwin and Mr. John Adelhelm, a pupil of his.

Wednesday, April 12th, was the anniversary of the consecration of St. Clements in 1865. The Masses were all said at the High Altar.

The Third Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital and Colony Farm at Oakbourne, Chester Co., has been received.

A small silver gilt Chalice and Paten has been given in memory of John Neill. It is for use in the Crypt Chapel. It was used at a Requiem for the repose of his soul on April 10th.

The building of the Mission of St. John the Divine, 22d St. and Lehigh Ave., has been sold to the Municipal Hospital, and a new mission was opened on Low Sunday at 2625 Lehigh Ave.

A Bishop who kindly permits the Magazine to be sent to him each month, has personally expressed his approbation of the articles published, while kind words have come to us from many friends in regard to various articles.

The white silk cope made by the Altar Guild for St. John's Church, Toledo, Ohio, was sent off in time for Easter. The Rector and Wardens have acknowledged the gift, and word comes that the people were much delighted with this handsome vestment.

A very handsome Paschal Candlestick of brass, after pattern of other altar ornaments and made by R. G. Ledig, of Philadelphia, has been given in memory of a communicant. The Paschal Candle was again painted as a loving Easter offering by a parishioner.

Holy Week.

Palm Sunday was kept with the usual ceremonies, the new set of violet vestments was used for the first time. The members of the Altar Guild had worked very hard to finish them in time. The design on the orphreys of the Chasuble is a vine with thorns on the shields with the various instruments of the Passion, an Ecce Homo embroidered in the All Saints work room, Baltimore, is at the intersection of the arms of the cross. The folded chasubles are plain with silk orphreys, the stoles and maniples have a similar design to the chasuble with five Jerusalem crosses at the end, the Deacons wide stole has five larger Jerusalem crosses at the ends. Nine pieces of the set are finished. At night F. Sargent preached. The attendance at the Masses and instructions during the week was very good. Maundy Thursday the Solemn Mass was at 9 o'clock; during the afternoon many made a visit of devotion to the Crypt Chapel. Good Friday the Altar Service at 11 o'clock was followed by the Reproaches which were sung very impressively by Mr. Kneedler as Cantor and the Choir. F. Longridge kindly came down from Boston to preach the Passion. The general subject was "The Outstretched Hands." A crowded church during the whole service testified to the spiritual power of the addresses.

Easter.

Easter Day was a very joyous day for us at St. Clements, 465 Communions were made at the early Masses, not as a matter of form, but thoroughly prepared for by self examination, confession and absolution. The various altars were beautifully adorned with flowers. The choir under Mr. W. A. Goodwin sang H. W. Parker's Mass at eleven o'clock; the church was crowded with people, some standing throughout the service. At night the church was again crowded, the music was well sung, the procession ended, a solemn Te Deum was sung. The one sad incident of a very happy day was the sudden illness of Mr. Goodwin later in the evening. Although convalescing, he has not been able to resume his duties. Mr. Lawrence Gaff, whom we lovingly remember, has played the organ.

Rogation Intercessions.

Continued intercessions will be kept up on the Rogation Days beginning with the Mass on Monday May 8th, and lasting until 6 A. M. on Ascension Day. It is hoped that every member of the congregation will share this privilege by promising to make the intercessions at a definite time. Members of the Guild of St. Vincent always undertake the night hours.

(Signed) JOHN DOUGLASS BROWN, JR.,
Treasurer.

December 31st, 1898.

The collections on Ascension Day will be for the Seashore Home. Each person is asked to be generous. It will be seen that a permanent fund has been established looking to the purchase of a property. $50 more has been received for this making $550 in hand.

The Sisters' House.

The response from those who have promised or paid their subscriptions for this house has been both encouraging and generous. It is necessary to wait until we know how much we can depend on before we make any plans. Up to the present time there has been received from 53 individuals $2,415.95. This is in bank. $750 more is promised or available. It would seem as if this was a purpose for which appeal might justly be made outside the parish. The religious life is not for the benefit of any particular parish, but is the power and glory of the church. It is too much like the earthly existence of our Saviour ever to be popular, its blessing is that it does not awaken the enthusiasm of the careless and worldly. All the more should it appeal to the sympathy and generosity of those who worship the poor and humble Jesus.

"Not Till Next Year."

When the time for confirmation arrives in a parish and the candidates, especially among the children, are being gathered, objections like the above are often made without careful enough consideration of what is involved.

"No, I think John had better wait till next year." "No, Mary doesn't know enough." "I want William to understand what he is doing and to choose for himself."

As such words frequently sound the death-knell to the spiritual life of children's souls let us consider more closely and point out their error and inconsistency for the sake of Him who said "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not."

Almost all the parents that glibly say "he doesn't know enough," grossly neglecting their duty of teaching the truths of religion to their child, have never taken the trouble even to find out what he does or does not know. It is mostly assumed that if the child has not graduated into the public high-school it cannot possibly know enough for being confirmed.

The prayer-book is much less extensive in its requirements. It says "so soon as he can say the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments and is sufficiently instructed in the other parts of the Church Catechism set forth for that purpose." Our Lord commanded His gospel to be preached to the poor. Some christians would require that they have a common school education.

Secondly, parents forget the church's words "so soon as," which sound very differently from "I want her to wait till she is fourteen." The sponsor at least of a child were bound in its baptism to bring it to confirmation "so soon as," etc., but their promises to God most of them never attempt to keep.

Father and mother, are your boys and girls old enough to sin? Then they are old enough to be confirmed, i. e., to be strengthened againt sin. Or if they have never wilfully sinned by all means make sure of their continuing in the love of Jesus Christ by the help of confirmation grace. "The devil as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour."

Jesus Christ, the most holy Lamb of God, was tempted and your child will not escape. Are you ready to take the responsibility of saying, he or she meet the devil without the weapons that Christ died to give them? Are you such an unnatural creature that you say, in reality, I will help the devil destroy my child's soul by taking away the help of God's grace. "Take heed that ye offend not one of these little ones." Read S. Matt. XVIII.

But some say, I fear the child will find the added duties and responsibilities of a communicant too much for it and after a while it may fall away. Yes, your child may not persevere but it will have more chance of doing so with the added grace even with added duties.

No one can begin to serve the good God too early. There is no chance for a baptized christian, no matter how young, to lead a careless life. The vows of baptism bind as quickly as a child has them presented to the grasp of its mind; they do not hover around like vultures which can only seize their prey at confirmation when public acceptance of the covenant with God is made. The service of Jesus Christ is not an unbearable tyrany which we should keep out of till the last minute. "They that seek Me early shall find Me."

Some one will still say "but the child will not fully understand what it is doing in receiving confirmation." Do you fully understand what you do when you receive the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ at the altar? If so the angels will gladly sit at your feet and listen.

Even a child can learn and believe what many adults have forgotten that Holy Confirmation is the sacrament which strengthens the divine life in a baptized person and confers upon him the sevenfold gift of the Holy Ghost.

When you see your child's implicit confidence in your word and authority how can you doubt that it will with a faith that puts yours to the blush accept the greater witness and authority of the Heavenly Father? That is the chief requirement for confirmation—faith in what God has revealed.

One last objection we may dismiss briefly — the desire to let the child grow up and decide for himself. Decide what? Whether he will belong to God or the devil? There is no choice there.

Decide what church he will belong to? But there is only one God and one church.

Decide whether it wants the sacrament of confirmation? God had decided that.

You direct the child by the light of your experience in all other lines of life work, food, medicine, education and you must also decide for it in religion. You made a greater decision for it when you had it baptised. Indeed you promised the further completion of the choice begun in baptism "so soon as" "it was sufficiently instructed." But now you perjure yourself and revoke your promise.

See then how terrible a responsibility parents lay on their shoulders when they hold children back from confirmation. The early church (as the present Greek Church) confirmed children when infants, showing that the grace given is not dependent on the amount of knowledge possessed and that danger does not lie on the side of receiving the sacrament too soon.

Better lighten your own burden of accountability by shifting some of it onto the clergy under whose closer care the confirmed child comes, rather than increase it by disregarding their conscientious decision.

What small love you have for the Blessed Sacrament of the altar that you are not eager for your child to receive Jesus at the earliest possible moment, the privilege which depends on Confirmation. The devil will not necessarily wait till next year although he advises you to, and what will you say to Jesus then if in place of the pure innocent life of your child that you might consecrate to Him now you give Him next year the same soul blotted and stained, with the bloom of its innocence gone and the robe of its purity defiled?

And what if "next year" never comes and the lost soul of your child curses you forever in hell because you held back the grace that would have just helped it through the struggle with temptations?

What if through the wrong decision you are making now you could not in the Day of Judgment answer the questions of God and say "behold I and the children that thou gavest me."

Confirmation.

"After children are born into the world they must grow and increase in strength, if they are to become capable men and women. So after having in baptism received our second birth and become God's children, we need grace and an increase of spiritual strength to make us perfect and complete, for the growth in grace of our own souls, and for the active service of God in the world. This increase of spiritual strength is given to us in confirmation, when by the laying on of the Bishop's hands, with prayer, we receive the plenitude or fulness of the Holy Ghost and are strengthened with His sevenfold gifts. The first time Confirmation is mentioned in the Bible is in Acts viii, 14–16. There we are told that the Apostles did two things for those who had been baptized. 'They prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost.' 'Then laid they their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost.' The Bishops do the same now when they come to administer confirmation. They pray for the children that they may receive the Holy Ghost. Then they lay their hands upon them and we believe that they receive the Holy Ghost.

The sevenfold gifts of the Holy Ghost are given us (not to make us christians, for the Holy Ghost has been already given to us to make us christians at our baptism), but to perfect our understanding that we may increase in the knowledge of God, His truth, His works, His ways, and to strengthen our will that we may not only believe in God, but fear Him and love Him more and more; and so may be strengthened to resist the assaults of the world, the flesh and the devil."

How to Prepare.

"In preparing for confirmation the Church orders us to learn the Catechism. This we must diligently do. But we must be careful not only to know it by heart but to understand its full meaning, and above all, to act upon it. In other words, we must prepare not only our intellect and understanding, but our heart and will. Thus when we learn at the beginning of the Catechism about the blessings of our Baptism, we must resolve to cherish those blessings. When we learn about our baptismal vows we must repent earnestly about our breaches of them in time past and resolve to keep them better in the future. We must labour to understand all the mysteries of the Faith taught us in the Creed and to see that we outwardly act upon our inward belief. We must examine ourselves diligently on the commandments of God, and repent of all our sins against them. We must try all we can to understand the two great ways in which we obtain God's grace—Prayer and Sacraments, and resolve to make our prayers thenceforth what they really should be, and diligently to use all the means of grace that God provides for us in the Sacraments of His Church. Thus our learning the Catechism will go hand in hand with our giving ourselves to God. From the very beginning of our preparation we shall try to make our daily prayers more earnest and to conquer our besetting sins. We shall diligently use the prayers in preparation for confirmation and above all, we shall endeavour by a thorough repentance to obtain God's forgiveness for the past, in order that, when on the day of our confirmation the Holy Spirit comes to us, He may find in us a temple fitted for Himself."

My Dear Mr. Field:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP

The Sister's House.

One person in sending a subscription writes as follows: "I hope it will aid in building them a palace, because they are sure of a mansion in the skies is no reason why they should not have a foretaste of the splendour to come." We do not expect a palace but we would wish that sufficient money might come to warrant us in obtaining some suitable house. We hope that every parishioner will give a subscription.

Mater Dolorosa.

A copy of this painting by Rudolf Bacher (Vienna), the original was loaned by his Majesty the Emperor of Austria to the Chicago World's Fair, has been given for an altar piece of the Crypt Chapel. It was in place for Whit Sunday. It is the work and gift of a communicant of the parish. The picture is very devotional and the subject most appropriate in its suggestion of the purpose and dedication of the chapel.

Catholics are not "innovators," because the church was not created in the XVI century. They plead "custom"; all others cannot plead "custom," for modern usages are mostly innovations, and it is the old customs that we are following.

The Sea-Shore Home.

The same house has been rented for this year at Point Pleasant, N. J., and will be ready to receive visitors on June 26.

Application for admission must be made to the Sister in charge, 2034 Cherry Street, on Tuesday afternoons in June, from 3 to 5 o'clock.

Subscriptions and donations of money may be sent to the Treasurer, Mr. John Douglass Brown, Jr., 517 Drexel Building, or to the Sister in charge.

The special needs are small plates, dessert saucers, knives, forks and teaspoons, bed linen, table cloths, straw hats, baby carriages and hammocks.

A fair for the benefit of the Home was held on Tuesday, April 25, under the charge of Miss Julia Neill and Miss Sarah Brock, at the residence of Mrs. Arthur Brock, 128 S. 22d street, and netted $127.62.

A donation day for the Home has been appointed Monday, June 5, on which all who are interested are asked to send sugar, tea, coffee, canned fruit and vegetables, corn starch, farina, prunes, dried fruits, flour, crackers, soap and household utensils, to the Mission House, 2036 Cherry street, any time during the day. The permanent invested fund to buy or build a house amounts to $550.

Vespers will be sung on the eve of Corpus Christi, May 31, at 5.15 p. m. 62 names are now on roll of St. Saviour's ward. The annual dues of members are payable on June 1st.

Handbook of the Holy Eucharist.

The Rev. F. E. Mortimer surely deserves our gratitude for printing this plain statement of the Holy Sacrament under its three-fold aspect—Sacrament, Sacrifice and Communion. It cannot fail to be useful to many who desire to have the doctrine in a clear and practical way.

Parish Notes.

There will be no address at 9.15 Mass on Sunday during the summer.

We desire to acknowledge with thanks a number of copies of old magazines.

Mr. Goodwin was able to resume his duties with the choir on Sunday, April 30th.

Our thanks are due to those who have so kindly donated flowers for the Church garden.

A new set of Altar Cards is being made for St. Katharine's Altar, the two smaller ones are already finished.

The outside door of the Crypt Chapel is locked at five o'clock on week days and is not open on Sundays.

During the summer, the Church will be closed after Evensong on week days, except on Thursday and Saturday.

The First Communion of those to be Confirmed on Monday May 29th will be on Sunday June 4th at seven o'clock.

Work on the new Church of St. John Chrysostom, 28th street and Susquehanna Ave., it is hoped may begin about June 1st.

As a result of the recent agitations in England against Confession and the Mass more people made their Confession and Communion at Easter than usual in the various parishes.

An interesting event of the month has been the sitting of the Archbishops, of Canterbury and York, to hear arguments as to the use of incense. It may be a long while before they give their decision.

The Bishop of Salisbury announces that he will hereafter hold his ordinations at nine o'clock in the morning. Easy going Bishops do not realize how much of a strain it is for candidates to fast until perhaps two o'clock in the afternoon. We hope the Bishop of Pennsylvania may follow the example, the earlier hour can make no difference to those who do not follow the old custom and is merciful to those who do.

Ascension Day and Rogationtide.

The intercessions were kept up as usual during the three Rogation days and nights, a good many people faithfully taking part. We would wish that many more might realize the privilege and do their share.

The Masses on Ascension Day were well attended, the solemn Mass was at seven o'clock, after which the members of the choir and the acolytes had breakfast in the upper school room. Later the choir boys started in spite of the rain for their outing, they went down the Delaware to Wilmington and had a pleasant time.

The Diocesan Convention.

A reasonable consideration on the part of a few people would enable the really important business to be finished within two days, the few who speak on every subject just to declare themselves might well be more severely dealt with than they are. The Bishop referred to our dear friend John Neill, of St. Clement's, in his address and gave some practical hints as to preparation for the Sacrament of Confirmation especially advising that the clergy should make use of the time by getting to know those who are under instruction—this can only be satisfactorily accomplished, we would suggest by their making their confessions. Sin is the deepest element of life, and until you know a person's sinful history you do not know them—only the outside. The Bishop made a reference to the work of the Deaconness House of the Diocese, but we believe so far has never at any time referred to the Sister's work in the Diocese, although two or three parishes alone provide the support for these communities, yet their work is not confined to these, but members of other congregations do not hesitate to call upon them for advice, suggestion and sympathy. The report of St. Clement's Parish would have been much more complete if these members of the congregation who give to different charitable works, had informed the clergy. We have noted during the year from various reports sent to us a very large sum of money given by our people—in the acknowledgments of one month in one institution over $250 came from St. Clement's people.

The Managers of the Board of Missions appointed one of their number to address the Convention on the subject of missions, which he readily did in a very extraordinary fashion, he proceeded to make a violent attack on some of those who did not give, revealing the causes of such failure, the address was so discourteous that no one cared to speak enthusiastically for it, the Bishop in reply to a question was not willing to say that the speaker represented the Board of Managers in the sentiments he expressed.

The New York Episode.

The past month has witnessed one of the saddest sights in the history of the Church in the Diocese of New York when a man was rushed into the Priesthood, who seems to ordinary persons not to reverence that for which the Church of the Living God exists. New York under old Bishop Potter stood for the old Faith, but it can no longer claim that proud distinction. The opposition to the ordination was brave and dignified but of no avail, our good friend Dr. Clendenin, whose Chuch was selected for the event, protested: The Bishop of New York by his action has only called the attention of the secular press to the fact of the failure of the Church to make its influence felt in society, for Church people meet, greet and welcome those who have broken even the most sacred laws of the Church, and who glory in the fact.

Reservation of Blessed Sacrament.

768 physicians have signed a petition which has been presented to the Convocations of Canterbury, and York, urging the necessity of this ancient and laudable custom of the Church. "There are many exceptional cases in which the office for the communion of the sick, provided in the Prayer Book is too long and its use detrimental, and occasionally dangerous to the sick person."

"Such exceptional cases are (1) acute disease; (2), long-standing wasting diseases, such as the later stages of consumption and cancer; (3); infectious diseases, where the priest and others are unnecessarily exposed to infection and liable to spread it; (4), cases of sudden emergency; in which there is no time to consecrate the elements; (5), where there is no convenient place in which the Sacrament can be reverently celebrated.

"As professional men they think that the Sacrament should be administered in the way which is easiest to the sick and dying, and that in the cases mentioned the custom of taking the Sacrament to the sick ought to be especially permitted as in former times, to the end that those very real difficulties and dangers may, as far as possible, be avoided.

"Your petitioners therefore pray that your Right Reverend House will take such steps as in your wisdom may seem best to secure the effective administration of the Holy Communion to the sick and dying in the urgent cases mentioned."

The Sacrament Light.

Oh, happy light, whose shining
Guides us to Jesus' throne!
How many a heart is pining
To make Thy lot its own.

To live within His Presence,
To spend one'self for Him;
With joy to furnish guidance
For other's eyes grown dim.

Like Bethlehem's star thou standest
Above where Jesus lies;
Yet like God's Sword defendest
The gate of Paradise.

Now, Eye of God, thou seemest
To search the sinful soul;
Then, Jesus' heart, Thou beamest
To cleanse and make us whole.

On high thy Sign of warning
His Second Advent tells;
Yet like His Spirit's yearning
Thy fluttering radiance swells.

Oh, blessed lamp, like Mary,
The Lord is e'er with you!
Guide me with steps unweary
To gain His blessing too.

"Extremists."

We remember the story of a nobleman who had for a companion a very intelligent dog. One day as he was riding along the road the animal began to act strangely, pulling at the horse's tail and jumping up to catch the bridle to turn him round, all the while barking violently. A not overwise attendant said the dog was mad and his master shot him. But the poor beast dragged himself back along the road and lay down to die beside a bag of gold the nobleman had dropped, whose bitter reflection on his hasty cruelty may be well imagined.

There seem to be certain persons in the Church who delight in heaping invidious titles on their brethren. We wish we could believe it was done through hasty judgment or because they failed to grasp what their brethren were trying to do.

But we often fear their only motive is destruction and that they are utterly careless of the methods employed. They know that to call a dog mad is practically to finish him even at the hands of his own master and they seem to hope that by calling Catholics "rebels, ritualists and extremists," will accomplish a result which all their more honorable methods of attack have entirely failed to rescue and this at the hands of those who should sympathize with them.

But what is the truth of the case? Why should Catholics be called "extremists"?

Does the title imply that they alone simply follow dogmatic principles to their legitimate end? No, for only mentally ill-balanced people could object to that.

The hidden venom of the title then must consist in the assumption that Catholics stretch their principles too far in one direction, viz.: that they conform themselves too closely to the Church of Rome.

Leaving this insinuation to fall of its own weight for argument to disprove it has proven practically useless, we would modestly disdain any ability on our part to stretch the limits of the Church one quarter of the distance that certain others have done with whom we insist on at least sharing the title. The only thing we can blame ourselves for is that our feeble efforts have drawn attention away from so much greater performances.

We confess to a desire to fulfil our Blessed Lord's prayer that all branches of His Catholic Church "may be one," but we have not hesitated to rebuke our sister-communions wherein we have held them to be wrong.

We have not attended World's Fair Congresses and lowered the revelation of Jesus Christ to a level with Brahamism, even if the Roman Church did. We have not been present at the two hundredth anniversary of the Church of the Assumption and congratulated our Roman brethren because they have been responsible for divisions in the Christian fold.

We have not subscribed funds for the Young Men's Catholic Club nor delivered addresses before the Sodality of the Sacred Heart nor sent greetings to the Eucharistic Congress however much we may have approved their general principles.

Yet change the names of these Roman Catholic organizations to Y. M. C. A., Christian Endeavor, etc., of a distinctly Protestant character you will find our "extreme" brethren delighted with the closest affiliation to them. No matter that these bodies are sworn enemies of the Catholic Church, no matter that the agreement in belief is so small as to be hardly apparent, star boundaries must be broken, not simply stretched, to give these so-called terms recognition. Men who make no acceptance of the doctrine of the Real Presence and wh m Jesus let depart are greeted with as much favor as the faithful disciples of Christ, those who reglect to hear the visible historic Church are to be welcomed as boon companions.

Truly according to these men "the faith once delivered to the saints" is made of no higher authority than the opinions of men, the Word of God is handed over to be interpreted by the vagaries of the human mind and such a momentous truth as the Divinity of our Saviour is allowed to be thought an open question.

As between those who seek to minimize unimportant differences between the different portions of the Catholic Church while loyally holding to "the doctrine and discipline of Christ as this church hath received the same," and those who are willing to minimize the Faith itself because it does not please men and thus leave no bond of union but mere unstable sentiment the choice ought not to be hard to make. Nor can we think but that with the continued growth of the Church and careful teaching the latter will find themselves in undisputed possession of the title "extremists."

The Work of the Holy Spirit.

The Christian, not in name but reality, finds great attraction in that side of the Saviour's mission to which we commonly apply the term, His hidden life.

The virtues of which as it were only a glimpse is given; conflicts at which we can only guess; power that the world derided because it could not understand—all these have a strong and helpful fascination for the devout soul.

Yet the wonder is that there has been lacking in the Church the same persistent contemplation of the hidden life of the Holy Spirit, so much the more hidden because lacking the manifestation which even Jesus had by reason of the Incarnation.

Oh vast humility of the adorable Paraclete, true God of God, to spend Himself for men all down the ages and yet receive so little thought or gratitude from them. To have His very existence doubted and His gifts atrociously abused, but like the gentle Jesus whose Spirit He is, never has He abandoned men nor withdrawn His treasury of graces from the earth.

O soul tremendous, known only by thy impetuous rush from Heaven on Pentecost. O mighty wrestler with sin, deigning like Jesus in each Christian soul to fight the devil by the flesh he conquered once. To offer Thy holy Self like Jesus innumerable times to Satan's detestable assaults. O incomparable Dweller in the Father's Bosom who yet like the Saviour maketh thy abode in the frail creatures of earth.

O Ruler of the hearts of all Who nevertheless submitted Thy power in a large measure to the control of men's wills who shall declare thy glories fittingly to an unheeding world!

There is abundant fruit for meditation of great profit to any who will dwell on the humility, love, compassion, obedience and patience of the Holy Ghost toward his own soul. Virtues so hidden that in spite of their power and greatness we scarcely ever recognize their existence, much less dwell upon them as they deserve.

My Dear Mr. Field:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP

The Sea-Shore Home.

The house at Point Pleasant will be open to receive visitors on Monday, July 3d.

A strawberry festival for the benefit of the work was held on Thursday, June 8th, in the upper school room and netted $45.00.

We wish that every one would be interested enough in this work to help in its support. It ought to appeal to every one, and if all Christian people would only realize the privilege and blessing of giving there would be no difficulty. Selfish sentiment too often rules the manner of giving where duty ought to be the test. The management of the house and the control of those staying in it is far from being a holiday task, but year after year the Sisters and their helpers have cheerfully submitted to the discomforts and inconveniences for the sake of the advantages to others.

The Clergy of the Associate Mission, Trenton, have kindly offered as in former years to say a Mass at the house on each week day, and Mr. Greenfield has offered lodging and the Leighton House board for the Priest who undertakes the duty.

Subscriptions and donations may be sent to Mr. John Douglass Brown, Jr., Treasurer, or to the Sister in charge 2034 Cherry Street.

Lord Halifax's Speech.

The annual meeting of the E. C. U. must have been an inspiring occasion, and the President's speech, which was read in his absence, worthy of the occasion.

He asks some very pointed questions and calls attention to some fundamental principles.

He suggests it would be more in accord with primitive usage for a Bishop to issue a pastoral ordering Reservation for the sick and dying than to announce his approaching second marriage.

He suggests that we ought rather affirm our belief in the Catholic Church than in the Anglican Communion. He exposes the dishonesty of the assertion of Mr. Kensit and his helpers in saying that the movement is only against a few extreme men by quoting from a speech in the House of Commons, which says "this evil is one of some 60 years standing, it dates from the early days of Dr. Newman and Dr. Pusey, it has its origin in the early days of the Oxford movement. It is the Oxford movement which must be swept away and eradicated." Our movement is to establish the dominant supremacy of Catholic doctrine and customs, it does not a bit matter what any pious individual of the XVI century intended or thought if it was not in accord with the Catholic Church. Our aim is to assert the continuous life of the church, we alone are true to the church, our doctrines of the Mass and Confession and Reservation are no new things, they are our inheritance. If the use of Incense or other usage is not according to the spirit of our formularies we claim that these things are not wrong, but Divine sanction. So we must work to abrogate whatever may hinder their use.

The whole crisis is manufactured by the Puritan spirit and festered by some Christo-pagans. Meanwhile we just keep on as those upon whose labours we have entered.

The Catechism.

The older and younger branches of the Catechism held their closing session in Church on Trinity Sunday, May 28th. Besides the usual exercises there was the distribution of prizes won by the members of the older Catechism since Christmas.

Charles McCloskey received a silver crucifix for passing a perfect written examination on the last half year's work. Virginia Finney and Theresa Mullen also received prizes for the like excellent record.

For diligences handed in Charles McCloskey obtained first prize again with 18; Olga Irvine, 15; Albert Cuff, 15; Wood Tallman, 11; Andrew Foote, 8; Modjeska Foote, 6; and Harry Hosfeld, 6, were presented with religious books and pictures as rewards.

Fourteen children had done sufficiently good work in the game of good marks to deserve prizes, among whom Charles McCloskey was in the lead with 10 tickets and his third prize. Theresa Mullen, 6; Wood Tallman, 6; Theo. Homan, 6; and Jennie Johnson, 5, received awards in the order named.

The meetings of the Catechism are discontinued until September when we hope to see teachers and scholars promptly in their places for another good year's work.

Submission.

There is a minority. This might seem a ludicrous platitude wandering in space if we did not go on to say that at last the world has evidence to prove that there is a minority existing, yes, living and growing, in the Roman Catholic Church to-day.

Before, it has always been contended that there was only a majority within its pale, a vast, inclusive, unanimous, homogeneous majority. We have often suspected that the inclusiveness was of the wolf-and-lamb order but now the lamb has escaped its pursuer and climbed up on a protecting roof, with its fleece rumpled but its lungs in good order and is unfortunately letting everybody know about the wolf gnashing his teeth down below.

The meaning of this fable if it needs explanation is that we have been getting some words of criticism on Roman Catholic methods from members of that communion in plainer words than we usually are allowed to hear.

Hon. William Gibson, in an article written for the May number of the Nineteenth Century, entitled "An Outburst of Activity in the Roman Congregations," takes up the cudgels for Cardinal Gibbons. To our mind he hits a good many things besides air before he puts them down.

He is an evident champion of "liberalism"—we would have said "Americanisn" but he is Irish and Cardinal Gibbons has refused the title.

The whole article bristles with sarcasm and shows a woeful lack of "submission" for he says in so many words that the authorities in his church may bind and throttle modern methods and results of knowledge as they will but he and those with him intend to go on solving live problems in their own way if the Church will not help them until, as in the case of Galileo, the Church has at last to swing round to their way.

The article is suggestive from beginning to end because of its keen criticism. Methods of ecclesiastical education, the condemnation of Professor Schell and the policy of the Jesuits all come in for fearless and plain-spoken treatment.

Encyclicals issued by Jesuit supremacy he evidently does not accept as infallible, simply because signed by the Pope. Thus any workable theory of Papal infallibitity goes glimmering even among its nominal adherents.

Again, as noted in the English Church Times of June 9th, Mr. Richard Bagot, an English Roman Catholic, has contributed to the "Nuova Autologia" an article on the progress of Roman Catholicism in England. In the face of Cardinal Vaughan's roseate figures he denies that there is any progress at all, that Romanists are losing ground, that Anglo-Catholicism furnishes an insurmountable resistance and gives as his conclusion that England will never again come under the spiritual rule of the Pope.

His figures are based on the marriage-returns of the Registrar-General, much more secure than most sources of statistics when we consider the extreme strictness of the conditions of marriage among Roman Catholics.

This is far from the old submission we were used to. Here is a layman telling his superiors from the Pope down that they are mistaken in their expectations, plans and figures regarding the conversion of the English people to the acceptance of the Papal claims. He does not hesitate to say that the preponderance of politics and scheming over piety and devotion in the Roman Church is a great obstacle when compared with the self-sacrificing religion Anglicans present.

Still again, the secular press brings us news of another act of "submission," for it says the present pope is about to appoint six or seven new Cardinals. It seems that when Pope Leo was so ill last winter that thoughts of a successor were rife, a certain element of the College of Cardinals banded themselves together and won over their French and Austrian brethren to agree to a candidate whose purpose should be to counteract the work the present pontiff has done.

Unfortunately for them their plan got out and now Pope Leo is taking measures as has been said "to succeed himself," i. e., to insure a continuation of his policy by making sure of his successor.

Will "submission" then become as illusory a term as "Papal Infallibility" or "Americanism"? Or shall we live to see Mr. Gibson's prophecy fulfilled of the present vigorous minority turned into a triumphant infallible (?) majority?

Holy Communion.

What is the Blessed Sacrament? It is the Body and Blood of Christ "under the form of Bread and Wine." Our Lord Himself said, "This is My Body; this is My Blood." What the early Christians understood by this we know from Justin Martyr, who wrote about forty years after St. John's death. He says, "We do not receive It as common bread or as common drink, but . . . have been taught that the food over which thanksgiving has been made by the prayer of the word which is from Him . . . is the Flesh and Blood of JESUS, Who was made Flesh."

After the prayer of Consecration, therefore, in the Communion service, what is present on the Altar is the Body and Blood of Christ, and this presence of Christ's Body and Blood involves the presence of Himself. We see this in the way Our Lord uses interchangeably the two expressions, "eateth My Flesh and drinketh My Blood," and "eateth Me" (S. John vi, 56, 57). "My Flesh and Blood" and "Me" are here seen to be equivalent expressions, both meaning the same thing.

This is, and always has been, the belief of the Catholic Church. It is called the doctrine of the "Real Presence," and is plainly taught in the Prayer Book. (Ch. Catechism.)

This brings us to the supreme duty which this great truth of the Real Presence lays upon us—the duty of the most dil gent preparation before we approach to receive the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. When we know what this great Gift is, we feel that we must make absolutely certain that we are in no danger of receiving It unworthily.

1. We must prepare our souls. If we are to receive worthily our souls must be in a state of grace; i. e., they must be free from mortal sin. For a soul guilty of mortal sin is not in a state of grace, but is in a state of spiritual death, and cannot worthily draw near to receive the great Sacrament of Life. Our souls must, therefore, before Communion be raised to life again; i. e., they must be purified from mortal sin in the Precious Blood of Christ. . . . It may, however, be well to remark that if we really are in earnest about our preparation, if we feel more and more the "dignity of that Holy Mystery (the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ), Who it is that comes to us there, and how great is His love in coming, and how utterly unworthy we are to receive Him—then we shall not ask merely, 'What need I do that I may save my soul?' but 'what more can I do to become less unworthy of His Presence, to get cleared away yet more the sins which He hates, and so to show my love for Him Who died for me.'—Jervois' Christian's Manual.

My Dear Mr. Field:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP

The Sea-Shore Home.

Two parties have gone down to Point Pleasant during the month and enjoyed themselves very much as well as received benefit from the change and sea air. The Sister in charge says that they have all been very good. The house is not large, the amount of money is limited and some other things also have to be taken into consideration so that it is not possible to take all who want to go. Mass is said each weekday in the chapel. Money is needed to close the season without debt. It seems rather strange that so many people of this congregation do not give for the support of the house, many a less worthy object would awaken their enthusiasm and stir their interest but because they know of this they are willing to leave the support to others. Alms-giving in any shape or form is not a popular devotion. The house will hold about 50 people and has been full.

Fault Finding.

This is the habit of those who have the least right to make use of it, of those who deserve usually to suffer from it. In parish affairs it is the delight of those who don't care, who never deny themselves to give of their money or time, or only do so when they are interested in the work or can have their own way. It has various symptoms, expressions and results, but it is fatal to the individual afflicted. After a while they imagine they have some grievance, to the person attacked for it always creates an incurable condition that discourages healthy effort, and to all who are brought in contact with it, because they are more or less poisoned and think there must be some reality in the statements. Usually the only foundation is a peevish selfish unreasonable nature and disposition.

In a parish each member has an idea how everything ought to be done, who ought to do it, and particularly the amount of attention that custom, courtesy or duty requires shall be shown to them. If this standard is not complied with the trouble begins.

It almost seems evident that if any sane person should try to realize the amount of work that has to be done and arranged for in connection with the services, guilds, the sick, the poor, the friendless, the desolate, care of the buildings, finances, appointments, etc., that there would be less fault found and more help given.

Don't find fault because you can't have your own way, or because some one else has the management of something that you want, or because you think you deserve more consideration or are more neglected than somebody else.

It is a symptom of that serious malady "the sorrow of the world" and it "worketh death."

Incense.

A certain eloquent prelate was preaching on the Ark of God, and seemed to think that censers and such things were only adapted to the child life of religion and ought with other childish playthings to be relegated to a corner of the garret. One of the Clergy remarked after the service that we would have to revise the sentences at the daily offices. It seems strange how some people dislike incense; is it because God commanded it in the Jewish worship and the Holy Ghost says it is part of the Heavenly adoration? Our Prayer Book commits us to its use morning and night.

Parish Notes.

Hours for Confession are changed during August.

A number of the Acolytes spent the 4th of July at Point Pleasant.

Rev. E. Wright spent some days at the Clergy House during the month.

The 9.15 Mass has been said without music during July, and this will continue until September.

The Rev. C. C. Quin will be away during August. The latter part of the month he will take the week day duty at Point Pleasant.

Edward Griffiths has resigned his position as sexton after three years of satisfactory service. Clinton Searle has been appointed to the position.

Friday, July 21st, was the anniversary of the death of Mother Frances Helen of All Saints. A Requiem Mass was said in the Sisters' Chapel.

Mr. Goodwin and the boys of the choir had a pic-nic on July 6th on the grounds of Burlington College, Burlington, N. J., and had a very happy day.

Rev. H. Parrish has begun the issue of a small paper in connection with his work in San Francisco. It tells us among other things of a crusade of prayer for paying the debt.

The carpets under the seats have been taken up. A good deal of patching will be needed to put them on the floor again. A bare floor stained and varnished would be cleaner.

The choir will be away during all the month of August. Hymns will be sung at the eleven o'clock Mass and at eight o'clock a Metrical Litany will be sung followed by a sermon and hymns.

The amount of money also as well as the attendance at the Sunday services has not been what it ought to be. It will be remembered that the wet weather during the winter caused a decrease in amount of collections and this prevents our making any repairs of advantage during the summer.

Fond Du Lac.

The Bishop of Fond Du Lac in his convention address we quote from an exchange rules as ordinary that "the Eucharistic Vestments, mixed chalice, wafer bread, eastward position, lights on the altar or borne in procession and incense are the allowed usage of the Diocese of Fond Du Lac. It is also our ruling that the Blessed Sacrament may be reserved for the sick—wherever, also, your people wish the anointing prescribed by St. James you know that the oil is consecrated yearly by us, none need be without that authorized means of obtaining God's blessing or the means used for the body's recovery or the comforting grace it brings to the Soul."

The number of promises for this purpose increases much more slowly than we would wish and than the object deserves. There are very few but could manage to give something; only 100 have given and promises from perhaps 25 others. The executor of Miss Robins estate has paid over the legacy under her will, and the Mother Superior kindly permits it to be used for this purpose. Twenty-one years of faithful and unremitting service in this city ought to entitle these Sisters to a house in which their work may be carried on and the life of the Evangelical counsels bears its witness to the glory of the All Holy One. Religion is at a disadvantage because our laws give lack of all religion an advantage as also unsectarian religion which is much the same thing, and many christian people to their shame support such schemes, leaving that which is established to further maintain what they profess to believe in to get along as best it can, and they fancy they are liberal, not bigoted. It is somewhat of a surprise to miss the names of many who owe life and what is more important than life to the self-denying devotion of the Sisters of the Poor. Anyone who knows the history of these years knows that not only has life been given for the needs of this great city, but health and never failing sympathy. The appeal has not been made to add to the importance of the community but to further their work for God and His poor.

Missionary Effort.

It is encouraging to learn from many different places the earnest efforts of St. Clement's people to make known the Catholic truth to those who through ignorance, error, prejudice or indifference have not known it. Controversial argument is vain, patient explanation however bears encouraging fruit. It will be remembered that in early days the disciples who were scattered abroad because of the persecution carried the message of the gospel everywhere and many were brought to the faith, it is no different now; it has been the experience of the true St. Clement's man or woman, they have often witnessed to the truth and so turned others to God and His religion. Many are indifferent; they always have been; perhaps they will never change; they move with the mob, or they selfishly consider only themselves; they groan over the present, they dread the outlook. God's faithful ones go forward cheerfully; the cause is God's, the work is theirs.

Interesting Apostolic (?) Teaching.

"You and I do not want the censer and the incense, or if we do, it is because, in our age, and under a dispensation which has long ago outgrown them, we are still children in intellect and taste, clamoring for the toys that ought to have been relegated with the other insignia of our babyhood to the garret or the lumber room."

"You will hear from a certain type of divines, and sometimes also from lay people of the same type, a fine scorn for what they call the mere humanitarianism of religion. This is the type of a minister and the type of christian that regards the Church as a sort of fetish, into the presence of which one must crawl and supplicate its blessings at the hands of its sacerdotal representatives—or else go without those blessings. This is the type of teaching which practically regards the world as an irredeemable world, and the office of religion to be, mainly, to fit men as comfortably and safely as possible to get out of it. This is the type of christian discipleship which holds its skirts away from vice and crime, and bids the Church tell the criminal what to expect in the next world because it has not taken the trouble to show him how he ought to live in this. When it sneers at the institutional church, seeks to pour contempt on the spirit of humanitarianism in the Church of God, in the name of Jesus Christ spew it out of your mouth, for it is none of His."

This may be clever, it may be eloquent, it may commend itself to the world, but it is not true. The Clergy whom the Bishop of New York scorns, have taught the poor of our race the love of God; at St. Albans, Holborn, and St. Peters, London Docks, or Holy Cross, N. Y., and many other places, etc. It is to them are due religious work among the wretched, the outcast, not in any chapel annex, but beauty of holiness, mass, censer, confessionals, etc.

True Vocation.

We are glad that the Bishop of Massachusetts has called attention to the facts that the ministry is "a life of sacrifice," that "the Church makes no pledge at ordination that it will support a large family." And that "it is a distinct loss to a young man, or to the Church when the first question to be answered is not: where can I do the best work for the Church? but, where can I do a work for the Church which will also enable me to support my family?"

The question is answering itself as to the marriage of the clergy, there is plenty of room for those who care sufficiently for the things of the Lord to keep themselves entirely free to make God and his Church the one object of life.

A rectory and parish building instead of a glorious sanctuary is one of the weaknesses of the present day, everything is sacrificed to make the one comfortable and the other nice, and we can hardly blame people for selfishness, when they have no example of unselfishness before them.

Church Expansion.

The Founder of our religion says, "I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto Me," and "do this in remembrance of Me." We do not disparage missionary effort, but there is room for some of our Clergy to go forward in parochial activity. The Apostles and early christians met together on the Lord's Day to show forth the Lord's death and they converted the world. How many of our Bishops as a matter of conviction celebrate the Holy Communion each Lord's Day? Let's have some apostolic simplicity and devotion. The reports of missionaries very seldom mention this Christ-like and apostolic preaching of the gospel. One can take heart however for many a one remembers when St. Clements was the only church in Philadelphia where there was an "early service," but to-day almost every parish has "early service." This is good solid missionary work, and it is something not to be measured in dollars and cents, or published in missionary journals but it counts up in numbering "souls of men" who shall see and enjoy God forever. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Christian (?) Agnosticism.

The new heresy is not very active just at present, its promoters are temporarily sojourning on other shores and amid rest-inducing surroundings the cult pays even more than "$1,000 a year and a house," so untold luxuries are at their disposal.

The critical, rather than the devotional study of God's word is no doubt proceeding apace, and perhaps conferences with German sceptics, agnostics and infidels, and we may have another "poly" something bible, revised according to the up-to-date views and studies of misnamed Christian scholars.

At Antioch Christian disciples were taught assembled in the Church and the scholar "full of the Holy Ghost" "exhorted them all that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord," he built up, did not overthrow the faith of some. The new allegience is to be given to the critical judgment of some one who thinks he knows.

Bishop Moberly once spoke of "this constant genuflection of thought." We recommend the idea as a corrective to the anti-christian ambition that hesitates not to adopt the methods of the "world that reads and compares and inquires because it thinks," that it may vindicate itself. Catholics are urged to be liberal because they hold to the old teachings of the Church and speak with authority, because they teach not their own theories, but what they have received, they submit their teaching and writings unreservedly to the teaching of the Church, they have but that one standard.

Father Benson's Letter.

"We have had a great calamity in the ordination of Dr. Briggs, a convert from Presbyterianism, or rather a renegade from Presbyterianism. I do not know how much of the solid Christian faith of the Church he may possess but he goes in for progressive Theology. That means progress without an end. He himself has written a book 'Whither.' By progress we may know what we are leaving. We do not know what deserts we are entering! Probably learning never converted any one. God is only learnt by love, never by intellect. The God of intellect must be a finite God, and that is only an idol. It is strange people can be so perverse. They will read the Old Testament as if the moral conduct exhibited in it were Divine, whereas the whole purpose of the Old Testament is to show that the Divine Law of morality was unattainable by man until the Kingdom of Heaven came and man was born anew by the power of the Holy Ghost. St. Paul lived for the purpose of showing that man cannot live true to God by nature. Righteousness could not come even by the law which God Himself promulgated. The Old Testament was to teach us the wickedness of human nature and prepare the way for the Divine Humanity, communicated to us by Christ. * * *

"A progressive Theology can only be progressive atheism. Science progresses because it has its origin and development in the mind of man. Theology can not be progressive, for it is a revelation from God. It may be more and more apprehended, but it no more admits of progress than the noon day sun. It's progress is a progress of power, love, fruitfulness, as it's glow fills the heart of the faithful and quickens the seeds of grace which God has sown therein, but all developments of theological principles can only be obscurations destroying the actinic power of the sunlight, as when we look at the sun through a smoked glass to trace it's outline the more distinctly. We cannot add to revelation any more than we can originate it. We can only learn what revelation is by seeking in the grace of Christ to live up to it."

My Dear Mr. Field:—I must thank you for the beautiful manner in which you have restored my engravings. They were very valuable prints, and I had feared that they were entirely defaced by time, but you have made them look like new. Whatever your process may be, it has certainly proved most successful, and it will give me pleasure to name you to many of my friends who have fine collections. Very truly yours, JULIA DUNLAP

Spiritual Indifference.

We are sorry to notice the growth of laxity and carelessness as to religious duties during the summer. Many who know their duty give way to the prevailing habit; in addition there is a general irresponsibility on the part of many as to the maintenance of the details of our work, the result of course being that the Clergy have more to do and more is claimed and expected of them. The services at St. Clements are kept up during the hot weather, cheerfully the Clergy fulfil their part, but it must be said, and with shame, that many of the congregation who are in the city simply stay away and keep their children away; how they reconcile such behaviour with their known duty to Almighty God, and in what way they make suitable reparation to Him, we do not know; but we think it our duty to point out to them that worship is not a matter of convenience or comfort, but of duty and obligation; to quote from an editorial in Living Church, "The reasons for going to church are at once simple and powerful. We must go in order to worship God. God is a Person, and he demands this of us. Our own nature moreover in its deepest instincts impels us to do this. It is needful for the salvation of the immortal soul."

Burial of the Poor.

To bury the dead of our household is one of the corporal works of mercy and merits a reward from God. We do not think that St. Clements' people reject this, but the fact is they provide no means of fulfilling it. Sometimes it happens that some one needs Christian burial and all we can do is to provide a grave somewhere and pay the undertaker's bill. We ought to have a burial plot for such persons; it has been spoken of before, but it has not yet affected the hearts or reached the money that might be set apart for this purpose.

The Success of Catholics.

The Catholic party is sure ultimately to triumph in the Church for the simple reason that it regards poverty as Christ did. The Catholic priest can live on less money than the Protestant minister. He does not have an expensive family and household to support.

Anybody who will study the conditions of Church life in our cities will see that Protestant Churches cannot live in poor neighborhoods unless they happen to have the assistance of one or two millionaires. It costs too much to keep the Protestant kind of religion alive, and since with Protestants it is comparatively indifferent whether one goes to church or not, and since Protestants, as a rule, do not believe in the idea of God's worship, at least as connected necessarily with the Church, poor people naturally prefer to spend their money for more entertaining amusements than a strawberry-festival religion.

As a consequence the Protestant church in the less fashionable quarter dies. Its building, or at least its people fall into the hands of Catholics; and it is certainly a fact that in city life the Catholic religion is gaining numerically and the Protestant religion is losing.

This is as it should be.

A "lawless ritualist" is the nickname of those who still believe in Almighty God rather than the "almighty dollar."

Parish Notes.

The attendance at weekday and Sunday services has been very encouraging.

A very handsome rug has been given for the Altar steps of the Crypt Chapel.

Rev. C. C. Quin has been away, taking duty at Point Pleasant part of the time.

The Catechism and Little Catechism will resume sessions on Sunday September 17.

A few people, very few indeed, have thoughtfully supplied flowers for the Altar during the hot weather.

Rev. Fred. B. Ward has arranged to work at St. Clements and will come into residence on September 16.

A portion of cellar just outside the Crypt door has been floored and a partition built shutting it off from the cellar.

Two packages of old magazines have been received; also a package of men's clothing, both of which will be very useful.

The anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Hannah P. Smith was said in the Crypt Chapel on Monday, August 14.

Father Osborne, S. S. J. E., is returning to Boston about the end of August; this is very encouraging for the work of the Society in this country.

Saturday, September 16, is the anniversary of the death of Edward Bouverie Pusey, Priest and Confessor. Surely we ought to keep it in remembrance.

The Feast of Exaltation of the Holy Cross is a holy day of obligation for the Guild of the Holy Cross. A Mass will be said on that day, September 14, at 6.30.

We are grateful to those who have been thoughtful enough to pay up their envelope pledges during the summer. The Accounting Warden has thus been able to pay salaries.

The Choir has been away all of August. Mr. Goodwin has also been away; Mr. Ritter and Mr. Adelhelm have taken the duty at the organ. Mr. Remont has acted as Cantor.

The season at the Sea Shore Home has been a very happy one, no serious trouble or sickness. Another year and yet no prospect of a suitable house; perhaps if those who have received the benefit of the sea air would pray with earnest effort, the means might be put at our disposal.

Perhaps Dr. Pusey read the character of Dr. Temple in the old days better than some of his later admirers. The Lambeth advice is the third instance in which he has surrendered to the law of State where it differs from the law of the Church; the others were in matter of divorce, and his bill for Ecclesiastical Courts put before but not accepted by Convocation of Canterbury.

St. Peter's Church, West Chester, N. Y., of which Rev. Dr. Clendenin is Rector, was destroyed by fire on the morning of Wednesday, August 15. The Vestry think it was the work of an incendiary, and Dr. Clendenin finds the motive in the antagonism caused by his refusal to permit the edifice to be desecrated by the ordination of Dr. Briggs. The new school of Christian (?) Agnostics have the sympathy of lawless men, and his theory seems not improbable. The authorities of the Diocese of New York have caused Dr. Clendenin a good deal of anxiety and annoyance lately as to the ordination of a young man, but Bishop Seymour ordained this candidate on Sunday, August 20.

"Look at Dr. Pusey handling Holy Scripture! See him dealing as has been described with the twenty-second Psalm as if he almost shrunk back from entering into the discussion of that great Psalm of the Passion, as if the awful mysteries of the Crucified Messiah, which lurked in it came out like the devouring cloud of glory, and made it impossible to minister there before the Lord. A modern commentator would have no such difficulty.—Newbolt.

"Who can say how much the movement, which has transformed the Church of England, owed to the inner life and devotion of those who were its prime movers? What do they say at Hursley? It is no light tribute to the great personality of that humble, retiring man, that when all else had been said and done, people would wait and see what came from there before they made up their minds as to the path of duty.—Newbolt.

About Bishops.

The Anglican Church suffers in two respects from its Episcopate. In the first place there is a current misconception of the office of a bishop; and in the second place, the men who occupy the bishopricks are often incompetent.

1. To deal with the misconception of the office first, one should remember that bishops are not Apostles. The Episcopate truly is the chief office in the Church of God, but it is in no sense autocratic or absolute. Bishops are limited in their authority by the Canon Law of the Church, and they have no rights apart from this Law. The popular misconception, sometimes encouraged by "Episcopal utterances," seems to be that each bishop is infallible and has the power of ultimate decision in every question of doctrine and practice. This would be to make a pope out of each bishop. There is no truth in it.

2. In regard to the incompetency of the men who occupy bishopricks, one feels this most keenly in respect to their general lack of knowledge of Catholic theology and their corresponding lack of spirituality. They are sometimes brilliant literary men who write essay-like sermons, but they seldom show any information in regard to Catholic doctrine and practice. They are usually good men, no doubt, in the commonplace sense, but they almost never show the evidences of superior devotion and self-sacrifice. The result is apparent in the relations of our bishops to the mass of the people. They have no hold upon the respect or affections of the people at large. They sit at the tables of the rich and read their MSS. lecture-sermons to pews full of fashionably dressed aristocrats, but anyone who knows America will smile at the thought of an "Episcopal bishop" attempting, for instance, to control the emotions of a mob. At the best they are sometimes praised for a flabby amiability which makes them occasionally popular but not respected. But generally they are of the arrogant and freezing type of chilling respectability which commends them to a coterie but does not endear them to the people. In England they are worse than in America; but there the aristocratic traditions create a sort of timorous regard on the part of the people, which, however, is evidently on the wane.

The chief cause of the weakness of the Anglican Episcopate is, of course, its separation from the other branches of the Catholic Church. There is no proper court of appeal from the rulings of individual bishops, no corrective of the narrow and prejudiced insularity of the Anglican Episcopate. The prosperity of the Anglo-Saxon race has brought with it a gross materialism also, which reacts upon the Church and bishops. This results in a lack of spirituality and devotion and a contempt for the universal and the past. But this last cause, the recrudescence of materialism and contempt for a spiritual religion, this plutocrat's conception of God, to which the bishops burn (strictly metaphorical) incense of their literary praise, is certain ultimately to react upon themselves. In this respect they are sawing off the branch between themselves and the trunk. The reward of toadyism is final contempt. The "rapid accumulation of torpid comfort" in England will certainly be disestablished. In America they will be starved. Even the millionaires who feed them now and invest for them their wages in stocks, will finally cease to be amused by them.

But someone says that if the bishops are bad that is because they are drawn from the Church at large, and the Church at large is at fault for not supplying better material. This is a foolish argument. As a matter of fact one sees good priests spoiled by becoming bishops. Sometimes a priest who is a Catholic becomes a bishop and then he begins to "trim" at once. Instead of greater boldness in advocating confession, fasting communion, etc., he is willing often to deny his past convictions for the sake of the friendship of a few rich people.

Looking over our bishops one feels the delightful irony of the title of Dean Church's essay, "The Place of the Episcopate in History."

To the few exceptions we yield our reverence, we offer our love.

The Meaning of Incense.

(Condensed from Dr. Percival's article in the Care for Incense).

The burning of Incense seems to have had two distinct meanings as used in the Christian Church, the meaning varying in accordance with the source from which the practice was taken.

First, the ancient Greeks and Romans burned Incense before their gods and before the likeness of the Emperor in token of veneration and high regard. This "heathen" use of Incense was in a standing vessel or altar, the frankincense being thrown on the coals. This custom as a mark of respect continued on into Christian times, and from Incense being offered out of respect to Christian Emperors and their likenesses it became the origin in the Christian Church of offering Incense before images, altars, the Book of the Holy Gospels, etc., to express the respect in which they were held.

No ceremonial act has of itself any essential, inherent meaning, its meaning is always dependent on the intention with which it is performed. The same outward ceremonial act may mean different things. So the heathen-derived idea seems to have been sanctified by the early Church and incorporated into her worship as shown by the ordinary form used for blessing the Incense—"Mayest thou be blessed by Him in Whose honour thou art to be burned."

Secondly, there is a deeper meaning attached to the burning of Incense among God's chosen people than was ever found among the heathen. To the Jews the smoke of the Incense was the sweet savour of prayer rising up before the Most High, "Let my prayer be set forth in thy sight as the Incense." Psalm, CXLI, 2.

The Jews not only knew that the Incense they offered set forth the power of prayer in general, but above all they connected it with that all-availing intercession which was to be made by the promised Messiah to Whom all their ceremonies pointed.

All other rites were to be fulfilled and vanish away when Christ was come, but this rite and the "pure offering" with which it is so closely connected (Mal. I, vs. 11) should continue on in Gospel Days. The "pure offering" in this passage is generally admitted to be a material offering, viz., the Holy Eucharist, so then unquestionably, is the Incense.

The use of Incense therefore in the Christian Church would seem, if not directly preordained by Almighty God, at least most agreeable to the Holy Scriptures and it has been in vogue in the whole Church from time immemorable.

In the Jewish Church besides the Altar of Incense and the little cups of Incense on top of the piles of Shewbread, censers carried in the hand were in constant use, (Numbers XVI, 17). This method of using Incense in a swinging vessel is that most commonly mentioned in the New Testament and is practically the only one now known to the Church of God.

The theological meaning to be attached to the censings of persons and things practiced by the Christain Church from the earliest times may be summed up from various sources into one general underlying principle as follows: Whatever was sprinkled or touched with blood in the Old Law to show the need of a dying Redeemer to come, is, under the New Law, censed, to show that there is no more any need of a fresh sacrifice for sin, but that we who are still without the veil, yet parts of the mystical Body of the Eternal Victim, together with our prayers, should be gathered in one and enfolded in His all-prevailing intercession, which, as our Great High Priest, He offers "through His Blood" on the Heavenly Altar.

In Hebrews IX, 19, 21, the Apostle says, "Moses sprinkled both the Book and all the people, * * * both the tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry." In the Law we read that the four corners of the Altar were touched with blood.

Now it is evident that substituting censing for sprinkling with blood, we have the custom of the whole Church of God. We need no more atoning blood, but we do need to be included in the Divine intercession. Hence we set this forth in mystery when we cense the Book of the Gospels, the holy ministers performing the service, all the people, the Altar at its four corners, the holy oblations of bread and wine, and when walking in procession "the tabernacle" (i. e. the whole Church) so we are wrapped in the cloud of the heavenly intercession.

The censing of persons and things is the only method of using Incense distinctly Christian, and, finally, this custom of the Church sets forth no other doctrine except the perfect sufficiency of the Sacrifice of Calvary and the need of all being gathered in one through the intercession of the Eternal Victim, which for a sweet savour rises before the Mercy Seat on High.

Lambeth Advice.

But what, after all, is the decision? The Archbishops have not told us what in their judgment is the seemly mode of conducting Christian worship; they have not taught us in the power of the Holy Ghost how to approach God in prayer and praise; they have not laid down regulations of details of ritual or ceremonial. If they had done these things, there could be no question of the weight that would attach to their utterance. They have done none of these things. They have simply told us what, in their opinion, is the meaning of an Act of Parliament. They may be right or they may be wrong; it does not seem to matter very much. But when they assume that the interpretation of a statute is to be the sole rule for the worship of Almighty God, it matters greatly. They entreat the Clergy "for the sake of the peace of the Church, which we all so much desire" to accept the decision conscientiously given in the name of the Supreme Head of the Church—the Lord, whose commission they bear. The appeal is penetrating. We do not question the conscientiousness of the decision; we bow to the sacred claim so fearlessly expressed; but we must give voice to the fear that the Archbishops have once more mistaken their calling and misread their commission. They have chosen to interpret a statue, when the business in hand was to expound the sacred law.—Church Times.

The Archbishops have given their decision as to the accustomed use of incense. It is on the lines of previous decisions of the Privy Council. It bases itself on a rigid interpretation of the Act of Uniformity, and on the assertion, that omission to prescribe is equivalent to prohibition to use. It affirms that no practice, however venerable, or however much it may claim the sanction of the whole Catholic Church, in East and West alike, is lawful under the Act of Uniformity, unless expressly prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer.

It is the same reasoning which has enabled the Upper House of the Convocation of York to declare that Fasting Communion is not the rule of the Church of England, and which permits the highest ecclesiastical authorities in England to disregard the law of the whole Western Church in regard to the indissolubility of Christian marriage. The Clergy have, hitherto, disregarded such decisions when emanating from the civil tribunals. Put forward as they now are by the heads of the English Church, they will be received with the respect to which such decisions are entitled in themselves, and which is due to the high ecclesiastical authorities responsible for them. It is probable, however, that the reasonings on which the decisions would seem to be based will hardly appear conclusive to those who think that the supposed wishes of the reforming party in the sixteenth century are a matter of supreme indifference to English Churchmen, and who recognize in the the Church of England an authority independent of and higher than any which can be conferred by an Act of Parliament. * * *

In regard to the permission to be accorded by the Sovereign on the advice of the Primate for the ceremonial use of incense on great occasions, a Christian will ask what greater occasion there can be for the use of incense than the offering of the Sacrifice of the altar, and whether it is within the prerogative of the Crown to determine the ritual of the Church of England.

Mr. Keble, and all those who, following in his steps, have so emphatically rejected the right of the Crown to determine the doctrine and ritual of the Church of England, may be left to make reply to such a question. —Church Times.

This "advice" does not affect us in America, but it must make us realize how contrary to the spirit of the Catholic Church it is to be bound up with an irreligious State; even Episcopal advice dare not go too far away from what that State may sanction. It is a real crisis for the mob will demand everything else. True Catholics will pray and labour to throw off the yoke of an unbelieving State.

On Intention.

I noted from the Summa of S. Thomas Aquinas, Part III, Question LXIV, Article IX:

Just as evil ministers living out of the love of God can administer the sacraments, so also can an infidel provided those things are not omitted which are of the necessity of the sacrament.

Because the minister in the sacrament works as an instrument, he does not act through his own power but through the power of Christ. But just in the way that charity belongs to the proper virtue of man, so also does faith. Whence as it is not required for the perfection of the sacrament that the minister be in charity, but even sinners can confer sacraments; so faith on his part is not required for the perfection of the sacrament; but an infidel can perform a true sacrament provided the other things are present which are of the necessity of the sacrament.

Therefore it can happen that a person may suffer defect of faith in some particular but not in regard to the reality of the sacrament which he gives.

For instance, if someone believes an oath to be wrong in every case but nevertheless believes that baptism has efficacy for salvation; and thus such infidelity does not hinder the intention of conferring the sacrament.

But if he suffers defect of faith in regard to the sacrament itself which begives, though he may believe that through what is exteriorly done no interior effect follows, yet he is not ignorant that the Catholic Church intends through things of this sort, which are exteriorly done to administer a sacrament; then, notwithstanding his infidelity, he can intend to do what the Church does although he thinks them to be nothing, and such intention suffices for the sacrament because as was said abvoe the minister of the sacrament acts in the person of the whole Church by whose faith that which is lacking in the faith of the minister is supplied.

[ED.--This whole section from which this is taken is interesting as bearing on such questions as Anglican orders, etc., since S. Thomas is a formally recognized authority of the Roman Church.]

The Seashore Home.

The House at Point Pleasant has again been closed; its accommodation having been taxed during the whole season. We are greatful to the few people of St. Clements congregation who manifest an interest in this work, it deserves the thought of many more, not because it is in the public eye, but because it really accomplishes what other more ambitious ventures only affect to aim at.

It is increasingly difficult to carry on the work in an unsuitable building and it is much to be desired that before next season, some other arrangement may be made. A collection for the house was made at All Saints, Bay Head, of which the amount was $86. The strawbery festival profits were $56.37. A very successful entertainment was given, at Mr. Greenfield's bungalow, which brought in $110.75. A fair by some children, at Bay Head, brought in $11.33. A daily Mass has been kept up during the summer, the priests being entertained by Mr. Greenfield and "the Leighton." The Pennsylvania Railroad extended their accustomed courtesy not only by reduced fares but in other ways; while many kind friends outside made the carrying out of the work possible.

It will be remembered that $550 is held as a special fund for purchase of property and it is hoped that there may be some surplus to add at the end of this season. The Sisters would be glad to have further donations for this purpose.

Epiphany Chapel.

This work carried on for many years at Twenty-third and Cherry Streets, is to be transferred to Seventeenth and Summer Streets, the site of the former Parish of the Atonement. New buildings have been erected, provision has been made for all the present day accessories as well as a Chapel in which to hold religious services. No doubt there will be some alteration in Parish boundaries as a result of this change of location. The buildings are expected to be ready for use some time in October.

Correction.

An item appeared in the daily papers stating that one of the Clergy of St. Clements had officiated with a Protestant Minister at a funeral service. It is needless to say that such statement was an error. It is a grave and serious offence for a Priest to take part in such irregular proceedings, a spurious liberality, whether the occasion be a burial, a marriage or other religious service.

Fr. Convers has been having street processions and services in Boston on Sunday evenings. The situation of the Mission Church is very good for this, being near a densely crowded thoroughfare.

Fr. Osborne is to have charge of the Mission Church in Boston, and there is a report that Fr. Benson has been recalled to England.

A visitor at the Pro-Cathedral, Washington, D. C., asked the care-taker if the Bishop of Washington was a High Churchman. "Oh, no," he said, "only a ritualist." Strange as it sounded, it is the truth.

Parish Notes.

The choir returned September 3d.

The Catechism was resumed on Sunday, September 17th.

Gates of wrought iron have been placed outside the door of the Crypt Chapel.

There was a very good attendance on Holy Cross Day at the Special Mass for Guild of the Holy Cross.

The Offices of the various Guilds of the Sodality of St. Clement will be said this month as given in the Kalendar.

The Clergy will usually be found in the Clergy House Monday evenings, at which time they are glad to see the men of the congregation.

We can only relieve people in distress when we have money; no collections are placed at our disposal and very few people ever give any money.

Rev. V. B. Lucas, who has been assisting in the services for some time past, expects shortly to return to England. He made many friends in the Parish.

A set of blue vestments, Chasuble, Stole, Maniple, and Apparel have been given for use in the Crypt Chapel; they were used on the Nativity of B. V. M. for the first time.

As usual, several hundred dollars is due the Church treasury on account of pew rents and pledges. The Accounting Warden was not able to pay the Clergy salaries for August.

Pew rents are due in advance October 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the Vestry Room Monday, October 2d, to receive money for pew rents and for renting pews and sittings.

Rev. F. D. Ward came into residence on September 15th, he will have charge of the Catechism and S. Katharine's, Holy Child and St. Nicholas' Guilds, as well as the spiritual oversight of all the children.

A Christmas Crib, money for which was given last winter, has been ordered from Regali Bros., London. Sister Katharine Ruth, of All Saints, has kindly undertaken to give suggestions for the colouring of the various figures.

It is very much desired that the offerings on All Souls Day, which will be devoted to the purchase of a burial plot for faithful poor people, may be a generous one. Unfaithfulness will be no claim for the privileges of this burial place.

Partly worn clothes of all kinds are very much needed for the mission work. Packages may be sent to Mission House, 2036 Cherry street, or Clergy House. A large bundle received during the month, with no name, is hereby acknowledged. Copies of old magazines and illustrated papers are always useful, both to amuse members of guilds and to distribute.

It seems advisable to correct a report that is circulated from time to time. During the last few years various things have been placed in the church; altars, pictures, vestments, etc.; the money for these was not solicited from the congregation or its members; did not come out the collections which are all under the control of the Vestry. A great part of the money come from people outside the parish. It is to be hoped that those who spread such reports may now cease.

Mortgages.

It is very much to be desired that the mortgage still remaining on the parish building should be paid off, it amounts to $2,400, a suggestion, which has not yet obtained the interest of our people, was made that it be attempted before St. Clements Day. The trustees of the sinking fund have $469.31 on hand, and the vestry at their last meeting appropriated the whole amount we have formerly paid in interest charges $454.50, so there is $1,476.19 still to be provided for. Not an enormous sum if all the people really cared or valued their privileges.

Benefactor.

A Requiem Mass, for the repose of the soul of William S. Wilson, an early benefactor of the Parish, was said on Monday, September 4th, in the Crypt Chapel, being the morrow of the anniversary of his death. A window in memory of Mr. Wilson is in the north side of the Church. It was on ground belonging to Mr. Wilson that the Church was built, he contributed generously for the building and at other times, while it was the liberal arrangement of his executors that reduced the mortgage indebtedness very considerable.

The Sisters' House.

Very little money has come since the last acknowledgment in August. only a very small number have given or promised anything, there are hundreds of people in Philadelphia to whom the appeal ought to come as a privileged claim; it seems strange that they are so forgetful of benefits and so unwilling to respond. The fund reported amounts to $3,236.43. Next month we hope that many who have neglected may send a donation, every member of the parish ought to consider it a privilege to give what they can.

At the opening of the fall-work of the Catechism we would like to call the attention of the friends of the children to the subject of the Sunday School Library.

We hope that the interest manifested in the Spring by the donation of several lots of useful books has not entirely subsided during the summer.

Kindly send second-hand books in good order and of proper subject matter. Surely almost everyone has some volumes of current or standard works which have been read at home lying about the house. May the children have the benefit of what is of no further practical use to you. Kindly send to the Clergy House 2026 Cherry street.

Church Defence.

The first number of this monthly has been received ($1.00 a year, Room 73 Tribune Building, New York), it comes to do its part in the battle of unbelief. Under head of Objects of Attack, it says:

"It is undeniably true that there are those within the Church who are attacking the most fundamental verities of the Catholic Faith. Brilliant men, some of them are, and their trained minds are bent to the accomplishment of an impious work of destruction. They seek to undermine and destroy faith in—

"The eternal personality of our Lord.

"The two natures in union in that Personality.

"The Personality and Divinity of the Holy Ghost.

"The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures as distinguished from any other book.

"The Integrity and Inerrancy of the Holy Scriptures.

"The Atonement made by Christ upon the Cross.

"The Resurrection of the Body.

"The whole body of doctrine which is the consequence of these foundation truths."

Lambeth Advice.

There are two possible ways of facing the question and acting on the Lambeth advice. A determined and emphatic refusal to be governed in spiritual matters by an Act of Parliament and accepting the penal consequences if need be "whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God; judge ye." Or, yielding under protest, to begin the struggle for relief of the Church of England from such intolerable oppression, and insisting that Lambeth shall apply the same pressure to compel the obedience of broad and low churchmen to the doctrine, ritual and worship of the church; this Lambeth pronouncement has broken the truce made while a former Archbishop was preparing for the things of eternity. The spiritual power of the Anglican Communion to-day is the fruit of the self sacrifice of "these extreme men" as they are called, even if their opponents have control of the money and places of influence. It is evident that a determined refusal on the part of some will be followed by a storm of abuse on the part of friends and foes, who take their policy from "the man in the street" or unbelievers in Parliament. Lord Halifax advises laymen to stand by their Clergy. Some parishes in England have given up the use of Incense until after the death of the present Archbishop.

Our Guardian Angel.

Sometimes we read in the papers or come across in our own lives instances where the wicked passion of anger has led persons to such an extreme that for months and years they would not speak to the object of their hatred though continuing to live perhaps under the same roof.

We should not like to think ourselves so wicked and possibly we do not feel at present any burning of anger in our hearts. Yet it comes to us as a surprise when we are accused of living with wise, loving, beautiful fellow-creatures and never speaking to them, scarcely even recognizing their existence.

The feast of Michaelmas on September 29th and the black letter feast day of the Holy Guardian Angels on October 2d usually wakes us each year with a start to the realization that the Church's doctrine of the Angels makes but little practical impression on our lives.

Will it not be well for us to inquire why it is and how it can be remedied?

At the time of the Reformation so-called, the English Church suppressed certain points of teaching which She thought had been abused, but quite evidently there was no change in Her teaching as to the relation of the Holy Angels to men although in the general cancellation of feast days some dedicated to the Angels were omitted.

But the Mass as retained for Michaelmas contains quite all the explicit doctrine of the Universal Church on the subject, namely, that the Angels love us, pray for us and watch over us. For if they "succour and defend us" in the words of the Collect they must be watching for such opportunities; if it is by God's apointment, it is for them a work of love; if they can aid us it must merely be helpful and grateful to pray them to do so.

Nevertheless, how few church-people have a prayer to their Guardian Angel inserted in their daily prayers. That bright and faithful messenger assigned to take charge of us at the font of baptism, joined to us as closely as our natural relations and toiling like them for our salvation meets in return from most of us, forgetfulness and ingratitude.

How many times his hand has turned us from physical danger, how many times he has humbled himself to bear our despicable prayers to Jesus' Throne and return from it to us laden with some priceless spiritual blessing, how many times his loving inspiration has strengthened our weak souls to do the will of God, all these we heed not but like thankless children we seize the gift and break the givers heart.

Whether it is a punishment on us for belittling the Real Presence of the Angels' King in His own Blessed Sacrament, whether it is the severed unity of the Church which has weakened our bonds even with our invisible brethren or whether the materialistic spirit of the age blinds the eye of the soul to the true glories of the other world we may not be able to determine absolutely but of the results we are certain—we think little about the angels and we love them less.

"In the ressurrection," we are to be "as the Angels of God in heaven." Surely as St. Leo says "we must make their acquaintance now to be worthy to live with them hereafter." If they are our example we have surely erred in studying them so little, if they are victorious warriors of the common host of God surely we run great risk in not summoning them to our aid.

We, most of us, tremble before our belief in a personal, active, invisible power of evil, the devil, why should we deprive ourselves of the comfort of a real faith in a personal, active, though invisible power for good, viz.: Our Guardian Angel.

How shall we remedy our failure to appreciate the existence and help of the Holy Angels rightly?

First, by adding at once a supplication to our Guardian Angel to our daily private prayers, or if we use one already by making it more than a mere utterance of words.

Secondly, by always contemplating the holy angels as assisting with us at Mass especially thinking of them at the Sanctus, and Gloria in Excelsis.

Thirdly, by an earnest endeavor to purify the eye of our souls by meditation, prayer and the use of the means of grace to see God and all spiritual things more clearly.

Vocation.

How shall the soul know if it is called to the Religious life? The promise is "Thine ear shall hear a voice behind thee saying: This is the way, walk ye in it;" but how is that voice to be recognized?

It comes first as an inward call; God the Holy Ghost Himself speaks within. He gives to the soul a keen perception of the vanity of all worldly things and so weans it from them to desire that which is higher, fuller. Or He gives a desire for self sacrifice; the soul learns to wish to do hard things for God, or there comes an ever-growing desire for a closer intimacy with Christ, a sense of the attractiveness of His love, that this alone can satisfy and all else can be readily given up "that I may know Him." With some there may be at first nothing more than a desire for a hard life, not fully understood, but suddenly illuminated, perhaps by a light that comes from the life at Nazareth. The Holy Ghost has many ways of speaking.

It may come by Direction. A soul under the spiritual guidance of a Priest, continually praying that God will make known His Will, may thus have the way pointed out. A Priest may recognize the call before it is known to the soul itself. "Eli perceived that the Lord had called the child."

It may come through outward circumstances, for outward circumstances are the voice of God's Providence for us. Some time in which we live, some place we are called to fill, the opportunity to exercise some gift for God, may indicate to the soul the way in which God wants it to walk. When such a thought wakes up in the soul a great sense of God's love and a desire to give itself to him there may be a very well founded hope that God is making His call clear.

Of course if the desire comes in any of these ways, but no opportunity is open before it, or if there be some positive duty that stands in the way, then it is clear the time has not yet come and the soul must wait before it can take any definite steps. Perhaps obstacles may remain and then the soul will have to learn that the call was only meant to deepen the life and bring it closer to God, while abiding still in the place where the call came. This need not bring disappointment, but rather strengthen the soul in true communion with God. It is not well to try to push in where God has not opened the door. "Ye have not chosen me, I have chosen you."

However the call may come, God does not force obedience. He only makes it clear and leaves the will to act. Looking on the young man, the Lord loved him but He did not make him come. "If thou wilt be perfect"—and then He left him to choose. * * *

"The people offered willingly" for the service of God. Is it well to hold back children either from christian life as in early Confirmation and childhood's Communion, or from any other call God may give? To hold them back because parents do not want the children to take a higher line than themselves, or because they cannot give them up?

Jesse offered the son he thought the best. Hannah gave her only one. Zacharias and Elisabeth the only one, the one so long prayed for. There is a blessing waiting now for those who give their best to God.

It is perhaps a little strange that so many who wish there were more Sisters of Mercy in the church, more men dedicated to God in the religious life, yet seem to add a clause, "but they must be other people's sons and daughters, not mine."

Are there not in many quiet homes, in country rectories and city vicarages, in country curacies and city clergy houses, young men and young women to whom the word suggesting the possibility of a call to the religious life, and so kindling the desire for it might come first of all as the voice of God spoken through a parent's lips? "Suffer the children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."—Cowley Evangelist.

Timely Words.

A pamphlet containing a sermon by the Bishop of New York and an extract from the Convention address of the Bishop of Washington, D. C., under this title, has been privately printed by a layman of the Diocese of Long Island and sent around to the Clergy. Both of these Bishoss are building Cathedrals and know "that the commercial question is at the bottom of it and decide usually all others,'' they are also both mixed up in the wretched Briggs matter, in which wealthy laymen are interested, gold and silver being the gods. So their words are weighty. It reminds one of the old tale of the Charles' time, ''Steenie, Steenie,'' &c.

The Lambeth opinion does not seem to commend itself to any who are well informed about ecclesiastical members or who desire the peace of the Church; at most it has received the applause of the ignorant, commendation of those who are not concerned, only a grudging acquiescence on the part of those who love the Bride of Christ. Dr. Sanday, of Oxford, not an extreme man, is out with a pamphlet calling attention to the fact that the Oxford movement aims at Catholocizing not Romanizing the Church, and the Lambeth advice pays not attention to this fact, that after the wisdom of the preliminary steps a wiser and sounder treatment was to be expected.

All Saints Sisters of the Poor.

The collections on All Saints Day will be for the fund to purchase a house, and it is hoped that the many people who have not yet contributed may generously respond. If not able to give on All Saints Day to put some amount of money in a marked envelope on the Sunday in the octave.

The Sisters by their long and faithful service here, extending over twenty-one years surely ought to receive this evidence of appreciation, that the work may be continued with greater benefit. The holder of the mortgage ($4,600) on 2036 Cherry Street having demanded its payment, this being impossible, title to the property will be given at the request of the Sisters; this will be a hindrance to our work as only 2034 Cherry Street will be occupied, the rental of this house is much greater than it ought to be, but the owner refused to reduce it except on impossible conditions. We are confronted by a real difficulty. We have not enough money as yet to buy a new property and the old quarters are inadequate. We cannot too often repeat that if Christian people would only pay their debts of money to God and His Church everything could be done that is necessary.

The Mortgages.

There remains on the Parish Building a mortgage of $2,400 and there is about $950 in hand, so there is less than $1,500 to raise; it would be a great joy to finish this up at St. Clement's-tide; there are a good many people in the Congregation who have not shared in the various efforts of the last few years and it might be for their soul's good to lay up some treasure in Heaven. There is nothing that stunts the spiritual life so much as niggardliness toward Almighty God.

Altar Guild.

Members of the Guild have been at work since the middle of October, although the first regular meeting with Office will not be held until Tuesday, November 7th. Several orders have been received, some requests for gifts. The white vestments of the Parish need renewal, and this will receive the immediate attention of the Guild, the cost of new silk will be more than $100, and it is hoped that donations toward the cost may be given.

566 communions made Sept. 24—Oct. 21.

The collections on St. Clement's Day will be for the Endowment Fund of the Church, which is held in trust for the parish by the Pennsylvania Co. for Insurance on Lives, etc. (See MAGAZINE February, 1898.) Every communicant ought to feel bound in conscience to give generously for this purpose, "yea and beyond their power," for "other men labored and ye are entered into their labors." We must share in the merit and blessing of providing for others who are to come after us.

The Procession of Guilds belonging to the Sodality of St. Clement will take place on Sunday, November 26th. All members are asked to take part, wearing their medals, not being ashamed of the mark of salvation with which they were signed in Holy Baptism. Women and girls will meet in the upper school room to put on their veils; men and boys in Chapel of St. John the Evangelist. They should come not later than half past seven o'clock.

Tickets for the Parish Tea, price 25 cents, may be obtained at the Mission House, 2034 Cherry street, from the Sister in charge. Any surplus is placed to the credit of the Poor Fund.

All communicants of the parish are reminded of the obligation of making their communion during the Festival, the hours for hearing confessions will be posted on the bulletin board in the corridor.

The Endowment Fund.

This fund held in trust under conditions by the Penna. Co. amounts to $4,390.91. The collections on St. Clement's Day will be for the fund. Under the conditions of present religious work, the continued existence of a parish makes an endowment necessary, neighborhoods change, although the amount of work is apt to increase—the full income of the fund is not paid to the Vestry until it reaches $5,000 a year, and none is paid until it reaches $1,000 a year.

The Vestry have had prepared the following forms for use by such members of the parish as may wish to remember the endowment in their wills, or to take out a life insurance policy for its benefit.

I. FORM OF BEQUEST FOR PERSONAL PROPERTY.

I bequeath to the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities the sum of ————, in trust for St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund, established by the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Clement's Church in the City of Philadelphia.

II. FORM OF BEQUEST FOR LIFE INSURANCE.

I bequeath to the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities the proceeds of my life insurance arising under my policy No. ——, issued by the ———— Company of ————, in trust for St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund, established by the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Clement's Church in the City of Philadelphia.

III. FORM OF DEVISE FOR REAL ESTATE.

I devise to the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities my real estate, situated on ———— street, in the City of Philadelphia, or in ————, in trust for the St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund, established by the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Clement's Church, in the City of Philadelphia.

All Souls' Day.

Names of baptized persons to be mentioned in the Mass on All Souls' Day should be written on paper, and sent to the clergy; the date of death should be put down; also at which mass it is desired to be remembered. Those who have died during the past year will be mentioned at all masses, others at one of the masses. Vespers of the dead will be said on Wednesday, November 1st, at 5.15 P. M. The offerings on All Soul's Day will be for a fund to buy lots for a burial ground for faithful parishioners, who may thus have proper Christian burial.

All Saints' Day.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

So speaks the natural heart of man of the lives of those who have not had opportunity to make a great show in the world or get their names recorded on the annals of succeeding generations.

But in the light of the Christian religion such lives must always be accorded the highest place as more completely fulfilling the principle of true spiritual existence which the apostle gives when he says, "your life is hid with Christ in God."

Least and greatest are almost completely reversible terms in the world and in the gospel of Christ. The being that has failed to grasp the law of its creation which is that since it was made for the glory and praise of God, it should be more than content with the knowledge of His unfailing love and oversight has little of the mind of Christ.

The carpenter's family at Nazareth was no desert or unfathomed cave when God the Father was in every action however humble, well pleased, and the angels bowed in wondering admiration.

So with the great lights of the Holy Church of God who are great especially for their close following of that example we should expect and we find a marked hiddenness of life.

Have you thought as you followed the round of the Church's year that there were many lives of the Saints recorded and preserved in her tender recollection? Has the same thought followed you as observed in your private devotion the black-letter Saint-days of some religious calendar? Or has the same suggestion seemed abundantly proved when some ponderous "Lives of the Saints" has been consulted?

Not if you have rightly considered what the life of the Church is nor the manner of God's dealing with men.

You do not suppose that "all the company of heaven" is comprised in the band of recorded Saints. You surely have not concluded that any one's hope of heaven was based on the chance of their virtue and holiness being announced in the records of their fellowmen. Jesus Christ set no such condition to the attainment of eternal life nor when we consider the small proportion of chronicled Saints with the number of fellow Christians in their own generation could we reasonably believe that they comprise all who have entered into glory.

How wisely then has the Catholic Church in addition to the honour which she pays individually to those whom God has made known as His friends, instituted a feast in which we shall recall and honour all who have been pleasing to Him in their day and generation and have entered into His marvellous light.

Reputation, fame and honour are as much as anything else God's gifts. On some of His Saints He has bestowed them in His all blessed wisdom and from some He has withheld that which to them might have been a danger, a temptation and a fear.

The Harvest.

We referred some while ago to the appropriateness of the way in which the Church had adapted her round of seasons to the order of the natural year, and dwelt especially on the fitness of Lent occurring in spring time.

And may we not as we look out on "the fields white to the harvest" or see the results of the labors of the husbandmen gathered into barn and storehouse or into market and shop—blessings which we shall soon commemorate on Thanksgiving Day—may we not indeed see a peculiar appropriateness in her placing of the festival of all Saints on the first of November?

The Church's year is drawing to a close, she has ploughed and sowed during Lent, she harrowed, weeded and watered during Easter and Whitsun-tide, she has patiently abided for the sun, the wind and the rain of the long Trinity season, and now when the earthly laborer rejoices shall she find herself empty handed? No, lest man should be too engrossed in the thought of the earthly harvest she opens to his eyes for a moment her heavenly garner and shows the rich fruits that she in this and every year has been gathering into the treasure house of God.

There is the true vintage, there are the really good fruits of the earth, stored up there stand the full sheaves of which the angels with joy were the reapers.

How skillful and tender the Church's care in thus lifting our hearts from the natural to the spiritual, from the temporal to the eternal, from earth to heaven. "Labor not" says She only "for the meat that perisheth." What in your life shall I, this harvest, find worthy of my store-house, thirty, sixty or an hundred fold has my toil paid me? Moreover are you so living and striving that, when for you all, harvest is past, all summer is ended, you may be reckoned among my Saints?

Burial of the Dead.

Instruction.

"Reverent burial of the bodies of the departed is an undeniable part of the religion which teaches that the bodies of Christians are temples of the Holy Ghost. Hence the solemn Rites of Burial and honour with which we treat the bodies of our dead. This is the reason for the baring of the head, or the military salute, at the passing of a funeral—outward tokens of reverence which ought not to be omitted by any Christian, even in the crowded streets of London.

But while we thus honour the bodies of the departed, our chief concern is, not for their mortal remains but for their souls which are still living; and for them, and in their name, we lift our hearts to God. Even with our most faithful ones it is the case that by far the larger number are at their death infected with some lingering stains of sin. Even our best confessions (though the absolution brings us forgiveness for the past) do not rid us entirely of sin; that will not be until sin ceases to belong to us altogether; and for this much purification is needed before we can get sin entirely, so to speak, out of our system, and become fit for Heaven. Further, when the veil of the flesh is withdrawn, we shall see our sins much more in their true colours, much more as God sees them, and this of itself must bring us much sorrow and pain; and at the same time we shall have a longing to come to Him in Whom is our only Hope:

'And these two pains, so counter and so keen,
The longing for Him when thou seest Him not;
The shame of self at thought of seeing Him,
Will be thy veriest, sharpest Purgatory.'

This is the reason why, at the Holy Communion Service, we pray, not only for the living but for all Thy whole Church, including of course the departed (who still belong to the mystical Body of Christ), that they may have remission of sins and all other benefits of Christ's Passion. Though death is the end of our probation, yet there are some sins which are not forgiven until the world to come (St. Matt. xii. 32), and until they are entirely done away, and the soul perfected through Christ's merits, the departed cannot be fit for heaven. We pray further in the Burial Service for perfect consummation and bliss both in body and soul in Thine eternal, and everlasting glory, for ourselves and for the faithful departed. This looks forward to the Resurrection at the Last Day, because it is not until then that we shall receive again our bodies, and that our bliss will be perfected."—The Christian's Manual.

Novena—Nov. 14-23.

Memorial for the parish (to be said daily):

Ant.—I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring.

V.—O Lord, look down from heaven.
R.—Behold, and visit this vine.

Let us pray.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who does govern all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplications, and grant unto this parish all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare; schools in which to train the young in Thy faith and fear; ministers to labor in this portion of Thy vineyard; a Church restored to the beauty of holiness. Strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; rouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; bring all to be of one heart and one mind within the fold of Thy Holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The "Book of the Compassion," Father Benson's "Manual of Intercessory Prayer" and "Manual for Intercessory Prayer," edited by Dr. W. W. Webb, are suggested as suitable for further devotion. Will not all take part in this union for prayer?

St. Clement, Martyr and Bishop.

Licensed for use by the Bishop of the diocese.

Collect:

O God, who makest us to rejoice in the yearly solemnity of Blessed Clement, Thy Martyr and Bishop, favorably grant that we who keep his festival may likewise imitate his fortitude in suffering, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle, Phil. iii: 17; iv: 4:

Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample. (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.) For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself. Therefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord. And I intreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellowlaborers, whose names are in the book of life. Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice.

The Gospel, St. Matt. xxiv: 42-48:

Watch therefore: for ye known not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

March of the Templars.

From "The Crusaders."

O, Zion! blest City, whence cometh salvation!
Chosen of God, for His own habitation,
We burn to exalt thee, to see thee all glorious:
Rise! disenthrall'd, o'er thy captors victorious.

We sing in gladsome chorus, though high is Jordan's swelling river:
Our Lord still goes before us; and will His flock from harm deliver:
He guides our feet; He hears our cry;
And leads us on to victory.

Hope! weary heart, though the way be dreary,
Soon, soon thou'll gain the blessed rest for pilgrims weary.
Peace! weary heart; cease from care and sorrow.
Rest, blessed rest, awaits thee in the coming morrow.

Advent.

In the ordinary course of life we find our homes in need of at least, a spring and fall house-cleaning.

Dust has settled into crevices and corners, has woven itself into carpets and rugs in a way that no ordinary renovating can remove. The glistening polish on furniture and ornaments, in spite of regular attention, has grown bedimmed. Some articles have entirely passed their usefulness and need to be entirely replenished. Conditions of household arrangement have been tolerated that we knew needed attending to, and so we usually set definite times in the year when all this shall be largely remedied.

Who cannot see how clearly we may transfer this in a figure to the Spiritual house of our soul? We think dust collects with alarming rapidity in our earthly houses, but how vastly more alarming is the deadening of Spiritual truth; that due to the corruption of man's nature goes on in his soul, if there are not set times of more than ordinary renovation. The ornaments of Christian hope and the rewards awaiting us in Heaven are in sad need of repolishing. Many of our religious exercises are so worn out in our mechanical way of performing them that they require replacing by such as shall have real life and meaning in them. Conditions in our Spiritual life have been permitted to go on that we recognized were eminently dangerous, because we pretended we had not the time or requisite energy for a thorough overhauling.

The Church has not overlooked so wide-spread a necessity. "Set thine house in order" is distinctly the summons of Advent. The eternal verities of Death, Judgment, Hell and Heaven are thundered against us with new force. S. John the Baptist is sent to us before the great and dreadful day. Nothing is omitted that may arouse us to furnish something better than a stable for the reception of the Infant King, that Jesus' Christmas visit may be one of peace and joy; not a forecast of ruin and eternal destruction, as it was to Herod and the Jews.

The Altar Cross.

It probably was not generally known that this cross was the legal property of the S. S. J. E., loaned to the Church, and for which they held a receipt from the Accounting Warden. The Superior in this country presented this receipt on November 12th, asking for the Cross. On November 14th the vestry gave the Accounting Warden authority to surrender it, that same night it was removed from the Altar and the Superior notified. At his request it was packed up and sent to Boston.

A member of the congregation immediately promised a sufficient sum to put a Cross, the property of the Parish, upon the Altar, in memory of our dear friend, John Neill, whose anniversary we shall soon keep. The whole affair is one of sharp pain and pathetic regret.

The new Cross will be made from the same design and by the same firm as the former one. A corpus will be placed on the Cross. The All Saints Sisters kindly loan us the crucifix belonging to the altar at Sea Shore Home for the time being.

Parish Notes.

An amice has been given for use in the Crypt Chapel.

Bona Mors devotions were said on Mondays after Evensong.

Vespers of the Dead were sung in Church on November 1st at 5.15.

The Rev. V. B. Lucas is kindly preparing the designs for the green Cope.

The fund for a burial lot now amounts to $53.85. A good deal more is needed.

A number of beautiful amethysts have been given for the use of the Church in memoriam.

Several hundred names were read for remembrance at the requiem masses on All Souls Day and other days.

It seems best to discontinue the Tuesday afternoon Bible class, the attendance last year was very small.

The donation of some magazines and old clothes (no names furnished) is hereby acknowledged with grateful thanks.

A member of the congregation has illuminated and given a copy of "Propers" for St. Clement's Day, for the Altar book.

Our grateful thanks are due to the Superior of the C. S. S. S. for the loan of their white vestments on Sunday, November 5th.

F. Osborne has written to say that the Society relinquishes claim to the oak-framed pictures in lower vestry, so that now there are no more articles in use belonging to the Society.

A silver-gilt pyx and oil stock in handsome case has been given to the parish. These are very acceptable, as the parish did not possess either. The pyx in use up to the present belongs to the Society of St. John Evangelist.

The Guild of St. Vincent have presented a pair of silver-mounted cruets in memory of John T. Blake, an acolyte of the parish, and for use at St. Katharine's Altar. They were blessed on St. Clement's Day and used for the first time on St. Katharine's Day.

The white vestments have been entirely renewed. Members of the Altar Guild worked very hard to get them ready for use on St. Clement's Day. Two donations, amounting to $25, toward the cost has been received; $100 more is needed. The old silk will be cleaned and made up for a second set.

The Christmas Crib, generously given to the parish by a Communicant, has been received from Regali Bros., London. We desire to acknowledge the courtesy of The Stoltzenburg Co., New York, in the matter of importing. The duties and charges of entry alone amounted to $36.83. The duties were paid under protest, and a suit is in progress to determine the legality of such duties.

Marriage.

On Wednesday, November 22nd, at noon, Walter Burd Barrett, for many years a faithful acolyte of the parish, was united in holy matrimony to Edith Georgina Pike. A nuptial mass was said earlier in the day in the Crypt Chapel.

8094 Communions were made during the past year, 161 on St. Clement's Day and 798 from October 22nd to November 26th.

Christmas.

Every faithful communicant is urged to make a proper use of Advent, preparing for Holy Communion. Wednesday as well as Friday should be kept as a day of abstinence, the whole season being spent in such serious fashion as is fitting for those "who wait for their Lord."

We ask liberal offerings on Christmas.

St. Clement's-tide.

The first vespers of the Feast of our Patron were sung in the Chapel of St. John Evangelist on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. The communions on Thursday were not as many as we would have desired. Devout people ought to remember that when they fail in their duty, not only do they weaken their spiritual lives, but also they harm the supernatural strength and growth of the parish, and so, of other souls.

At eleven o'clock there was a Procession and Solemn Mass was sung, Rev. A. W. Doran, Celebrant; Rev. C. C. Quin, Deacon and Rev. F. D. Ward, Sub-Deacon. The Rev. H. H. Oberly, D. D., Rector of Christ Church, Elizabeth, N. J., was the preacher. His text was Phil. iv: 3. The Bishop of the Diocese wrote: "I have your note of the 15th, and hope your approaching Festival will be fruitful of good to your people in every way."

It was much to be desired that the remaining amount due on the $2,400 mortgage on the parish building might have been given at this Festival; however, $480, and the further promise of $50 added to $900 in hand, leaves only $1,000 still to make up, and we feel sure it will come. $149 and a promise of $50 more represents increase of endowment. The music, under the direction of Mr. W. A. Goodwin, was very well sung. The March of the Templars was sung as part of the Procession; Stainer's Mass in A was sung by the choir, with the accompaniment of a quartette of horns. There was a good attendance of parishioners and friends. It is always a pleasure to see, on St. Clement's Day, so many of the clergy of the city, and the kind and thoughtful good wishes of clergy from many parts of the country makes us feel that we are not so isolated as would often seem.

There was a good attendance in the evening at the Parish Tea, but much is to be desired in the keeping of this event. It is the yearly occasion on which all can meet together as St. Clement's people, and it does seem as if everyone ought to make it a prior engagement. It ought to be a joy and pleasure for the fellow laborers of St. Clement's to greet one another in a friendly way, as well as to strengthen and cheer the clergy in their anxieties and work. Christian courtesy has its place and responsibilities as well as polite society. Any one who feels that the occasion is a stupid bore only publishes his own shortcomings and uncovers his own failure to do his part and share. Some kind friends furnished a pleasant entertainment, for which we desire to express our gratitude, the rector made the usual routine remarks, Mr. Fryer, the Rector's Warden, spoke some encouraging words in regard to the material conditions of the work of the parish.

The music was repeated on Sunday morning, and the Procession of Guilds took place on Sunday night, November 26th, Rev. R. H. Paine, Rector of Mount Calvary Church, Baltimore, preaching the sermon. Vespers were sung, and a solemn Te Deum. Monday night the children had an entertainment; Tuesday there was an exhibition of Church vestments.

To Mr. Goodwin and all the members of the choir, who have worked so hard and faithfully in preparing for the musical part of the services of the Festival, we desire to express publicly the appreciation of the people of St. Clement's.

The Guild of St. Vincent, as usual, cheerfully attended to their part of the preparations and were really fellow laborers, while many others in getting ready vestments, flowers and various other ways, gave steady, willing and cheerful service. To the good friends who came to preach, and gave us the honor of their presence, we cannot fully express our appreciation. The rector of Mount Calvary is an old and faithful friend of the parish, while we feel that the wise counsel of Dr. Oberly indicates that we can depend on his visit being only the beginning of his interest.

Religious (?) Zeal.

A curious religious custom seems to survive in our vicinity — breaking Church windows. We don't know whether there are any indulgences attached, but the peculiar devotion seems to be indirectly fostered by those who ought to know better. It seems to be on the same level with the advice given to the man who has no arguments to support his case: "Abuse your opponent." We should be sorry to instruct the children of St. Clements in such a manner that they should think it zeal for religion to destroy the property of those we cannot convert. Sunday, November 19, in the middle of the High Mass, a youth deliberately stood and broke one of our windows on Cherry street. The same kind of thing has been done before. Attention has been called to it, but those whose word could prevent it, apparently do not disapprove. The police authorities do their best, and when the boys have been found parents plead poverty, etc. It is not difficult to place the blame where it belongs, the principles of which such acts are the outward evidence.

Formerly St. Clement's Hospital.

The building, Claymont and Cherry streets, will hereafter be known as All Saints' Mission House, returning to religious uses and serving a purpose more in harmony with the purposes of those whose love, work, prayers and money originally purchased it. A goodly sum of money will be needed to make it suitable for its future use, and it is hoped that now many who have not given or promised may aid in the matter. The price paid is $8,500.

The Community will be incorporated and will hold the property. Part of the building will be utilized at once for the Mission work, but as the lease of 2034 Cherry Street does not expire until June 1st, the Sisters will not live in the new building until then. The Sisters are under obligations to Dr. Sinkler, the President of the Penna. Hospital for Epileptics, for his courtesy in this matter, as well as to the other members of the Board for their interest. The title to No. 2036 Cherry Street has been given to the person holding the mortgage, and it will be vacated immediately.

We regret to have neglected before the acknowledgement of three packages of clothing received from Mrs. Willcox, three bundles from Miss Hare, a bundle from the Misses Newman, containing several pieces of new goods, a bag of clothing (shoes) from Mrs. Lea, also package magazines.

The donors will feel repaid we are certain with the assurance that all have been most useful to the Guild in its work.

A comparison of the Annual Report with those of former years will show a decided falling off in interest and assistance on the part of members of the congregation, which is by no means justified. The Guild has no longer, it is true, that attraction of novelty so necessary for Christian activity in our day, nor is it a field for great personal prominence, but it does do a quiet work resting on prayer and right principles of "charity" which is diminished by the indifference and neglect of those who prefer their own methods of giving to those of the Church.

The work of the Employment Committee has been most encouraging, and the Clergy and Sisters supplied the visiting and other duties for which lay-help was lacking.

Christmas.

Dear friend, are you going to keep Christmas this year? Why, you say, what a foolish question. Of course I am. Everybody does. I can't give many presents or any of much value, but I shall do the best I can and the will must go for the deed.

Yes, but you haven't answered my question. Are you really going to keep Christmas?

What can you mean? How am I going to spend the time? Oh, I am going to spend the day with father and mother, or else all the family is coming here. We are going to have a fine, old-fashioned Christmas dinner, then in the afternoon we are going for a long drive, sleighing if there's snow, and in the evening we shall all go to the theatre. Probably in the morning we'll go to Church.

Ah, my friend, you have told me how one can keep the world's Christmas but not that of the church. Do you ever stop to consider the fine old English word the world degrades to name the pagan holiday it keeps on December 25th? Christ's Mass is it's meaning. The Nativity—birthday of Jesus Christ, God and man! How senseless to call the day by this name and think so little of making that the reason for observing it. What mockery in giving and receiving gifts, when we have not consecrated the day by offering to God the Christ's Mass and received into our hearts Him Whose delight is to be with the sons of men.

That, and that only, is Christmas. Some cannot have your fine dinner because they have not the money to buy it; some cannot share your pleasure and amusement because of hearts laden with sorrow or minds burdened with pain; some cannot enjoy the happiness of family reunion by reason of distance or the separation of death, but the Angels, and Heaven, and peace, and joy and the Infant Jesus are for all of good will.

So, then, if you are a pagan, keep your holiday as you please on December 25th, but spare us the infamy of calling it Christmas.

And let those of us who bear His name think nothing of so much importance as our gif for Jesus and His gift for us.

Because we cannot equal a friend's gift we do not refrain from bestowing anything in return, so when God offers Himself in our Christmas communion let us present such a gift as we are able. A heart cleansed by penitence, broken and contrite by confession of its sin, adorned with renewed habits of virtue, warmed by the rekindled desire of a share in His love, He will not refuse.

That would be a Christmas to be remembered for God would not allow us to outdo Him in generosity.

Out, then, with those troublesome guests we have so long welcomed—the world, the flesh and the devil—let there be "room for Him in the Inn."

Missions.

Do wealthy parishes pay more than their share for the general work of the Church? If they persist in making this claim let them prove it by publishing the amount of personal income of their wealthy members, together with the amount of collections, salary of rector, and let that be compared with a similar statement of St. Clement's. For example, a Missionary Bishop has made a comparison recently of the money given by a wealthy parish of Philadelphia and that given by St. Clement's. The other congregation at a conservative estimate represents, we are told, ten million dollars of yearly income, and according to the old law one million would belong to charitable and religious uses; the receipts last year according to report were $45,000—does that represent a very generous spirit? Does it bear comparison with $20,000 given at St. Clement's? $20,104.61 was the total of receipts last year in this parish, and $3,678.03 went for objects not parochial; $5,413.53 for improvements and payments of old debts; $1,051.92 for the poor; $1,390.33 for endowment; not a very bad showing. But contrast the spiritual work and influence, and we venture to say that the record will not be as discreditable to St. Clement's as the prelate seemed to think. We do not spend any more on vestments for instance than is spent in the rectories of some fashionable parishes on making feasts for those who don't need them and purchasing costly garments for members of the clerical families. The conditions that have been made for us, have resulted in the individuals belonging to this parish, giving directly to the charities in which they are interested and so St. Clement's gets no credit. Some things we have been able to do. For twenty-one years we have entirely supported a religious house (All Saints Sisters of the Poor). Most of the time it was the only one in the whole State. Last year we raised the money which allows the acquisition of a property for them. St. Clement's Hospital was almost entirely a parochial affair and had to be given up because individuals would not give to any charity connected with St. Clement's. The Sea Shore Home at Point Pleasant is another outside work maintained by St. Clement's people.

In the matter of services, we have not only provided for our own, but many people from all over the city, while the teaching of St. Clement's has influenced the whole Church.

The Clergy at St. Clement's are called upon to advise and counsel very many people who do not feel they can go to their own rectors, and such persons gladly take advantage of the Sacrament of Penance at St. Clement's in the summer time when the Clergy of these "generous churches" are not in Philadelphia, their houses and churches being closed. The Church at Twentieth and Cherry and the Clergy House are open, and the people know where to come. In all the mission field, the heavy hand of the mission house body is felt, and these same generous persons who aid and abet all sorts of protestant eccentricity compel repression of any Catholic tendency. If we look at diocesan policy, we do not find the Board of Missions appropriates largely for the work at St. Elisabeth's or St. John Chrysostom, or show any particular interest in raising the money to build these churches, while we do find very special interest in missions placed unnecessarily near these two mission works.

Parish Notes.

The silver Pyx, the property of the society of St. John Ev., has been sent to Boston.

The year's mind of John Neill was said in the Crypt Chapel on Monday, December 11.

A piece of lace, hand-made, for Credence of Crypt Chapel has been given, a thank-offering.

15 persons have given $70.75 for the Children's Fund, not as many or as much as last year.

Rev. V. B. Lucas has kindly prepared a design for triptych to go over the Altar of St. Katharine, and we hope some time that it may be made and put in place.

The year's mind of the Sister Georgina of All Saints was said in the Crypt Chapel on Friday, December 22.

Generous response has come to the appeals for donations for flowers for the Altar and dinners for the poor.

The anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Stewart Stone, Priest, was said on Tuesday, December 12.

Balance balls have been placed for the Sanctuary Lamps. This will enable the Lamps to be attended to more easily.

A very handsome old bracelet, set curiously with precious stones, has been given to be used as a Morse for purple Cope.

The old Mission House, 2036 Cherry street, has been vacated and the lower part of the new house will be used for mission purposes.

We have again to thank the kind friend, not of St. Clement's congregation, who has given a crucifix in loving memory of her little one. It bears this inscription: ✠ Eleanor, 29th Oct., 1895–31st July, 1897.

A very handsome Lavabo Basin jewelled, "in loving memory of Henry Hiram Ketchum," has been given for use at St. Katharine's Altar. It was blessed at the midnight Mass on Christmas and used for the first time.

We think that the following extract from the annual report of the University Club of this city may be of interest.

"On December 11, 1898, John Neill died very suddenly. No notice of any deceased member has heretofore appeared in a report of the Club, but the Board feel that in this case the older members at least will expect some mention to be made of Mr. Neill's death. He was practically the founder of the Club, and during the eighteen years of its existence, at every critical point in its history, his energy, enthusiasm and wise counsel have been enlisted in its behalf. His loss was a personal breveament to very many members of the Club, and has been seriously felt in the conduct of its affairs."

Burials.

Dec. 16. Mary Bustard.
23. Emily Barclay.

Emily Barclay—R. I. P.

Suddenly her soul was called to meet God on Wednesday, December 20. On Saturday a requiem was said in the Crypt Chapel for the repose of her soul and later the burial office was said in the Church. "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed."

The New Altar Cross.

The Cross has been made from the same pattern as the one which stood so long on the Altar, and is the work of the firm Reinhold G. Ledig, who made the original one. A beautiful Corpus, the work of the Gorham Manufacturing Company of New York, has been added and the inscription on the base is as follows: ✠ A. M. D. G. In honor of Saint Clement. In pious memory of John Neill, a Vestryman of this Parish, XI December MDCCCXCVIII. R. I. P. The Cross is the last gift of a faithful and devoted communicant of the parish, Miss Emily Barclay, who gave the original Cross. It was finished in time to be blessed at the Requiem that was said for the repose of her soul, and placed on the Altar in time for her funeral services. For thirty years almost she has worshipped here, "her prayers and alms have gone up before God;" her piety was of the Divine pattern not to be seen of men. May God refresh her soul and bring her to a joyful resurrection. The Christmas Crib was also her gift. With her indeed it has been from the manger to the cross.

Christmastide at St. Clement's.

It was when all things were in quiet silence the Eternal Word came down, and our festival has partaken of that quiet spiritual quality; a deep mysterious earnestness seemed to pervade the whole spiritual preparations; 334 communions, a great many confessions are the outward sign and token of all. May God keep us in His peace and help us to extend His own peace in our lives "Evermore and evermore." The members of St. Vincent's Guild, began the final work on the decorations on Sunday afternoon, without a break or jar the preparations went on, and by eight o'clock screen, baldachino and banners were all in place. The flowers for the Altar were made ready by those who so lovingly fulfill this privilege, the Altars were decked in festal array—at eight o'clock the office was sung to usher in the Nativity—the choir doing their willing service; it is a mark of St. Clement's that the reverential spirit is never lacking, the services are intended as worship, offered to Almighty God, and no one can help but notice this; it is "our use."

The services on Christmas Day were well attended, Mass was said at midnight; 6, 7, 8, 9.15. At 11 o'clock there was High Mass, the Choir singing Stainer's Mass in A. Many came to share the worship, to answer by their presence the invitation sent by God. May God pardon and turn those who did not come.

The Altar Cross.

F. Page, Superior of the Society of St. John Evangelist has written asking the Vestry to accept the gift of the new Cross for the Altar as "an expression of the affection that the S. S. J. E. feels for St. Clement's." It seems even before the expression of appreciation that the Vestry will no doubt convey in response to this most gracious and generous offer, that we should immediately put on record our joy at this new evidence of the close union of the parish and the Society. As was stated in our last number, provision had already been made and a new Cross ordered, the gift of the same person who gave the one that has so long been on the Altar, while this prevents the acceptance of Fr. Page's offer, we nevertheless value the affectionate spirit that has so promptly taken such loving advantage of our distress. It has often seemed that members of the parish who have received their knowledge of Catholic truth and vision of the supernatural life through the ministrations of S.S.J.E. should unite in placing some evidence in St. Clement's of their grateful love, which would be as well a witness of the spiritual change that the Society's work caused in this city, diocese and country. The great struggles we have had to make to rescue the parish from the burden of debt has rightly absorbed our best energies, but with this completed we may well look forward to putting up some fitting memorial of the work of the S. S. J. E.

The Year of Jubilee.

The last year of a wonderful century surely deserves the attention of even careless people. The year upon which we now enter marks the close of one of the greatest periods of the world's life. It is right that christian people should pause and consider the benefits they have obtained, the advantages they have received, remembering that God is the giver of all good and perfect gifts. It has seemed proper that after the custom of older times the year should be marked with special devotion, a more solemn and serious keeping of days, a more thankful memory of splendid mercies in the past, a sincere and hearty acknowledgement of the guiding hand and protecting care of Almighty God. Catholics all over the world will keep it as an "Holy Year," a year of jubilee. Ought not every one begin the year with a good Communion, made after careful Confession of sin and in this way dedicate themselves anew to the service of God? Then a more constant attendance at the offering of the Holy Sacrifice during the year as an outward evidence of the heart's desire to live in the power of the world to come.

Exhibition of Vestments.

The exhibition of the vestments and sacred vessels belonging to the parish, took place during St. Clement's-tide and was attended by a number of people both of the congregation and outside who are interested in such things. The preparations and arrangements were made by the Altar Guild. Miss Davis the instructress of the Guild kindly loaned an Ecce Homo which she has just completed, it attracted much attention. The new Hood for the violet Cope, the work of one of the members of the Guild, was well worthy of interest and admiration, although not quite finished, the design being by one of St. Vincent's Guild. A design for Hood and Morse for the new green Cope was shown for the first time. The Altar Guild has a great deal of work on hand both for the parish as well as for gifts and orders, and a number of the members are working hard.

The Christmas Creche.

Dear pleading hands of the Christ-Child
What is the treasure ye seek?
Shepherds have come to adore Thee
Bearing gifts lowly and meek.

Kings from the East of their riches
Offer myrrh, incense and gold,
What further gift in its fulness
Longest Thy heart to enfold?

Mary and Joseph are standing
Near to the side of Thy Throne,
Not upon them art Thou gazing
But into my eyes alone.

What can I give that will please Thee
To Whom the whole world is small?
Only the heart that Thou madest
Which hears and answers Thy call.

Comprehensiveness.

An artist standing on the shore of a rock bound harbor might lose himself in admiration of the picturesque outline of the crags and peaks before him, but the sailor acquainted with more practical realities could not view it from his incoming vessel with any other feeling but that of apprehension and anxiety.

We fear there are many in the Episcopal Church who delight more in what may be called the picturesque than the real and practical. We are led to this belief by the absurd laudation poured fourth on all sides in honor of the "comprehensiveness" of the Episcopal Church. Even Bishops burn Incense before this shrine without any regard to the notorious "Opinion."

Perhaps such persons are afflicted with intellectual color-blindness and mistake "comprehensiveness" for Catholicity, at any rate it is time a protest was made.

To the loyal son of the Church there is nothing gratifying in the sight of a member of the American Unitarian Association, or a professor in a Presbyterian divinity school putting on the sheep's clothing of an affiliation with the Episcopal Church while continuing the work of destroying the flock.

We may go further and emphatically state that we do not for a moment hold that it is for the good of the Church or the glory of God that all kinds of belief and human interpretations of the unchangeable Faith are welcomed in our midst, yet this is the ordinary cause of joy expressed by many. "There is room for all" is their self-satisfied remark. So we find a prominent New York Rector saying "when a boy his parents were low-church, his rector was high-church and his university broad-church and he is a Churchman to-day because he has discovered the Angelican religion is large enough and strong enough to include all three ways of thinking." Many who call themselves Catholics even, would be found to endorse this statement.

However, it is not and can never be true, Almighty God may tolerate very partial acceptance of His Revelation in well meaning individual souls within the bounds of His visible Catholic Church and he has also permitted large portions of the Church to fail in explicit teaching of some doctrines for a time, but denial of revealed truth and consequent discord cannot be made compatible with real life in this true fold and necessary progress in holiness. Differences in ritual and other secondary matters which depend so closely on doctrine will be easily settled when there is unity of belief.

It is not an honor to God that members of our branch of the Church refuse to accept for example the doctrines of Absolution and the Real Presence or refuse to follow the customs of Fasting, Communion and the use of Incense. The explicit formulas and canons are against them as well as the undivided voice of Christendom.

It does not further God's glory or alter facts that these human intellects have raised themselves up to instruct God as to what was needed for or suitable to man. We may pity and bear with these brethren "weak in the Faith," but we cannot count them as a glory of the Episcopal Church or pray that such comprehensiveness may continue. A certain freedom is accorded to man's intellect in the Church on what are called non-essentials, but nothing in regard to which the historic Church bears witness that God has spoken can ever be relegated to this class or be received with allowable difference of opinion. The Voice of the Church and not the intellect or preference or judgment of the individual stamps a truth as essential.

The Catholicity and unity of the Visible Church consist not in her being a via media or a gigantic collection of assorted and mutually concessive human theories or in her being broad enough to include him who states a fact and his opponent who denies it, but simply in this that God has entrusted her with an infinitely adaptable revelation of facts which every creature must accept at least, implicitly, to be saved.

This word, implicitly, gives the solution to the present anomalous condition of our portion of the Church. Her explicit witness to "the Faith once delivered" stands firm in all her authoritative utterances, her union with the rest of the Catholic Church is only outwardly severed, the whitewash of XVI Century Protestantism has ceased to encrust her walls and the revival of life corresponding to her true teaching goes on apace in the Catholic movement.

Relying then upon Him "Whose words shall not pass away" we refuse to be drawn into the admiration of this picturesque but dangerous harbor of religious belief called comprehen-sivenеss. We intend to pursue our way in patiently instructing "men of good will" and refusing Godspeed to those who hold not this doctrne until all varied teachings and practices have been reduced to and comprehended in that one alone which is consistent with the entire Prayer Book and loyal to the whole h story of the Anglican Church, viz.: the traditional Catholic faith and practice, "that we may all with one mind and one mouth glorify God even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

St. Clements.

The history of this parish shows a splendid and unique series of events, of struggles faced, and won; no other in the country has a record as extensive, and during all the time it staggered under a burden of debt. It fought with opponents, clever, numerous and well equipped; prominent clergy, distinguished laymen planned and consulted for the overthrow of the principles it stood for. No doubt many mistakes were made, but the end in view, God's glory and the spread of Catholic principles, the overthrow of Puritan prejudices and traditions, dominated everything else. People came out of curiosity and malice, as often as from a spirit of devotion, and then went forth changed—to remember what they had seen and heard—to practice what they had been taught.

The name of St. Clements, the memory of those days lingers on in many places.

We who have succeeded claim for ourselves no such prominence, we are grateful for our privileges, we desire to be faithful to our responsibilities, to be true in the Divine Spirit of Charity of our Holy Patron. Other difficulties meet us, but the same lonely isolation, calumnies and prejudices are our portion, and these things must make us all the more closely united, and devoted to the Catholic cause. The condition of affairs in England warns us that we must not expect recognition or even justice—worldly success and extended influence are the prevalent ideal and type—an unreal peace made by cowardly compromise and dishonest concessions; our duty is higher "peace with the sword," is the only policy in conflict with evil.

Donations outside the Parish.

It would be a gracious and courteous act, if members of the congregation would take the trouble to inform the Clergy of the amount of their donations to charitable work outside the Parish, that such may be included in the parochial report. Failure to do this exposes the Parish to misrepresentation and unjust criticism; and, sometimes, the Clergy to unkind and ungenerous attacks. In other congregations, such donations are given in the name of the Parish, and so a reputation for liberality is established. We know, from various published reports, that St. Clement's people give generously to many objects outside; surely, the duty to the corporate body, of which each one is a part, would suggest some responsibility to the Parish in this matter. In this connection, we would suggest that the Church of St. John Chrysostom, Twenty-eighth Street and Susquehanna Avenue, deserves some share. The Parish is in our own Convocation; receives no aid from Board of Missions or Diocesan authorities; has no wealthy laymen as patrons; is building a stately edifice for the worship of God; is doing a good work in a new and growing section of the city. A year ago, the children of the Little Catechism gave $15.00, and $25.00 was given from another source. It is hoped to send some money from children of The Catechism.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

The Crucifix for little girl of the Catechism who has been most faithful, was given to Emily Rose.

A beautiful Morse, designed by Rev. V. B. Lucas and made by Messrs. Hamilton & Diesinger, has been presented to the parish.

St. Vincent's Guild has provided an oak frame for the old parish banner. This will preserve it. It is placed on the wall of the acolyte's room.

Several packages of magazines for the guilds are gratefully acknowledged; also some partly-worn clothes, to distribute in our mission work among the poor.

A member of the congregation has made some photographs of the different Altars of the Church. Copies of these will be for sale at the Mission House, 2034 Cherry Street.

A Censer, for use at guild services and on occasions when a second one is needed, has been promised to the Church. Also, a handsome Processional Crucifix, for solemn processions.

The Bishop White Parish Library Association reports $21.00 as received from fourteen parishioners of St. Clements, through Miss A. S. Brown. Twenty-nine libraries were sent out during 1899.

St. Vincent's Guild made their Corporate Communion on Sunday, Jan. 21st; and on Monday evening, Jan. 22d (St. Vincent's Day), at seven o'clock, had their annual dinner at the Clergy House.

The Church Standard of January 20 had an article on St. Clement's Church, with photographs of the interior and exterior. We have no doubt but that many members of the congregation have seen the article.

A member of the congregation has promised his usual annual donation for education of those preparing for Holy Orders. Last year we had three donations; part was given to Nashotah, and part to General Theological Seminary.

The newspapers announce that Miss Emily Barclay left $20,000, in trust, the income to be paid to the Society of St. John the Evangelist, so long as they maintain work in this country. No further legacies are announced for charitable or religious purposes.

The Choirmaster and the men of the Choir had a night at the theatre, with a supper afterwards, on Tuesday, January 16th. From all accounts they had a very enjoyable time: the generous thought of one of the congregation made it possible.

The Vestry, at their last stated meeting, passed a resolution expressing their appreciation of the courtesy of Rev. R. L. Page, Superior S. S. J. E., in offering to present a handsome Cross to the Church, for the High Altar, as an expression of the affection S. S. J. E. feels for St. Clement's. The Secretary was instructed to forward it to the Father Superior.

The Secretary of the N. W. Convocation has given notice that $125 has been apportioned to St. Clement's for mission work in the Diocese. Any persons who are interested and desire to contribute to this purpose may give such money through the collections, marking it. It will be forwarded, if desired, with the names of the contributors, to the Treasurer. There is no other way in which the apportionment can be met. Acknowledgment will also be made in the Magazine.

The various guilds had their Christmas entertainments and treats. A large number of people sat down at the Mothers' Turkey Supper on Thursday, Dec. 28th, and appeared to have a comfortable and pleasant time. The children of the Little Catechism had their toys and candy on Wednesday, December 27th, in the afternoon; and at night the children of The Catechism enjoyed themselves very much. Holy Child, St. Nicholas, St. Katharine, St. Mary—each had their own happy time.

The trustees of the Sinking Fund have now in bank $1,770.42. They hold this for the purpose of paying the mortgage on the Parish building, which amounts to $2,400. The Accounting Warden has $6.25 in his hands. In April, $373.50 will be due this fund. This leaves only $249.53 to make up the whole amount, when the Church and Parish building will be entirely free from debt. It would be a very pleasant thing if Easter might be kept with no burden of debt.

A Failure in Philanthropy.

There is almost always a sense of pity aroused in our hearts by failure in any sphere of life, but one which involves the wreck of high ideals, especially when much sacrifice and earnest effort have been expended in striving to realize them finds an answering note of sorrow even in the most hardened.

Count Leo Tolstoi whose writings and life have attracted such wide attention as a leading exponent of the prevailing movement for bettering the human race along the lines of philanthropy, has confessed him unsuccessful and mistaken in the course he has pursued.

A man of rank and property, he had taken upon himself many of the features of the life of the peasant class, toiling in the field, cobbling his own shoes, and dressing in the plainest attire without however losing his hold upon his old advantages when he deemed it necessary to resort to them.

He may well be considered, it seems to us, as the logical and complete carrying out of the principles of the great class of work being done by an increasing number of men and women in college settlements, slum societies, people's clubs, etc. Nay, they are almost honored to have a man of such sacrifice and devotion placed as their example.

And his religion, if such it can be called, was also nearly identically theirs. He had reduced his creed practically to the one tenet, "Be thou warmed and fed." Or translated at greater length and with fuller justice to his views, "From thy position of enlightenment and knowledge stoop thyself down to inspire thy brother with the desire of raising the outward hardness of his life toward thine own end."

Doctrine and dogma with their unpleasant differences are eliminated from this scheme of universal brotherhood. "Elevate the masses," "do all the good you can to your fellow-men"—this is the key of a true life and the solution of its perplexing problems.

In Count Tolstoi's case this superiority to the plans and history of the Catholic Church which has patiently been attempting this same task in the world since Her Master's departure, was emphasized by his exposition of Holy Scripture, "Give to every man that asketh of thee," and its kindred texts were in spite of the warning of the Church's example taken in exact literalness without regard to any modifying truths, when perchance the beggar was not "seeking first" nor at all "the kingdom of God and His righteousness."

On the contrary he probably was taking "great thought for what he could get to eat and drink and be clothed with," yet all the while was breaking God's Fourth Commandment deliberately, "six days shalt thou labour" and the supposed righteous man was encouraging his rebellion against God.

We give such prominence to this case because Count Tolstoi has regretfully but fully acknowledged the failure of his principles and we are convinced that he is but the prophet of all who work on similar lines.

He says the poor resent interference and knowing better things resist them. This displays the signal defect of such effort. It is after all founded on a strata of self-seeking and ignors the chief factor that must be reckoned with, namely, sin.

The Fourth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital and Colony Farm (for 1899) has been received. We quote from the report of the President, Dr. Sinkler:

"The building at Cherry and Lambert Streets, which was occupied by us as a hospital before the opening of the Farm, has been sold to the "Sisters of All Saints," who have only recently completed arrangements for the purchase of the building. The price obtained for it was only a nominal one, and was but little in excess of the mortgage upon the property. It seemed eminently fitting that this Society should have the opportunity of taking the building at a low figure, in view of the fact that their work is solely connected with St. Clement's Church, the congregation of which originally purchased the building and made considerable expenditures in adapting it for hospital uses. Moreover it was turned over by them to the merged corporation of the Colony Farm for Epileptics and the Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital without consideration.

Rogation Intercessions.

Continued intercessions will be kept up on the Rogation Days beginning with the Mass on Monday May 21st, and lasting until 6 A. M. on Ascension Day. It is hoped that every member of the congregation will share this privilege by promising to make the intercessions at a definite time. Members of the Guild of St. Vincent always undertake the night hours.

Parish Notes.

The amount in hand for burial lot is $233.10.

409 communions were made on Easter Day.

357 Communion Cards were sent in before Easter.

$2,092.68 was received for all purposes at Easter.

Father Sargent preached in the evening of Palm Sunday.

All the roofs of the church buildings have been put in good order.

The new Censer is of brass, silver-plated, of same size and pattern as the old one.

The new violet veil, burse and amice apparels were finished by and worn on Palm Sunday.

The fund for paying the Mortgage ($2,000) on the Clergy House now amounts to $95.72.

The money for religious privileges should be paid before we squander in amusements, luxuries or trifles.

The attendance at the various services, particularly the Masses, during Passiontide was very satisfactory.

The candles for the Altar of Our Lady on Maundy Thursday and Eastertide were the gift of a communicant.

Applications for Sea Shore Home are to be made on Tuesdays in May, 3 to 5 P. M., at All Saints Mission House.

Retreat for St. Vincent's Guild took place on Passion Sunday, and for St. Mary's Guild on Thursday in Passion week.

The Paschal Candle was in loving memory of a faithful communicant, the decoration was an Easter gift of another communicant.

St. Nicholas Guild had their last meeting for this year on Saturday, April 21st. Each boy was made happy by a box of chocolates.

The beautiful new Hood for violet cope is the loving work and gift of a communicant. It was used on Palm Sunday and Easter Day.

On Thursday, May 3rd, (Invention of the Holy Cross) there will be an extra mass at 6.30, particularly for members of the Guild of the Holy Cross.

The 9.30 Mass on Thursday, April 5th, could not be said as the Priest who was to celebrate was taken ill just before, and no other Priest was fasting.

Rev. A. W. Doran, who was ill during the latter part of Lent, was able to be in church on Easter Day, and expects soon to resume his duties in the Parish.

The collections on Ascension Day will be for Sea Shore Home. Several packages of magazines and papers are gratefully acknowledged, also some packages of clothing.

The 116th Annual Convention of the Diocese of Pennsylvania will be held in the Church of St. Luke-Epiphany on Tuesday 15th day of May, 1900, at 10 A. M.

Only 357 cards for Easter Communion were filled out and handed in More than half of the people through carelessness neglected what they were particularly asked to do.

A large number of people gave for the Easter flowers, many putting money in the box in the church corridor. Subscriptions, $88.71; donations $39.99; total, $128.70.

Guild of Holy Child had their Easter office on Saturday, April 21. Later they had ice cream and cake together with a pot of geranium, the gift of a kind friend "in memory of Eleanor."

The trees and vines about the church have all been trimmed, the gardens made ready, a new poplar tree planted by the side of church and a willow tree in the corner of the south garden.

The Seashore Home reports are in the hands of the printer; over $100 has come from collecting cards and jugs this Easter. Those who have not yet made returns will please do so as soon as possible.

Flowers for church gardens would be very acceptable—particularly we would like—an apple tree, (we already have a cherry tree), a tulip tree, lilac and hydrangea bushes. The gift of some roots of Pampa grass is hereby gratefully acknowledged.

Persons desiring to be considered members of the congregation are asked to present letters of transfer—those who are able ought to contribute regularly to the support of the services, either by renting pews, using envelopes or promising a certain sum to be paid at a definite time.

A Priest, Rev. S. H. Meade, M. D., has sent us the following articles to give to some needy mission. We have sent them to St. James Church, Ocala, Diocese of So. Florida, Rev. A. C. Coombs, who formerly worked at St. Augustine's, Boston, under the S. S. J. E.: Chalice, 3 Cruets, Pall, 4 Purificators, 3 Burses and Veils, 4 Preaching Stoles, 3 Linen Maniples, Baptismal Napkin, Biretta, etc.

The Easter Music.

On Easter Day the music and the manner of its rendition was such as would make one realize throughout that it was intended and purposed for the Glory of God, each member of the choir plainly doing his best for the success of the whole service, and the music which was beautifully and heartily sung had throughout the spirit of praise and adoration. C. Warwick Jordan's Mass in E was sung in this part of the country for the first time and is what one would look for from the pen of the great Gregorian scholar, full of beautiful harmony and soul appealing expressions, and grand in its devotion.

At Even-song the choir again rendered a service better than any our present choir has yet done. Berthold Tours Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in D were beautifully sung, and Gounod's Festal Te Deum in C ended a day that reflects credit to our sincere Choir Master and Organist, Mr. Goodwin. To do even a little in the great Service is the joy of any christian; how great therefore can be the pleasure of Mr. Goodwin, the soloists and the choir, in feeling and knowing that their services were a success and a help to the worshippers assembled. Basil Downey and Stanley Cousley, the solo sopranos, and Theodore Homan, solo alto, sang very well and the knowledge and realization of it rewards them. Mr. H. W. Kneedler, tenor solo, who has sung in St. Clement's for nearly thirty years has seldom done better or used more expression; Mr. F. G. Hill and Mr. Harry Smith, solo bassos, fulfilled their parts with a smoothness that fitted in with the balance of the service. Mention also is made of the accompaniment on the organ which showed what a magnificent instrument we have when properly played. The music was repeated on Low Sunday.

"Christians of Other Names."

"Other Names," indeed, but our religion teaches us there is only one Name and it is above every other name, whether that be Luther, Knox, Calvin, Briggs, Potter. We may well pray for "grace that being not like children, carried away with every blast of vain doctrine, we may be established in the truth of Thy Holy Gospel."

"Devotional Puerilities."

What is regarded by Roman Catholics as a kind of higher criticism has broken out in their Church in this country. It has taken the form of objection by some Catholics to certain devotional practices of the Church. One of the severest critics so far is the Northwestern Chronicle, a Catholic journal published in St. Paul, Minn., the diocese of Archbishop Ireland. Its latest number says:

"How often one hears from prospective converts such an expression as this: 'I know that it would be impossible for me to grasp and follow all the rules and devotions of the Catholic Church.' The impression seems to prevail that Catholicity is a mere mass of minute regulations and a lengthening labyrinth of new devotions. The old ship is so covered with bunting and trimmings that its strength and grandeur are hidden from view. Within recent years devotions have sprung up with bewildering rapidity, and in some respects to the positive detriment of religion. The strong, manly side of Catholicity is apparently submerged for the moment under the passing waves of devotional puerilities. Every day new saints are rediscovered, new shrines are erected, new schemes of 'piety' are devised, to the distraction of those who relish, most of all, the old devotion to God, to the blessed Virgin, to the saints of the litany, and that waning devotion of the fifty-two Sundays.

"The devotion of St. Anthony's bread may serve to illustrate how far the epidemic of ecclesiastical novelty has travelled. About ten years ago, the story goes, a young woman had difficulty in opening the door of her little shop. In her distress she promised a definite amount of bread to St. Anthony for the poor, provided he would open the stubborn door for her. The lock immediately responded to the pressure of the key. If the door had opened of itself without the encouragement of the key, the miracle would have been more striking; but Miss Bouffier was thoroughly convinced that good St. Anthony responded to her rather unimportant request. From this incident sprang the devotion to St. Anthony's bread. Today it is known in all parts of the world.

"We have before us books, pamphlets and magazines dealing with this subject, and all agree in essential features. The vital point in the new devotion seems to be the fulfillment of promises made to St. Anthony. Innumerable stories are related to show that failure in this respect is bound to make a fiasco of the whole thing. For instance, a lady loses her umbrella, offers St. Anthony a dollar's worth of bread for restoring it, revokes her promise and immediately loses the precious thing once more. Another woman enlists St. Anthony's interest in the cure of her drinking husband on the promise of a quantity of bread daily. The thoughtless woman omits her Sunday dole and learns to her dismay that her husband invariably gets drunk every Sunday. However, the cure is made complete when the afflicted wife gives a double allowance of bread on Mondays.

"This devotion seems to be concerned chiefly with temporal affairs. It is thoroughly commercial in character—a distinctively C. O. D. institution. All that may be said in its favor is that it teaches a selfish kind of charity—an earthy charity that has an eye for the main chance. There is nothing spiritual, elevating or Christian about it. St. Anthony is bargained with as pagans are wont to approach and reproach their deities. And it is by such devotions as this (for this is merely an illustration) that the modern world is to be converted to Catholicity! How can one imagine a healthy man of intellect subscribing to practices which appear to him utterly childish? As these are put forward and insisted upon as true Catholicity, he is disposed to put aside the system to which they adhere.

"The church should rid itself of these puerile and superstitious inventions. We have too many bedizened infants, too many revolving candle-machines, too many boxes for the coin of the credulous, and too little faith in God and too little love for the blessed sacraments.—New York Sun.

A Congregation of Rites.

We have had one all the while and did not know it; the successful editor of the Churchman and the learned editor of the Church Standard are in the business and there is no appeal; even the Presiding Bishop must report to them, rather than to his brethren of the Episcopal rank, when they call him to account directly or indirectly, that they may publish, over his own signature, a disavowal of the things they disapprove or condemn. Copes and mitres constitute the "ritual anarchy." Copes are condemned in spite of the fact that the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishops of London, Lincoln, Winchester, not to speak of Dean Farrar or such juvenile American prelates as the Bishops of Springfield, Newark, Delaware and others wear these so-called "R. C." vestments and mitres: To pass by the report of Bishops Coxe, Doane and Potter, Bishops Seabury and Claggett wore them on their heads and not on their note paper. It is too late; people have grown accustomed to Bishops properly vested in stained-glass windows and ecclesiastical buildings, and they will not be afraid of them in actual life so vested.

One thing brought out at a recent conference in Fulham, called the "Round Table" was: that Catholics, like Lord Halifax, knew what they believed and could state it in unmistakeable terms, content not to seek curiously for explanations, while others had explanations, reasons, excuses, apologies.

LORD HALIFAX.

It has been authoritatively denied that Lord Halifax has joined, or intends to join, the Roman Communion.

Giving Without Principle.

People are generous in giving to and for what appeals to them and interests them, without regard to the wisdom and benefit. People all have their "pet" charities and fads, but a very casual study of appeals and some experience of charitable and institutional work deepen that idea of unwise and careless management, unnecessary expenditure, almost reckless extravagance—a great part of funds going out in this way—and pathetic appeals quickly responded to by the unheeding and thoughtless, who imagine that they are aiding in a good work. There are many charitable associations that appeal, whose primary object, although not the official one, is the satisfying of a grudge, the exploitation of self-will, a vantage point to interfere, a means to give annoyance.

In this congregation are many people who give to all sorts of outside objects without regard to their worthiness, and it is more than a mere Christian courtesy that your clergy should be aware of the objects that interest and enlist your sympathy and generosity. You are lacking in the filial respect that belongs to their office and responsibility when you please yourself. You are not only stewards of your means, but the priests placed over you in the Lord have to watch as those who must give account of you. Again, you are asked either to send your subscriptions and gifts (designated) through the clergy or to acquaint them with the fact. If you have not sufficient confidence in their judgment, it is time that you have the oversight of those whose office you respect. This appeal has been made several times, and few have responded, and some have made it the occasion of angry and bitter complaint.

Parish Notes.

Twenty-seven persons have given for the Children's Fund.

Eighteen persons have given toward the cost of Tower Cross.

The Clergy and Sisters are very grateful for many kind remembrances.

S. Lawrence Guild acknowledges, with many thanks, two bundles of clothing from Mrs. Osborne.

The Silver Crucifix "in memory of Eleanor," given each year by a friend, is awarded to Edith Downey.

It is hoped hereafter to publish each month acknowledgment of donations for all purposes.

Candles and olive oil have been given by one who generously supplies both of these for the Crypt Chapel.

We sincerely regret that Mr. Hampton leaves the Choir on January 1st to return to his old position at St. Peter's.

Generous response has been made to the appeal of the Sisters to enable them to furnish Christmas dinners to the worthy poor.

Faithful members of the Altar Guild have given much extra time that promises and orders might be completed in time for Christmas.

There has been an encouraging return to privileges by members of St. Mary's Guild—cheerful service in cleaning the sanctuary.

The Treasurer of the Corporation of All Saints Sisters of the Poor hopes to make a complete statement of all money received and the manner of expenditure.

Thirty-five of the Magazine's subscribers are notified this month that their subscriptions have expired. If you are one of the number, kindly send renewal at once.

Several members of the Guilds have had to return their medals because they were unwilling to be faithful to their spiritual duties—attendance at Mass and receiving Holy Communion.

The legacy of Miss Julia Dunlap was paid by the executors on Dec. 1st, and put to the credit of the Endowment Fund. After the payment of inheritance tax, the amount was $476.25.

Anniversary Masses were said during the month as follows: 27th Nov., Sarah Herr; 11th Dec., John Neill; 12th Dec., Stewart Stone, Priest; 20th Dec., Emily Barclay; 22d Dec., Sister Georgina, of All Saints.

The Sisters gave out 6 Thanksgiving dinners and arranged for over 30 Christmas dinners. $50 was added to the Poor Fund—the proceeds of Parish Tea—and 46 persons gave $128 for Christmas dinners and poor relief.

The members of St. Vincent's Guild have unselfishly given of their time and labor in the matter of the Christmas preparations and decorations, and other people have given of their time and skill, that all things might be in readiness for our Christmas joy.

Mass will be said at midnight to usher in the New Century, offering that one acceptable act of worship to Almighty God on behalf of His Church and our Country. Request must be made for permission to receive Holy Communion at that time, and those who receive permission should observe a six hours' fast of devotion.

The appeal made in the April MAGAZINE to raise a Sanctuary Fund as a memorial of the work of the S. S. J. E. is withdrawn, as it has failed to awaken any interest. Any who gave money for such memorial may have it back, and the fund will continue for the decoration of the Sanctuary. Only three or four gave for S. S. J. E.

The collection on Sunday morning, Jan. 20th, at the Solemn Mass, by resolution of the Vestry, will be for mission work in Philadelphia outside St. Clement's Parish. The Rev. M. L. Cowl, C.S.S.S., will preach at that time on behalf of the object, and it is hoped the response will be a generous one. Due notice will be given as to the division of the money.

The Advertisements.

We would again request our readers to patronize, as far as possible, those whose advertisements appear on our pages. We advertise none but reliable parties. They are helping us sustain our paper, but they have motives other than the purely philanthropic—they want and expect some return; please mention St. Clement's Magazine.

Sanctuary Fund, Etc.

Although the appeal for a memorial of the work of S. S. J. E. has been withdrawn, yet we hope only greater efforts may be made to increase the fund for finishing the walls with marble, putting in stone Credence, Piscina and Sedilia. One of these might well serve as appropriate memorial of S. S. J. E. Eventually we would wish to have a stone Altar and Baldachino after the pattern of the one at San Clemente, Rome. It may be years before this can be realized, but it may be done bit by bit.

The Clergy House Fund has reached over $3000, and $300 more is available for it. The most satisfactory plan would seem to be to sell 2026 and build an entirely new building on Twentieth street front, the lower part to serve for Choir and Acolyte's rooms with Clergy offices and Sacristy, and upper part for appartments for Clergy; this must be carefully thought about. The practical part is, it does away with the present west end arrangement, carrying of vestments, etc., back and forth, the walk of Choir before and after every service, and would reserve processions for their proper place at festal and penitential times. The one objection of the south garden, etc., ought not to have any real weight. To carry this out we shall need $10,000 at least. Nearly $450 must be given to make up sum of mortgage, besides amount set aside by Vestry on April 1st, next.

Caution.

Commercial houses are soliciting orders for wafers, but the Rev. Clergy ought to be very careful and know that they are properly and carefully made. "Religious" and devout women ought alone to be entrusted with such work. Wafers may be obtained at All Saints Mission House, Cherry and Lambert streets, Philadelphia.

The Passing of the "Magpie."

The above is a term sometimes used for the long, full, black satin garment worn by those of Episcopal rank—hideous, ugly and unworthy in every way. Some with "ritualistic" proclivities had the garment made of scarlet or purple stuff; but not even three centuries and more of use could make it a correct and proper garment in the Church of the Living God. Now it is going the way of its relative, the Geneva Gown, and will soon have fallen into disuse, and none will mourn its loss. That big picture in an Arch street shop was enough to discredit it—put it out of fashion. This beautiful expanse of funereal hue has been the P. E. fetich. Of course its votaries cry out as to the peril of such loss, but so did some Ephesians of earlier days; perhaps, after all, their modern "craft" is in danger.

Christmas at St. Clement's.

Such a holy, blessed memory to have of this jubilee! The people have indeed been willing offerings in this Day of the Lord's power. The clergy were busy ministering the Sacrament of Penance, and we feel confident that of the 363 who made their communion at our altars or elsewhere that it was with dispositions of holy, humble love and devotion. Vespers were sung in St. John's Chapel, as also the midnight Mass; the low Masses at 6, 7 and 8 were well attended; the Children's Mass at 9.15 and the Solemn Mass did not have as many worshippers as was fitting. The Choir, under Mr. W. A. Goodwin, again sang Mozart's 1st Mass in C with the reverence that kindled and assisted devotion; every man's and boy's heart was in it, and one felt it and was thankful there was no straining after an untrue and unreal art. It was part of the whole act of worship, the holy Sacrifice of the Mass—for God's glory, not people's amusement.

Revs. A. W. Doran, C. C. Quin and F. D. Ward were the sacred ministers. The Christmas Hymns, "Of the Father's Love," "Adeste Fideles," "While Shepherds Watched," "God from on High" and "Hark, the Herald Angels" were sung by all the people with glad voice.

Nowhere else is there a more willing number of helpers to make the necessary preparations for a festival. The work that never shows no one knows. A great part of the burden falls on St. Vincent's Guild, and the clergy know well that there is no risk of failure in any of their cheerful labors, while the Sisters fully realize that in all the many things of which they have the care and charge there is no lack of cheerful service.

Generous members of the congregation and some others provided liberally for the Clergy and Sisters.

The New Century.

How frequently these words are in men's mouths just now and how little really do they penetrate the heart!

When we are called upon to lay away a dead body we look upon it as a solemn and serious occasion, yet how vastly more invested with solemnity should be the termination of the cycle of one hundred years. Indeed, the students of history have endeavored to impress this upon us by assigning almost a personality to the group of years we call a century, speaking of its characteristic accomplishments, failures, etc., as though it were a living creature that had influenced us and that we had influenced in turn.

Yet we should be wrong if we said that men were altogether lacking in serious feeling at the end of one century and the beginning of another. The occasion does sober all thinking men with its message of the swift flight of human existence. But the warning fails to sink deep enough.

The divisions of time on the surface appear artificial, but they are in truth a God-given mercy. Day and night, week, month and year, rest directly upon His ordinance as expressed in the first and eighth chapters of the Book of Genesis. They are periods adapted to the inherent constitution of man's nature, as has been proven by every attempt to apply a different scheme of divisions.

The passing of the century mark, then, must not only arouse us to grieve over the rapid flight of time as a shock to pride because it reveals our littleness, but since "our times are in His Hand," there must be devout repentance for the ill use of past years and earnest resolutions to consecrate the new epoch to His service.

We read of a movement to plant huge crosses on nineteen of the tallest mountain peaks of Italy as a memorial of Christ's rule over the Nineteenth Century. But alas! how many fields were left unconquered for Him, and as the new century opens before us how many enemies are gathering to attack His kingdom.

We are leaving a century crowded full of most astonishing inventions wonderful increase of knowledge, mighty application of the laws of organization and combination which, while proceeding from the enlightenment given through the Christian Church by God, have not led men always to God. In the Church, too, there have been movements of life and of strength, but as we face the open door of the Twentieth Century can we see down its vista the signs of Christ's Second Coming?

That question rests upon us as Christians. We see iniquity abounding, for indifference is the blackest iniquity; we perceive eyes and hearts blinded by the abundance of material prosperity; we behold the dreadful weed-like growth of sects calling themselves Christian; we are informed of wolves from within devouring the Christian flock. These and numerous other signs we are aware of, but we practically say let some one else see to it; the responsibility is not mine.

Yes, but the "privilege" is ours. It will be a stirring century. God grant that nothing be more stirred than the Church. It will be a wonderful age to live in. God grant our eyes may see the greatest wonders in His kingdom. It will be an age of stern and awful conflict. God grant we may strike our small blows for truth and right.

We have prayed "Thy Kingdom come" unceasingly, but we have let others give themselves to work out our prayer. Oh, for some of the enthusiasm of the old days. Oh, that we all might feel ashamed that those who fight under less glorious standards should enter the new century with more zeal and vigor than we who call ourselves Catholic Christians.

Christian Endeavour.

Speaking of so-called undenominational movements, the Church Times says: "We note the movement called Christian Endeavour. This appears to us—we mean to speak with all frankness—thoroughly mischievous. It is an organization of social amusements for the lower middle class, with that thin veneer of religious sentiment laid over it which forms a ready substitute for true religion." It has indifferentism as its underlying principle, and subordinates all considerations, even the most important, for one overmastering idea. They have a perfectly genuine passion and enthusiasm for a vague something—the evangelization of the world. They would ignore sin and sacraments; in fact, do not seem to be aware that there is such a thing as revealed religion, with rooted foundations and unalterable duties.

Mischief Makers.

Perhaps every association of people has a certain number of those who delight in making trouble—creating difficulties, who openly boast that is their intention. "Busybodies" is a term used of them by Holy Scripture. No time or object is too sacred for the virulence of their tongues, the insolence of their attacks. Such need to be warned from time to time, that they may repent, recognize the hideous nature of their character, before they do overmuch damage. Beware of such. We are glad to see the Bishop of New York warning the clergy against the danger of people making use of them in matters for which they were not ordained. It is usually because people fail to rule that they attempt to ruin. Another cause of such disaffection is an unrecognized, rejected vocation, the memory of which must be beaten out, stifled or hushed.

Holy Cross Monastery.

The Order of the Holy Cross, whose house is now at Westminster, Md., have bought land at West Park, N. Y., for a monastery, and are trying to raise money to erect the necessary buildings. Any donation, however small, will be received by the Clergy and forwarded to the Bursar of the Order.

The Bishop of Maryland, it may be remembered, makes it an Episcopal principle to treat those who believe in the Catholic Religion with unreasonable severity, studied discourtesy and arbitrary intolerance; but, of course, "if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?"

Liturgical Uniformity.

The attacks of heresy in the primitive Church were the direct cause of the explicit statements of doctrine which she put forth for the benefit and protection of her children.

So in these latter days the attacks of unbelievers upon the restorations of the ritual expression of doctrine in the Anglican Church have, in spite of the unpleasantness and distress, brought to pass a definite and clear understanding upon what the foundations of our ceremonial and liturgical laws are laid.

A quarter of a century ago the painful miscarriages of justice in ecclesiastical matters were really excusable in part by reason of ignorance, and even priests, in their well-meaning endeavors to "return to the old faiths," being influenced often more than they perceived by preference rather than real law, and ancient or universal custom, produced a confusion that to the casual observer seemed discord.

The storm has cleared the atmosphere immensely. Contest led to study and study to clearer knowledge, so that we of the present generation have our liturgical, ceremonial and canonical experts unknown to our fathers. This enables us to dispense with the services of a lot of very willing, but utterly incompetent, individuals from every walk of life, who feeling themselves called to greatness, thought they saw a field where it could be secured without much knowledge or effort at the expense of the Church.

The consecration of Bishop Weller at Fon-du-Lac has been one of the last instances where agitation and onslaught have worked much good.

The charge that the vestments used and the liturgical interpolations made on that occasion were unlawful brought out the old spectre: have we a liturgical or ceremonial law? In the words of a contemporary we may venture to assert that it has been put to rest where it will not bother any one for some time.

But first, is "this historic Church of ours" so broad that she had no law of uniformity, but every member may do as belikes him, which seems to be the practice if not the belief of some of our brethren? "Against the first objection, it must be said" no law, no illegality. But, secondly, if "this Church of ours" be in any real sense an historic Church her ceremonial law is an integral part of her history.

Has the Church of England a ceremonial law or a liturgical law? The first Prayer Book of King Edward the VI and the Ornaments Rubric are so well known we scarcely need to mention other sources, and as these referred to the days of the undivided Church so the law which they perpetuated is a pillar that is not to be set up in isolation from the great temple of the Catholic Church, but to be viewed always in the proper setting.

The Church Review.

On Monday, January 14th, a meeting of clergy and laymen was held at St. Mark's Clergy House, through the courtesy of Dr. Mortimer. Mr. Kelway, editor of the Church Review, made a statement outlining a plan by which an Anglo-American journal was to be established. Already it had been put before a meeting in New York and later it was to be put before a meeting in Boston. The Church Review is the organ of the E. C. U.

More in the Public Eye.

"St. Clement's which used to be more in the public eye than now," is the way in which we are spoken of in an interesting article on the work of Philadelphia Churches in the Public Ledger of January 14th. It is not our desire to be "in the public eye," we neither desire to compete with the theatre, opera or variety shows, or to advertise ourselves, but we venture to say that all over the city it is well known that the Church exists, services are held, all the Sacraments are freely and willingly ministered and as a result more souls are reached, helped and strengthened than other places where it is perfectly proper and respectable to attend. As some wrote, "Then there's St. Clement's you never know what they are going to do or not going to do next." It is going to stay there—we are grateful for the splendid inheritance of the past, we mean to be true in present duties, and we intend to be faithful to future responsibilities. Put on the whole armour of God for the coming conflict.

The Bishop of Cairo.

The burial office and Mass for the repose of the soul of Bishop Hale took place at St. Mark's Church on Monday December 31st. Bishop Whitaker said the Requiem Mass, using the proper Collect, Epistle and Gospel as set forth in First Prayer Book of Edward VI. The Bishop of Springfield was also present. Bishop Hale was perhaps the best informed Ecclesiastic of our Communion in matters pertaining to the Eastern Church, it was through his influence and kind offices that the Procurator of the Holy Synod arranged for the gift of the Stones from the monastery on the site of St. Clement's martyrdom which are now the valued possession of our Parish. May the Eternal Light more and more brightly shine into his soul.

Liturgical Uniformity.

We hear much talk of loyalty to "English" law, use and practice, as if in refusal of a wider loyalty to the whole Church. Now English law, etc., can only mean Catholic law, etc., reformed, i. e. restored from what was not really Catholic, adapted in a very secondary sense to local requirements, but still Catholic before being either historically or logically English; otherwise, we set up, which many indeed do, an infallibility in England which we deny in Rome. Only the whole, the Catholic Church can be the supreme infallible arbiter of law. Well, then, the Church of England has a ceremonial law. This can hardly be impugned and its limits are gaining clearness every day. By that law Copes, Mitres, Censers, etc., are not only of permissible use but "compulsory" by the testimony of many authorities.

However, has the Church in these United States a ceremonial law? The preface of her Book of Common Prayer testifies that she is "far from intending to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline or worship, or further than local circumstances require." Judge Hoffman, Rev. Wm. White, Justice Whitlock, Burns, Gibson and Hale all hold, as expressed in the words of one, "There is a Common Law Ecclesiastical as well as our Common Law" (i. e., civil). So our loyalty to the American Church includes loyalty to our fostering mother, the Church of England, and thus to the entire Catholic Church. Vestments, then, as well as ornaments of churches and altars have their basis in law, namely, in history and in fact. The vituperation of prejudice and the preferences of individuals must eventually yield to the uniformity of this law, and. we venture to say, are yielding. A word on Rubrics: It often appears to be overlooked of how different character the Rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer are from those of the Roman Missal. In the latter they are minutely explicit, and therefore peremptorily directive; in the former, composed under the stress of revulsion from involved rules of elaborate instruction, and of composing a manual for laity as well as Clergy, the language is simplified, and ceremonial left to the knowledge of the Clergy derived from other sources. That this simplicity was taken advantage of in the later Revision, in 1552, under Protestant influence, should lead a priest to look at history before consulting the Prayer Book.

Lastly, on the subject of strictly liturgical law. In the short laudable effort to express the law of the Church in as manifest and plain a form as possible, and to free it from personal caprice, one eminent authority has taken the ground that there shall be no interpolations in or additions to the Prayer Book Offices under any conditions or circumstances. Now if there is a priest who fulfils that statement, we have a few questions to ask the oracle: Has he been asleep since the days which began the 17th century? or does he believe that (as a writer has well suggested) man was made for the Prayer Book rather than the Prayer Book for man? or does he believe that liturgy and ceremonial are to express man's faith and devotion or to throttle it?

The only position, it seems to us, that will not only exist a beautiful glass-cased theory, but be adapted to practical wants, is one which says the Prayer Book and its Rubrics shall be loyally carried out to fulfil the essential historical and Catholic purpose intended in their directions, but omission shall not be prohibition, especially when the Protestant atmosphere of these later centuries is carried back into Reformation times and unduly allowed to exclude things never intended to be excluded.

The Prayer Book and its Rubrics say nothing in discord with the Catholic Faith, thanks to God's all-wise Providence; but where "fallible men cast out too hastily some of the precious lading of the ship" (Archbishop of York), and left parts of the Faith without witness until these things are explicitly restored by authority in this Church of ours, they ought to be restored on individual responsibility, with the appeal to obeying God and His undivided Church rather than man. "If this be heaven, make the most of it." So long as Unction of the Sick and Mass for the Dead, for instance, lack authoritative form, priests must select such as they think suitable. The restoration of a proper Mass for the Feast of the Transfiguration, in 1883, is an example of obscured doctrine being reclaimed. It seems to us quite competent for other days observed in the Western Church to be restored privately, especially by religious communities who have always been allowed special privileges of that sort. Many outgrowths of devotion went through the stages private, parochial, diocesan, provincial, Catholic; they may be restored likewise. Our conclusion is that the Church in these United States has a liturgical and ceremonial law, and if those who believe the Catholic religion are faithful in their witness, she will shortly have a ceremonial and liturgical uniformity.

The Maryland Clerical Union has printed and presented a very admirable Declaration on Reservation for the Sick, we quote a part:

"The opposition on the part of some, to the restoration of the usage of reserving the Eucharist for the sick, and the cry of lawlesslesss, seems due to a lack of soundness of faith in the Incarnation. And if unsound in this fundamental doctrine, what wonder is it that they do not rightly hold the doctrine of the Real Presence of Christ's Body and Blood, after consecration under the veils of Bread and Wine; that in many of our Churches the Eucharist is not celebrated at least every Sunday; that it has been dethroned from its rightful place as the chief act of worship on Sunday, and that Morning Prayers are substituted for 'the continual remembrance of the Sacrifice of the Death of Christ.'"

We look back and think of those, who once opposed the revival of the old custom of singing the Psalter, and of using Lights, Vestments and Incense in the celebration of the Eucharist as ignorant of the primary principles of Christian worship. In like manner shall the intelligence of future generations be shocked at the unbelief of those who now oppose the Reservation of the Bread of Life for the sick and dying."

only surpassed by seeing Him "face to face" in Heaven.

"An open Church," then, is one where every day God comes to visit His people in the daily Mass, and a pathway is opened to Heaven. Daily Matins and Even-song, and occasional individual intercession does not make an "open Church." The daily offices are obligatory upon priests and religious, because of their dedication to God, but all prayer is "through Jesus Christ our Lord." Mass is the Great Prayer as well as the Close Presence. All other prayers centre around this; all other approaches to God draw their efficacy from it.

We have spoken of God's House and God's special Service, but He has also been pleased to appoint a keeper of His House, one who is called the Man of God. Other persons may perform other duties, but the Priest merely should open God's House each day by the service for which he was set apart. A truly "open Church" requires then the Man of God daily performing the Service of God in God's House. Anything else detracts from the fulness of the term. An "open Church" will soon become the House of God's people.

A Dream.

(Contributed by an humble parishoner.)

It was in the year of 1894, and I experienced a dream—a dream that to me was very solemn.

I dreamt as if I was going over to some other country, and this country was far away; and when I came down to the landing to go on the boat it had gone, and a man told me that I would have no other way to go except by water, and the distance was great. I thought to myself: how could I get there? But God was with me, as the Lord is always with my thoughts and actions. And the man told me: if I would wait, the ship would return

PHILADELPHIA, JUNE, 1901.

The Diocesan Convention.

The usual sessions were held during three days beginning on Tuesday, May 7th. A canon providing for an Archdeacon was passed, and the salary fixed at $3,000 a year. It seems a strange condition that such a large amount should be necessary in return for that burning, enthusiastic love for missions, which must be the characteristic of this important officer.

The Bishop, in his address, mentioned that the whole of the debt on St. Clement's had been paid. The usual committees were appointed or elected as well as the important officers. Some distinguished individuals seem to have a place on several committees, as well as performing the duties of several offices. Is it just to require so much from a few men, even if they are willing? In an important Diocese one place for a man is enough, and each individual ought to recognize the fact.

Only three Clerical deputies were elected for the General Convention at San Francisco. This is a sad spectacle for this honoured Diocese.

The sixty-first annual report of the Bishop White Parish Library Association has been received. Thirty grants of books were sent out. The receipts were $1,415.93, and expenditures 1,406.18. Miss A. S. Brown reports twelve subscriptions from St. Clement's amounting to $26.00.

Confirmation.

The Magazine is printed too early to contain an account of the visitation of the Bishop. The number who are expected to receive is not large; the Clergy do not regret this; every year some fall away, and very soon are tired of God's service; and it is greatly to be hoped, with the smaller number, the proportion of those who persevere may be greater. No amount of exhortation or entreaty can change the stubborn or laggard will—only God's grace. May He mercifully pity and pardon the lost erring and straying, as well as strengthen the faithful and true. It is always pathetic and sad to mark against the names of those who should be "living stones" of God's Temple, the adjective that describes present earthly condition, "lapsed," "removed," "not attending," "lost sight of." The blame rests on the individual soul that had been called, illuminated, strengthened, renewed, but fell away because of the difficulties of the way. Pray for those who are making their fresh start, that they may persevere. First Communion on Sunday June 9th, at 7 o'clock.

Seashore Home.

A strawberry festival for the benefit of the Seashore Home will be held in the Parish Building, on Tuesday, June 4th. Cards of admission may be had from the Clergy or Sisters, without charge. Refreshments may be obtained. It is expected that every person will bring some donation, groceries, canned fruits and vegetables, or money. These may be sent during the afternoon or brought in the evening. A large attendance is desired.

The fifth annual report of the Board of Managers of the Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital and Colony Farm, has been received. We notice $236.00 contributed by St. Clement's people, and $500 which the Corporation of All Saints Sisters paid for the building that was originally bought by St. Clement's people.

Parish Notes.

The last session of the Catechism is on Trinity Sunday, June 2d.

The picnic for St. Katharine's Guild is arranged for Saturday, June 1st.

The picnic for Guild of the Holy Child is arranged for Saturday, June 1st, at George's Hill.

Mr. Wm. A. McClenthen will, after his ordination as Deacon on Trinity Sunday, be attached to the staff of Clergy.

Rev. A. W. Doran, after over two years and a half of faithful work in the Parish, has gone to Holy Cross Monastery.

Rev. F. D. Ward will have charge of the Mission Work, and has become Chaplain of St. Mary's and St. Lawrence's Guild.

The Women's Bible Class have given $13.00 to enlarge the porch at Mission House; the last meeting was on Sunday, May 19th.

Members of the Congregation who are absent all summer, should remember to make their offerings either before they leave town, or during their absence.

Wednesday, June 5th (Eve of Corpus Christi), at 5.15 P. M., Vespers in Chapel of St. John Evangelist; annual meeting St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., immediately after in Vestry room.

We hope that the Church may still be in the thoughts of our people during the summer, and that many will send flowers for the Altar. Flowers for the Church should reach us by four o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

The children's Mass has been without any music since Low Sunday, as Mr. Balsley, who has been the organist, rather suddenly gave notice that on account of other duties, he was unable longer to play. It is hoped to make some arrangement before September.

Generous friends of the Community have furnished funds for sodding the yard of the Mission House, and planted some trees and flowers. It is also intended to rebuild the steps at the main door, widening them and making an easier ascent; the fence also will be painted.

The Church Times, of Milwaukee, has copied the article on "Sunday Night Religion." We are very grateful to the Bishops who kindly permit us to send them copies of the Magazine, and who at various times have said words of approval as to our articles as well as the work and influence of the Parish.

The violet Cope, of which mention was made in the last Magazine, was designed by Mr. I. Ernest Linton, who also made the designs for the whole violet set. Mr. Linton has also kindly promised to prepare a design for the new cloth of gold Veil and Burse that is to be ornamented with the pearls given a short time ago.

It may not be generally known that the Church of the Redemption had an early Mass on Easter Day. Twenty years ago it was difficult to find any Church open for early Communion; now it is difficult to find any Church in Philadelphia where, on festivals at least, Holy Communion may not be received early, so the truth and life for which St. Clement's has always borne witness spreads.

The Living Church of May 25th has an illustration of the Bishop of London, with the Dean of St. Paul's, and the Archdeacon of London, in their gorgeous Copes. Also an editorial on the part St. Clement's has taken in the great Catholic movement and revival in the Church in this country, evidently written by one who must have had some personal knowledge of the life of the Parish.

Mr. W. A. Goodwin has been ordered to Colorado for his health until the Fall. He has not been entirely well since the attack of grippe that came just after he took charge of the music here, but his anxiety to take up and continue his work, made him unwilling to relinquish until the physicians told him it was imperative. Mr. G. Oswald Calvert is his substitute. We hope he may return vigorous and strong in the Fall.

Reredos for St. Katharine's Altar.

It may not be generally known that the Altar of St. Katharine was given to the Church by Miss Julia Dunlap, the object being that the weekday services might be said in the Church itself. She, who was most regular in her attendance, saw the propriety; the result has been a larger attendance. It would seem that her friends who might desire to place some memorial in the Church could find no more suitable purpose, than the completion of the Altar with a reredos. It would seem that an oak tryptich was the more suitable form, the wings closing in, the panels to be filled with paintings, and the whole to be of carved wood. While this might cost several hundred dollars, yet it ought to commend itself to our love, and especially as a memorial of one whose life and interests were absolutely devoted to the Parish. Rev. V. B. Lucas made a suggested sketch while here. We shall be glad to have promises toward the cost.

Rogation and Ascensiontide.

The intercessions were made on the three days with more than usual devotion. At least 150 people visited the Church each day, an average of sixty hearing Mass. A considerable number of special intercessions were handed in.

The Masses on Ascension Day were very well attended. The Solemn Mass was at seven o'clock; there was a full attendance of the Choir; breakfast was served in the school room for members of the Choir and the Acolytes. Immediately afterward the boys of the Choir, under the charge of the Clergy and Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., went for the usual picnic, with a supply of sandwiches. The day was pleasantly spent at Laurel Springs, New Jersey.

Whitsun Day.

In spite of the threatening weather which hindered many, the number of Communions was very satisfactory (218); also the attendance at the Solemn Mass. The offerings were, for the repairs, resetting tiles and pointing of Twentieth street boundary wall, etc., $145.70, which, with the amount already given, makes $362.70. We hope this may cover these two items.

The Picnic.

The annual picnic will take place on Saturday, June 22d. All the children of the Catechism and Little Catechism who have been regular in attendance, will receive tickets free. Almonesson Park will again be the place, but the route will be by ferry from Chestnut street wharf, and then by special cars to the Park. Adults and others, not members of the Catechism, may buy tickets, and only those who have our tickets can go on the special cars. Boat leaves Chestnut St. Wharf at 9 A. M. for Kaighns Point, where the special trolleys will be in waiting.

"I am tired and sick of hearing about the Catholic faith," said a thoughtless man the other day; "which, except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved," says the Creed of St. Athanasius.

S. S. J. E.

The new Mission House of the Society, Cowley S. John, Oxford, with its Chapel and the cloisters connecting it with the Church—all the gift of an annonymous friend—was solemnly blessed by the Bishop of Reading on the morning of April 18th.

The old Mission House, which adjoins it, will serve as the Guest House.

The London House (temporary) is now at 13 Dartmouth street, Westminster.

The whole cost of the Church has been paid and an appeal put out for building the tower and west end of the aisles with their porches.

Father Powell has joined the Staff in Boston, making five members of the Society there. The Congregation at the Mission Church is increasing so, that the Clergy are only able to visit those who are sick at their homes.

We believe that the income from the Trust Fund established by Miss Barclay for the work in this country, is now available and we understand that the legacy of Miss Sally Dunlap, for the work in this country, will shortly be paid over to the Society; nearly $2,000 a year will be added to the funds of the Society.

All Saints Seashore Home.

The annual report for 1900 has just been received; unfortunately, the fund at the disposal of the Sisters ($1,066.37) do not warrant making any contract for building the permanent house, so the same house has been rented Summer Religion.

It is a matter for thankfulness that Churches remain open all summer; very few are entirely closed; the number of Sunday services are curtailed and week-day services are omitted. A church consecrated for the worship of Almighty God should always have opportunities for public worship on all Sundays and Festivals. At least, the Holy Sacrifice should be offered. A priest should never go away without leaving some priest who may be called upon for services in cases of sickness and death; Sunday supply is not sufficient. A devout Christian should never plan to spend the summer in any place where spiritual privileges are not to be had, and the obligation of public worship is binding upon all.

Appeals.

Bishop Weed, of Florida, appeals for aid in the "sore strait" of the burning of the city of Jacksonville, which threatens to cripple the Diocese very greatly. Enclose money in a marked envelope and it will be forwarded. The Bishop's letter is printed here:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., May 14, 1901.

Reverend, Dear Sir:

In the recent destructive fire which visited our city on the 3d day of May, St. John's Church, Parish House and Rectory, with their entire contents, were destroyed - St. John's being the largest Parish in the Diocese, the center of church work, and the largest contributor to the Missionary work. It is most important, for the welfare of the Diocese, as well as to the life of the city in which our Church held a commanding influence, that it should be rebuilt, and it will be utterly impossible, for years to come, for our own people to restore it. For twenty-five years past thousands from over all our land have worshiped in St. John's Church, and the sick and unfortunate from every quarter of the country have been ministered to by its Clergy and people. It seems fitting, in view of its character, and the place it has filled in the life of so many, that St. John's Church should receive the help of those outside our stricken city in the work of rebuilding. It cannot be done without outside aid. Can you not help us by asking for offerings, by making personal appeals, and by interesting the Clergy and people of your city, who know something of our Parish and its work, in behalf of such a cause?

Please send offering to me, which will be acknowledged, with receipt from Treasurer of the Parish. Faithfully yours,

V. W. SHIELDS,
Rector of St. John's Parish.

PHILADELPHIA, JULY, 1901.

The Seashore Home.

The Strawberry Festival and Donation Party for the benefit of the Seashore Home took place on Tuesday evening, June 4th. The attendance was not as large as might have been expected; however, many who were absent sent liberal donations of all kinds, and those who came were liberal in their patronage and donations. We are grateful to those who so kindly volunteered their services for the musical programme—Messrs. Edward Van Leer and Wm. H. Miller and the members of the Banjo Club of the Y. M. C. A.

It is always a thankless effort, apparently, to sing or play under such circumstances, and yet, while there never seems any direct appreciation, the music causes the real enjoyment of the evening. There was no charge for admission, and yet the proceeds—$85.00—were satisfactory.

An anonymous donation of $54.30 for the building fund has been received.

One of the Sisters went to Point Pleasant on Saturday, June 15th, to open the house and get it ready. The first party of visitors expects to go Monday, July 1st.

The Picnic.

Again the children of both Catechisms, together with their friends and a goodly number of Choir boys, went to Almonesson Park on Saturday, June 22d. This time two trolley cars had been chartered, so that when the 9 A. M. boat from Chestnut Street wharf arrived in Camden the party quickly filled the seats and were off for their day of pleasure, and at six o'clock, when they started for home, their own "specials" were ready for them—no scramble or delay.

The day was happily spent, and the enjoyment was largely due to the efforts of those who give themselves for others. The various amusements and the boat were well patronized and thoroughly appreciated. Through the kindness of a friend all the children had a treat of ice cream, and, through the kindness of two friends, the boys of the Choir had the day's outing, together with amusements, boats and ice cream. Everybody seemed to have a good time, and the earlier return than usual to the city was an advantage.

A Devotional Atmosphere.

The Church is intended not only as a place where services shall be properly held, but also where individuals may come for prayer and meditation at all times.

A visitor to St. Clement's lately printed some impressions, and particularly called attention to our gloomy sanctuary. During the day it is truly little more than a dark hole, and does not create that religious feeling that we might expect. Is there a remedy? To open the windows, closed up so many years ago, comes naturally to one; but an experiment last year was not satisfactory, mainly because of the present Dossal. Two other ways are suitable: a new window in south wall or some glass, etc., in the roof. These may well engage our attention in connection with future improvement of the sanctuary. Meanwhile St. Katharine's Altar, particularly if the plan for the Reredos is carried out together with the Stations of the Cross, promised some time ago by a parishioner and authorized by the Vestry, will do much to rescue the interior of the building from its unused appearance.

Parish Notes.

Rev. F. D. Ward will be away during July.

Attention is called to the change of time for Confessions on Saturdays in July and August.

The office for St. Vincent's Guild on July 3d and the Mother's Meeting on July 4th will be omitted.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Baugher the whole Choir was photographed after the morning service on June 23d.

The Bishop of Los Angeles and the Rector of Ontario, Cal., have both written to thank St. Clement's for the donation of $20.00.

The address of the publisher of the MAGAZINE has been changed; please address in care of the Clergy House, 2026 Cherry Street, Philadelphia.

Rev. Fathers Powell and Langmore, of the S. S. J. E., have called at the Clergy House during the month, and expressed much interest in the work of the parish.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen was ordained Deacon at the Church of the Advocate on Trinity Sunday. He takes up his residence permanently at the Clergy House early in July.

St. Saviour's Ward C. B. S. had their annual meeting after Vespers on June 5th. The Treasurer presented his report. Mr. Mowry was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer. Vespers will not be said until October. We hope to see many more associates added in the Fall.

Forty-eight persons gave donations for Eastertide flowers, amounting to (with $8.05 in the box) $115.80. This has enabled us to have flowers every Sunday. We hope for garden flowers during the summer; they ought to be at the church by 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoons.

The following changes as to services during the summer: The 7.30 Mass on weekdays and the 8 o'clock on Sundays are discontinued; there is no sermon at 9.15, and the sermon at 11 is after the Mass; Evening Prayer on Sundays is at 5 o'clock and night service at 8 o'clock; the Requiem Mass on Monday mornings will be said in the Crypt Chapel at 7.30 o'clock.

The offerings at the early Masses (7, 8 and 9.15) on Trinity Sunday were for the Bishop of Florida, to repair the losses of Jacksonville fire. We had hoped that many who were enjoying themselves in summer outings would have sent their share towards this purpose. They did not, nor have they sent their share for the repairs, an offering for which was taken on Whitsunday. The whole amount sent to Bishop Weed, of Florida, for the repair of Jacksonville churches, was $51.79.

Order of Ethiopia.

One of the most important events in the work of missions, is the submission of these native Africans to the Catholic Church. Father Puller is now preparing the former ministers for the proper reception of the Sacraments.

Clergy House.

The delay in preparing plans has been the result of circumstances. It seems wise to wait until we are quite sure what we can do and what it is best to do. Many consider it best to build an entirely new house rather than to enlarge and remodel the present one, and they are, without doubt, quite right. The difficulty is a financial one, as a rough estimate seems to call for $15,000, and we have only a little over $5,000, and a mortgage is out of the question.

The Mission House.

The steps at the main entrance have been entirely rebuilt, the ascent made more gradual, the steps lengthened and iron rail added. The stonework of boundary wall has been repointed and fence painted. The cost has been defrayed from the subscriptions paid at Easter and the kind gifts of some friends of the Community. Mr. Howard W. Peppercorn has prepared all the plans, made the contracts and supervised the work.

The legacy under Miss Dunlap's will has been paid to the Mother Superior of the Community.

Opportunity.

It matters not who is responsible for the remark, the truth of it is very evident that openings and opportunities are as plentiful now as they ever have been, that the apparent lack is the desire of every one to set up an untrue standard of worth and to strive to obtain the comparatively few positions that are included within the limits of this—most of the people being bound to be disappointed, and well they should be; for they would be unequal to the duties. What we need particularly is honest, faithful people—men and women—who are willing to carry on and do the necessary though humble affairs of life. The weakness of modern life is that almost everybody is unwilling to perform the service for which they are fitted, is dissatisfied, and, consequently, grumbles and complains at their lot, covetous of and jealous of the prominence and advantages of others. Instead of honoring the dignity of their own condition, they sacrifice self-respect, and in imagination and desire, at least, play the part and ape the manners of some one else. Earth and this life are the limits of their desires; they forget God and lose sight of eternity! But it is ever true: "Godliness with contentment is great gain."

Bishop Weed, of Florida, has written to thank St. Clements for the donation to the rebuilding of Jacksonville churches; the outlook is very dark.

Bishop Hall, of Vermont, has kindly sent us a copy of his charge to his Diocese on the subject of Prohibited Degrees of Marriage.

The Bishop of Fond du Lac writes to ask us to prepare a missionary box for his Diocese next fall. After finding what the parish needs, we shall ask the assistance of the members of the congregation for this purpose. As a beginning, the offerings at the early Masses on Sunday, July 7th, will be set apart for this purpose.

Marriage and Divorce.

There is no question of more importance to come before the General Convention that meets next October in San Francisco than that of Marriage and Divorce. In the New Canon, while it is deficient in not stating that marriage can only be solemnized between two baptized persons, and an unfortunate exception for the "innocent party" as to sacraments, yet some very important matters are provided. Marriage can only be solemnized in the presence of a minister. Clandestine unions, where the parties are unknown, are impossible; there must be two witnesses who shall know the persons. If the couple are strangers to the minister, it is advised that the man and woman and the witnesses shall sign the record. No divorced people can be united. It is also expected that a table of Prohibited Degrees will be set forth, in which it is provided that a man shall not be united to his deceased wife's sister.

Church Extension.

The Holy Cross Magazine properly calls attention to the new policy of the Board of Missions, and enters a forcible protest against it on behalf of many churchmen. The Board desires to commit the Church to the carrying on of that work in Mexico, the history of which is not pleasant reading, also to new work in Spanish-American islands, the Philippines, and perhaps Brazil. It cannot be too forcibly asserted that the mission of the Church of the English-speaking race is not to wage war, either at home or elsewhere, upon the Roman Communion by ministering to the lapsed or seeking to attract the faithful. The efforts already made in these new countries are so pitiful that they afford no indication that further work should be undertaken.

The mission stations for which the Church is responsible, both in the present domestic and foreign field, are so inadequately carried on that they ought to furnish a sufficient reason for careful consideration before a new department is assumed and opened.

Don't Knock.

The New York Sun calls attention to the existence of a new and valuable Society, The Order of Don't Knock, and gives an extract from the constitution and healthful creed, which we reprint. It contains a needed warning, and the principles might well be cultivated. The responsibility and duty of a Christian is to bring individuals to repentance, not to expose their weakness or faults or to pass along the fruit of "they say."

"Section 1.—To overcome in its members the deplorable habit of speaking ill of our fellows—otherwise known as 'knocking'—and, by precept and example, trying to induce others to do the same.

"Sec. 2.—To better the social and moral condition of mankind by a true devotion in its members to the cause of charity in its broadest sense.

"Sec. 3.—To keep the Golden Rule ever in the minds of its members.

"Sec. 4.—To bind its members together in a social and fraternal manner."

And here is a little bit of the healthful creed:

"We believe that the practice of speaking ill of our fellow-men, otherwise 'knocking,' is detestable, unbrotherly and uncharitable.

"We believe it our duty to conceal the imperfections of our fellows (provided their actions are not of great menace to the welfare of the community), and do all we can, by precept and example, to show them where they err.

"We believe that many lives are ruined daily, that many hearts are made miserable and many men and women driven to desperation by the despicable practice of 'knocking.'

"We believe that in most instances 'knocking' is done thoughtlessly, and even those who knock maliciously and with evil intent would refrain if they would but give a thought to the possible consequences of the act.

"We believe that a simple little knock unthinkingly made sometimes grows to such proportions as to be more cruel and dangerous than the plunging of a sharp knife into the vitals of the victim.

"We believe that a persistent, deliberate knocker is as vile and as dangerous to the welfare of a community as a murderer,

"We believe that many people judge others by their own standard, and that because they are not tempted or are able to resist doing some particular thing that they consider wrong, they feel themselves warranted in despising and criticising those who are weaker than themselves or whose opinions differ from their own."—*N. Copes and Mitres.

Not in Fond du Lac, but in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, at the enthronement of the new Bishop, the Canons wore very gorgeous Copes, and the Bishop was vested in Cope and Mitre. The Mitre was worn on the head, at the proper times, being taken off and put on. Someone must have forgotten to send copies of our official journals with editorials and articles marked, showing how illegal and foreign all this is. We have been instructed that the use, particularly of Mitres, has passed away, except, perhaps, as emblems.

Institutional Religion.

It is stated in the daily papers that the Rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, after a fair trial, has decided to abolish all mens' and boys' clubs with amusements and entertainment. They do not aid the religious training as well as some older methods, nor do they satisfy the desire for amusing variety as well as the modern "continuous performance." It is also stated that the religious results at St. George's, New York, are not as satisfactory as they were several years ago. We are gratified to hear of any religious people who dispense with the purely secular and philanthropic idea as a part of their Christian activity. This thing has been a passing phase of the present unrest, and it is well to have it completely put out of sight. It has done much harm to many people, cultivated jealousy and discontent, as well as a distaste for God's Will and Purpose.

The following extract from the N. Y. Sun, of Archbishop Ireland's address before the graduating class of St. Joseph College, is entitled to serious consideration. On many occasions the distinguished Prelate has manifested a keen and critical grasp of current affairs.

"One of the great evils of the present time is that women in so-called high society are coming to regard with more and more toleration breaches of moral and civic laws committed by members of their own sex. In our hurried modern life, when men are devoting themselves almost entirely to things material, women should preserve the moral and spiritual side of existence. If they do not, the world may well fear."

The great fault of American education, the Archbishop said, was lack of seriousness. There was no depth of thought, no consistency of principles. An intellectual levity pervaded society. America, he thought, was decidedly inferior to other countries in intellectual culture.

"I believe in the intellectual woman," continued the speaker. "While woman's interest should be primarily in the home, yet there is no reason why it should be confined there. It is folly to belittle woman's influence today, for it is widespread and it is a power wherever it exists."—N. Y. Sun.

Summer Hints.

A Christian woman never appears in church without some covering on her head; she would esteem it immodest.

Attendance at Mass on Sunday is obligatory during the summer months. Morning Prayer and Sermon are not a sufficient substitute nor even Vesper or Sunset Service.

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1901.

New Clergy House.

Mr. Horace W. Sellers is at work on the first sketch to be submitted to the Vestry; the amount of money in hand and promised warrants us in taking this step. In the early part of July a good friend of the Parish promised $5,000 for this purpose, and a few days after $2,000 more was placed in our hands; this makes the whole amount available about $12,300.

The architect desires $15,000. A very casual inspection of the amounts so far received shows that a majority of the people have not yet been heard from.

It is part of the history of this movement that over three years ago our dear friend, John Neill, prepared a rough plan, which is in the hands of Mr. Sellers, and the first definite donation came from Miss Julia Dunlap, part of a legacy she had received, while Mr. Fryer, over his initials, wrote a letter to the Magazine calling attention to the need, and provided special envelopes that it might ever be in the minds of the people.

The result must ever be a matter of thankfulness to God of whose bounty we have become sharers.

The Vestry not having acted, we are not able to give the details, but it is hoped to begin operations very soon.

Repairs.

The first claim upon our attention the condition of the tiles in the aisle A careful examination proved that th most economical and satisfactory thin to do was to lay an entirely new floo We had $267—the estimates wer very much larger. The person wh gave $100 for outside repairs consen that this be used for tiles. Fifty do lars more has been received and $50 i additional promised. If necessary th Vestry can supply the rest, but we hop this may not be necessary. The esti mate of the Vulcanite Company, 171 Market Street, has been accepted, an the work will be completed Septembe 1st. The new floors will be of re English quarry tiles, 9 x 9 and 1½ in thick, oiled after they are laid.

We shall not be able to put dow the patent pavement on Twentiet Street as we desired. The cost, accord ing to estimate of Vulcanite Company would be $250.

The roofs need a thorough overhaul ing before winter, one of the thing that must be done.

The old carpets in the pews must b taken up and cleaned; new ones ar needed, but we must wait until w have money.

It is not expected that the Sunda services will be held in the Chape more than one Sunday.

Rummage Sale.

The Sisters, with others interested i our mission work among the poor o the Parish, and the many others wh come to us—because they always hav hearing, and, if deserving, are alway helped according to our ability—expec to arrange a Rummage Sale for th benefit of the Poor Fund. It will tak place in the early part of November All sorts of odds and ends will be use ful. Parish Notes.

Rev. C. C. Quin will be away during August.

There was no Choir on Sunday nights during July.

Rev. F. D. Ward is expected to return August 3d.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen came into residence in July.

The attendance at the early Masses on Sundays has been very good.

The Tower Cross will be freshly gilded before the Winter storms set in

The Guilds of St. Mary and St. Vincent will not have any Office in August.

Rev. J. O. S. Huntington, Sup O. H. C., preached on Sunday morning, June 30th.

During August there will be no Choir morning or night; hymns will be sung by the congregation.

The heat somewhat interfered with the success of the game of base ball arranged between the Choirmen and Acolytes on Saturday, June 29th, at Laurel Springs, N. J.

A box has been placed on the wall at the end of the south aisle within the Church. It is for the convenience of those who desire to make an offering when attending week day Masses.

A Mass for the repose of the soul of Frances Helen, Mother Superior of All Saints, was said in the Chapel of the Mission House on Wednesday, July 24th, the anniversary of her burial.

Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., took all the Choir boys up the river to Burlington, N. J., on Tuesday, July 2d. The party enjoyed themselves. Through the courtesy of the authorities, the college grounds were put at our disposal.

St. Mary's Guild had their usual Office on July 1st, and in spite of the great heat there were several present. The Sisters had arranged a cool treat and the Officer of the beat turned on the water at the fire hydrant outside so that the temperature was not heeded.

The Clergy have not only been responsible for that for which St. Clement's exists, worship of Almighty God, ministering the Sacraments to the sick and dying, but have also been called upon by those who are not under our care and charge and whose Pastors only came in on Sunday mornings or not at all.

Oconto is the place designated by the Bishop of Fond-du-Lac for which he asks us to prepare and send a missionary box. Miss Lex has kindly undertaken the details, and later we shall know just what is desired and needed. The offerings at the early Masses on Sunday, July 7th, were for this purpose and amounted to $7.41, and a special donation of $1.00 has been received.

All Saints' Sisters.

Some time ago the Community bought a large estate at Colney Chapel, St. Albans', England, and upon this has been erected the group of buildings needed for the use of the Community—convent, novitiate, chapel, guest house, etc. The formal opening was to take place on Tuesday, July 16th, the Mother Superior of the affiliated house in America and the Rev. R. H. Paine, the chaplain, having gone to England to be present. This will be the Mother House of the whole Sisterhood, and marks a very important step in their history of growth.

Only two houses, we understand, of those heretofore used for the purposes of the Sisters, in Margaret Street, will be retained. The Community was founded in London by the Rev. W. Upton Richards, Vicar of All Saints, Margaret Street. It was on St. Luke's Day, 1851, that the Mother Foundress left the world to establish the Community, and now, by God's blessing, it has grown wonderfully; affiliated houses have been established in America, India and South Africa under the wise, healthy and spiritual rule of All Saints, while its works in England are many and various. It is eminently fitting that this, its jubilee year, should be marked by the formal opening of a properly planned convent.

Sea Shore Home.

The first party went to Point Pleasant on Monday, July 1st, and returned on Friday evening, July 12th. The household during this time was 32. The second party went on Monday morning, July 15th, returning on Friday, July 26th, the household being 60.

Rev. W. H. Gibbons has been saying the daily Mass, until an accident prevented.

All kinds of fancy articles are needed for the fair to be held during August, and it is hoped that friends of former years will not forget, and may also interest others, that an attractive display may be made and a goodly amount realized. Subscriptions and donations have come in, but there are still many who have not attended to this important feature of the work.

Incense.

Strange tidings come from England. This time the Bishop of Peterborough announces that it is not improbable that incense may be used at the King's Coronation. So, besides being Scriptural, ancient and proper, as the well-known "Opinion" seems to say, it will now be legal under certain circumstances. It may turn out, after all, that those who have always known it was a proper ceremony of the Catholic Church, and have so used it, will be proved right in this, as in so many other matters. We are patient, because we know we are right.

Holy Water.

The holy water stoup in a mediæval church always stood close to the door of the church, so that all who came in might dip their fingers into the water and cross themselves. This is a practice of very great antiquity indeed in the Church, and can be traced back to the fifth century, though the use of holy water itself has an even greater antiquity, and may even be of Apostolic origin, if, indeed, it be not, as some have thought, derived from the Jews. It is mentioned in the Apostolic Constitutions, and the method of blessing it and the prayer then said are also there given.

It was at that period blessed by the Bishop, or, in his absence, by a priest, with the sign of the cross and the words, "May God Himself hallow this water; through Christ may He give it power to put devils to flight, to cast out disease, and to protect from all the snares of the enemy." The use of salt in the benediction is probably of later origin.

St. Thomas teaches that venial sins are forgiven in three ways—(1) by the infusion of grace, and therefore by the receiving of any one of the Sacraments; (2) by an act of contrition, and therefore by the General Confession, or by the recitation of the Lord's prayer, which prays, "Forgive us our trespasses; and (3) by an act of reverence towards God or holy things, and, therefore, by receiving a blessing, by taking holy water, or by making a prayer in a consecrated church.—St. Mark's Messenger.

"The Blessing of the new Cowley House must have been a very impressive function. I am glad you asperg d it so thoroughly. I do not care for these externals from a ritual point of view, because I can be content with very simple functions; but I have implicit faith in the spiritual efficacy of these external means when used with faith and devotion."—(Letter from Fr. Elwin, in "Cowley Evangelist.")

Mission Work.

In an article concerning mission work in Porto Rico, in the July Spirit of Missions, appear the following: "Slowly but surely the public schools and Protestant missionaries are undermining the monstrous fabric of illiteracy and superstition which four hundred years of misrule and erroneous doctrine have imposed upon this island." "We are here by every consideration of our Catholic commission . . . to plant the standard of a pure and primitive Church."

The statements are contradictory. Protestant doctrine is neither pure nor primitive; where it has prevailed, a growing unbelief is its result, and unbelief is one step back of superstition. An adequate conception of "Catholic commission" would not ordinarily lead a holder of it to identify himself with those who do not hold it.

Whenever churchmen find it necessary, in the course of converting Roman Catholics, to lower themselves to the level of Protestants, the result is likely to be the furtherance among new people of the already widespread belief that the Anglican Church is but one of the Protestant sects. If a missionary really believes in the Catholicity of his faith and Church, the only thing he can do spiritually for these benighted Romanists is to clear away their superstition; he has no new faith to which he would convert them. So a true loyalty would keep him from bringing any further indignity upon his own Communion by involving it in a false position with the Protestant sects, and courtesy would lead him to leave to the Roman Church the care of her own people—a task of which she is far more capable than is the Anglican Church. It is neither fair nor safe to suppose that the Roman Church is not going to keep pace with civilization in her lands, and Protestantism is rapidly becoming a relic of the Reformation age.

PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER, 1901.

The Catechism.

This very essential part of our work commences its sessions on Sunday, September 15th, at 3 P. M. : the Little Catechism in the large schoolroom, and the older scholars in St. John's Chapel. The results in the way of more definite teaching and instruction are entirely satisfactory. The ordinary Sunday School system being entirely without value: a young woman telling fairy stories or giving an interesting account of her parties and pleasure, or a young man telling of sports just to help interest or get the children to come is about as absurd a system of religious teaching as one can imagine. It is far from edifying, yet is very common.

The Sulpician method with us has won its way in spite of the indifference of some parents whose children did not like it and were permitted to go to some Sunday Schools made more attractive by modern methods; also in spite of the openly avowed and expressed hostility of certain persons. The Clergy are the God-appointed teachers of all the children of God,—not of what these want to listen to, but of all that the Church teaches—the use of the Sacraments, the doctrines of the Church, the laws of the spiritual life.

These definite obligations are distasteful to many; they are opposed to the liberty and license of modern life. It must not be forgotten that the devil rules in the children of disobedience—his power is felt and seen not only in far-off India, as Father Elwin writes, but on all sides—he not only hinders the Church of God, but he inspires many an one with schemes to wreck and ruin.

The Rev. W. A. McClenthen will be in charge of the Catechism and of the work among the children in the Guilds, etc. It is hoped that all who are responsible for children will see that they will be thus properly taught the things that are needful for their soul's health.

The method in use in this Parish has awakened the interest of many. Last year we had the privilege of explaining and demonstrating to many an idea of its conspicuous solid benefits.

Clergy House Plans.

Mr. Sellers has been hard at work on the preliminary sketches—suggestions for the different floors as well as the Garden and Appletree Street elevations.

These, it is expected, will be ready for submission to the Vestry at the next stated meeting, and when accepted the details will be worked out, specifications drawn up, contracts made and work commenced. We would call to the attention of all that about $3,000 more is required, as it is a matter in which everyone may be presumed to be interested who in any way shares in the ministrations of the Clergy, and only comparatively few have responded so far. Some will refuse because they resent being told their duty.

Parish Notes.

Eight o'clock Mass will be resumed on Sunday, September 22d.

The 7.30 Mass on week-days will not be resumed until Michaelmas.

Rev. E. N. Webber has kindly assisted by taking week-day Masses.

Rev. C. C. Quin generously gave up the greater part of his holiday, returning for all the Sundays in August.

The choir has been away during the month, but we hope to see all the members return on Sunday, September 1st.

Rev. F. D. Ward returned on August 3d, since which time he has been in residence, as has Rev. W. A. McClenthen.

Monday, August 12th, the anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Hannah P. Smith was said in the Crypt Chapel.

Saturday, September 14th (Exaltation of Holy Cross), there will be a special Mass at 6.30 o'clock for Holy Cross Guild.

St. Mary's Guild Office will be omitted in September on account of the holiday. St. Vincent's, as usual, Wednesday, September 4th.

Monday, September 16th, being the anniversary, there will be a Requiem Mass in the Crypt, at 7.30 o'clock, for the repose of the soul of Julia Dunlap.

Rev. G. H. Moffett left the city on July 29th and has been absent during the whole of August. His return is not expected until the latter part of September.

Rev. E. N. Webber will hear Confessions on Saturdays in September from 4 to 5 P. M., and will preach on several Sunday evenings during the month.

Rev. J. M. Davenport, formerly Rector of St. Clement's, expects to be in Philadelphia for a few days in the latter part of the month, and will, it is hoped, officiate in the Church.

Mr. S. W. Sears will take charge of the music beginning on Sunday, September 1st. He is a communicant of St. Clement's and is at present organist and choirmaster at Christ Church Chapel.

While the attendance at the earlier Masses during the summer has been cause for much gratitude, yet the small number of people in church at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. make it very doubtful whether it would not be wiser to have the principal Service at 9.15 and no service at 11 or 8. The 11 o'clock idea is no holy or ancient custom.

The services during the latter part of the month have been said in St. John's Chapel on account of the work of laying new tiles in the Church. The contractors have been delayed in starting the work owing to the non-arrival of the tiles from England. Large tiles have been chosen, one of the chief reasons being to avoid the difficulty in future of loose tiles. We assure all the members of the congregation that all has been decided only to obtain the best possible results; $250 is still needed.

W. A. Goodwin.

It is with the sincerest regret that we announce the resignation of Mr. Goodwin as organist and choirmaster of St. Clement's—the physicians in Colorado, after careful and thorough examination, have given their opinion that he ought to remain in that climate. The resignation takes effect September 1st, the date on which he expected to return. He took charge of the music January 1, 1899, and since then has worked hard and faithfully to make it worthy of the worship of God: the training of a choir is always a difficult and, to some extent, a discouraging effort, but on Easter it seemed as if the fruits of labor had begun to manifest themselves and that we could look forward to even greater results, but the health of Mr. Goodwin caused serious concern to his friends, although it was hoped a long rest would enable him again to undertake his work. As choir boy, acolyte, Dr. Tipton's assistant, or as organist and choirmaster, his thought, enthusiasm and strength has been given to the Parish; and our best wishes will follow him in the coming years, as we trust, of usefulness. We are sure that we speak not only for ourselves but for all, particularly those who have been associated with him in St. Clement's Choir—men and boys. His address is 104 East Caramillo Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Point Pleasant.

The third party went to the seashore on July 29th and returned August 9th, the household numbering 47.

The fourth party went on August 12th and returned on August 23d, the household being very full.

The picture of the house in the August Magazine looks very picturesque, but we would impress on everyone that the attractiveness is in the situation, the place, and, above all, the trees. The house is very inadequate and uncomfortable—the need of a suitable building is very great. We have of late noticed with care the expenditure, general management and numbers taken care of in and by various homes and have been very much gratified to know that the Sisters have been able to manage more economically than some others that have more publicity and larger income. It seems strange that publicity encourages many charitably disposed people to give generously without at all realizing how much more good may be done in a quiet way. Still we have many faithful and tried friends, and sooner or later we are sure of the building needed, and, we think, deserved by the Sisters who have managed these many years so wonderfully.

Members of the Guild of the Holy Cross have volunteered their services, as in past years, in assisting to take care of the children. Many others have been kind in various ways and shown a deep interest.

The collection at All Saints', Bay Head, amounted to $104.60.

The entertainment under the auspices of Mr. E. J. F. Greenfield, at Point Pleasant, took place on August 20th and 21st. The proceeds will amount to about $135.00.

The Treasurer expects to give the completed list of subscriptions, etc., in the next Magazine.

Father Elwin writes in the Cowley Evangelist of the new branch house of S. S. J. E. at Gerendowna, India: "It was an impressive dedication, the procession, 'with cross, lights, incense, holy water, choir and clergy' visiting various parts of the house. The impression on the heathen: the new Power that had come to battle with Satan in one of his seats. 'By My Spirit,' daily mass, prayer and fasting."

Another, Father Nicholson, writes how "Father Elwin went into the different cells, sprinkling them with holy water and saying a prayer in each."

Father Puller is still (June 22d) at The Location, Queenstown, South Africa, engaged in the instruction of the ministers of the Ethiopians, who have submitted as a body to the Church.

Bishop Taylor, coadjutor of Quincy, is the two hundredth Bishop of the American succession.

On Missionary Weakness.

A well-known Bishop, whose name stands high on the Board of Managers of the General Missionary Society, was asked, while away from his diocese on one occasion, if he would like the privilege of an altar for the next Sunday morning. The Bishop declined the offer, and intimated that he did not want to be troubled.

The fact that this is a typical instance of a widespread Episcopal indifference to the Sacrament of the Altar, is in itself an adequate reason for the lamentable weakness of the Church's Missions. When her chief Pastors thus neglect their fundamental priestly obligation in the salvation of souls, it is small wonder that the Board of Managers finds itself unable to cope with the missionary situation. The regular daily pleading of the Sacrifice of the Cross would do more for the Church and the world than all the frenzied appeals for money the Board could ever concoct.

All Saints' Convent.

Sixty acres of ground, an ideal site set in a smiling and well-wooded landscape, a little river flowing through the meadows and great trees furnishing an abundant shade, is the vivid description of the new Convent given by the Church Times. Mr. Leonard Stokes, the architect, has risen to the level of a great opportunity. The buildings strike a note of repose, with just an undertone of austerity, and give the immediate impression of adaptation to their use. It is a frankly modern type of Gothic, instinct with grace and life. The long, low front is broken by a tower over the gateway; one passes through this into the Cloister walk, which runs round the quadrangle and looks out through low, wide traceind windows upon the Cloister garth. From it open, on the ground floor, the Community rooms, library, refectory and offices. The cells and guest rooms are on the first floor and in the attic; the refectory is at present used as a chapel, the foundations only of the latter being complete. Across the meadow and over a little bridge is a small, thickly-wooded island in the river, known as Chantry Island, where, as far back as the eleventh century, a Chantry existed. At the Benediction, Father Page, Sup. S. S. J. E., officiated, and the procession was made up of Sisters, children and visitors. The Bishop of St. Alban's came in the afternoon and gave a cordial welcome and his blessing to the community. So All Saints, which through evil report and good has always upheld the highest standard of conventual and active life, takes possession of its new home mindful of the true purpose—beneficent to the world, loyal to the Church. Here the Sisters will find a resting-place from arduous work of branch houses and missions, and the love of the cloistered life will be fostered. It is the realization of many aspirations, the answer of many prayers. In this new stage the old spirit and true principles of religion will find fuller and more perfect expression. (Condensed from Church Times).

Just fifty years ago, in fear and trembling, yet with abundant hope and faith, the Sisters of the Poor, better known as the All Saints' Sisters, began their modest work in the neighborhood of All Saints' Chapel, Margaret Street. At that time of day it needed sublime courage in those who took part in or encouraged the revival of Sisterhoods. They had to encounter, not merely obloquy, but the vilest slander. Nevertheless the work went on, and there are few, save those whose prejudices are absolutely unreasonable, who would not now acknowledge the beneficent services rendered to the cause of humanity by devoted daughters of the Church, and would not approve of the opening afforded to women for leading lives of practical usefulness. How far the Sisters of the Poor were justified in their belief in the worthiness of their aim may be judged from the success which has attended their efforts of half a century. That little community in London has grown to a great organization, with its branches, not only in England and Scotland, but in America, South Africa and India. And as their numbers have increased, so also has their work been extended in new directions. No longer confined to the visitation of the sick and poor, the Order now is responsible for orphanages, training schools, nursing homes, high schools for girls, penitentiaries and convalescent hospitals; and this is not a complete list of its activities. High ecclesiastics once looked askance at the Sisters; now Bishops are the visitors of their institutions. Lastly, their old central home has become too small for them, and they have migrated to a more spacious settlement. The good wishes of Churchmen and Churchwomen will go with them to their new headquarters, whence we trust that they will be able to extend their operations for the benefit of Christ's Church.—Church Times.

"The Wimborne" Idea.

People will believe almost anything, the more absurd it is the readier they seem to be.

At one time many people thought that Dr. Pusey sacrificed a lamb every morning, and the story is told how one day going up to London in the railway carriage he got into conversation with a good woman who told him the story as soon as she learned that he lived in Oxford. He was able to assure her that he knew it was untrue, but that did not put an end to the tale; some people wanted to believe anything outrageous—however foolish it was, it appeared probable to them.

People do believe things, and for this reason a denial only confirms their impression—it is a habit of mind.

The two estimable people, of noble birth, who have of late circulated through public prints certain alleged (by them) facts are instances; unsupported assertions only, without evidence or foundation, solely upon hearsay—no time, date, place or person. One of the two wrote to an English Bishop about certain things, and when asked for proof seemed to consider that because he, the noble lord, believed the statement of one in whom he had confidence, the Bishop ought to be satisfied; the Bishop was not.

The noble lady believed the story told her by some one that at some church they used to lead around a donkey in the Palm Sunday Procession, and she thought everybody else should believe it, but a normal person immediately sees the absurdity of the whole tale; the whole thing rests upon the silly conviction that these "ritualists" will do anything. They are all only "Jesuits in disguise." Like Dr. de Koven's clerica, they must draw the line somewhere, even though sometimes it seems without reason, or only because they are scared.

They forget Mrs. Partington's broom can never sweep back the ocean. St. Augustine learned by a familiar vision the impossibility of fathoming God's immensity, so all had better learn not to interfere with God's mighty work. Be sure you are doing your own duty.

"Lambeth Opinions."

Again the "advanced men" are proved to be in the right and the Lambeth law opinions shown to be unworkable and impossible in the carrying on of the Church's work and the carrying out of God's will. Every Catholic priest knows that the sick and dying cannot be communicated unless the Sacrament is reserved, that otherwise some will die without the Viaticum. Not many priests can consecrate half a dozen or more times in a hospital, for example, as a certain rubrical-minded Bishop is said to have done, and we are sure no priest ought, for it is contrary to all law, custom and propriety—exceedingly irregular.

In England the Bishops of Truro and Salisbury have publicly avowed the practical impossibility of the "advice" and permitted certain relaxations; other Bishops will undoubtedly follow this wise and sensible course.

Also, in matter of incense, there are signs of change of mind: the Bishop of London has sanctioned its use on certain occasions, also the Bishop of Rochester, while the Bishop of Peterborough, as we noted last month, states that it may be used at the coming coronation.

So, as Dr. Pusey used to advise, it is better to be obedient and loyal to the Church than to the contrary opinions of individual Bishops; most of them have learned much wisdom from the Clergy whom they opposed, and, in some cases, persecuted—it is all coming out as it should. The fact is that "advanced Clergy" do not set themselves against their Bishops—they are consistent; believing in their obeying the Catholic Church, whose ministers they are, they do not insist upon carrying out their own ideas or preferences. The reformers, we are glad to believe, were not infallible—in England the Church was preserved from much of the harm that they desired and threatened to do. Ever since that dark and dreary time the Church has been recovering herself from their harmful influence: mistakes may have been made at times, but, as Dr. Dix long ago called to our attention, ever the progress has been onward, as Bishop Horatio Potter warned those opposing baptismal regeneration in the prayer-book, and wanting some change, that any change will only be in the contrary direction to what they desired. It has been accomplished, not by compromise, going back or giving in, but by the unswerving loyalty of the lesser number who have borne the brunt and died unhonored, and, many times, unknown—witness Pusey, Keble, Maconochie, Lowder, and many others—while those who have lost heart or "gone over" have lost influence and grip.

Of your charity pray for the soul of William McKinley, XXIVth President of the United States, who died 14th September, 1901. It was indeed fitting that he who yielded his soul in humble submission to "God's Will," should have finished his earthly pilgrimage on one of the Feasts of the Holy Cross. On Sunday, the morrow of his death, prayers were asked for the repose of his soul, and the Dead March was played at conclusion of services. In accordance with the instructions of the Bishop of the Diocese, the appointed service was said in St. John's Chapel, on the burial day, Sept. 19th, at 11 A. M. A Mass for the repose of his soul was said immediately after the service.

All-pitying Jesus, establish his soul in the realm of peace and light.

Of Angels.

When the heart is sick at the neglect God suffers from His children on earth—when His purposes are seen frustrated by sin—when the precious blood of Jesus seems to have been shed in vain—joy comes at the remembrance of the holy angels, forever perfectly serving God in heaven and on earth, eternally obedient, glorying in unceasing praise of the Lamb that was slain. Pride is stilled and reverence deepens as we regard these glorious creatures, unstained by sin, whose only joy is the absolute devotion of their mighty gifts of power and spirituality to the perfect doing of God's Will. They are our examples in devotion, teaching us reverence, humility, unceasing charity. Of such value and dignity in God's sight is each redeemed soul that He appoints unto it, from that innumerable host of the armies of Heaven, a guardian who shall bear it in his hands and oppose with heavenly craft, the subtlety of those evil, fallen angels who would harm it. Ever watchful, the guardian angel preserves from corporeal and outward evils and dangers. He promotes temporal good and external happiness. He suggests good thoughts and desires; he implants holy affections; he excites the backward soul to good works and deeds; in times of violent temptation, when the evil spirits would snatch away the soul, the guardian angel succors and assists, bearing restoring grace to worn out body and soul. He notices prayers and good works on earth; he reports and represents them before God. Not that God is ignorant, but He wills the holy angels to be thus informed that they may rejoice in the salvation of His little ones; and that when they shall attend the majesty of the Second Coming, they may be witnesses of God's righteous judgment.

They are present in glorious ranks at the celebration of the Holy Mysteries, there to adore their present Lord, to stimulate the faith of worshipping souls, and to supply by their perfect worship, defects in human adoration.

When the soul is released from the body, joyfully they bring it to God. When the saints ascend into Heaven, from their holy purgation, the angels accompany them, carrying them to Paradise, and uniting them to those angel choirs which forever cry aloud unto God with mighty joy.

Our angels always behold the face of our Father in Heaven. They always behold us in all we think and say and do. "In every place, in every corner, revere the presence of thy angel; and do not that before him which thou wouldst be ashamed to do before a man like thyself." How great is the incentive to holiness to remember that the same eyes look upon us and upon God! "He must be more stupid and senseless than a stock or stone, whose sloth and carelessness in his duty is not shaken off by this one consideration."

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER, 1901.

The General Convention.

The nature of the business which comes before the General Convention this year marks a realization that the present constitutional and canonical framework is absolutely inadequate as a working basis for a branch of the Catholic Church. The attempt to change the legal title of the Church is but one element of the movement. The legal title should declare her catholicity. Her inherent nature demands it, and, perhaps, the public avowal of that nature will put to shame those who still dishonor her. The Convention is simply overwhelmed with work; the unavoidable minutiæ of each important matter will consume much time; proper consideration of the "unfinished business" alone will require more than three weeks, and there is bound to be some new business—so an adequate and satisfactory settlement of all the matters cannot be hoped for at this time.

There are five principal matters which will demand consideration: 1. A new Constitution. 2. A new Digest of Canons. 3. The report of the House of Deputies' Committee on Marriage and Divorce. 4. The report of the Committee to Prepare Canons Establishing Courts of Appeal. 5. The report of the Commission on Marginal Readings in the Bible.

1. In the proposed Constitution comes the matter of providing for a presiding Bishop. Seniority of consecration—the present arrangement, which some are trying to make constitutional—gives no assurance either of executive power or of spiritual leadership. Also in the Constitution is the dangerous clause which permits congregations, willing to accept the spiritual oversight of the Bishop of the Diocese, but not being in communion with the Church, to dispense with the use of the Prayer-Book. "The law of praying is the law of believing," and if Episcopal protection is to be extended to those who are unwilling to use the Prayer-Book, we may expect to see latitudinarian prelates spiritually overseeing Unitarians. The clause is an insidious instance of the attempt to be liberal by a subtle emasculation of the Faith.

2. The proposed Digest consists of sixty canons with two hundred and eighteen sections and about as many subsections. The most important are those concerning the provincial system, courts of appeal and marriage and divorce. Episcopal jealousies and ambitions, together with the laity's exaggerated sense of its importance in council, may still hinder the return to the ancient provincial system; but it is sure to come eventually.

3. The Canons for the Appellate Courts, as reported by the Committee, were originally drafted by two eminent jurists, and their adoption will remedy a fundamental weakness in the Church's organization.

4. The marriage and divorce canons are a noble attempt to assert strictness of discipline and purity of life. They still fail to recognise that Baptism is an indispensible pre-requisite for the Sacrament of Matrimony. There are also some obscurities.

5. The report of the Commission on Marginal Readings is marred by the facts that the Commission has gone much further than any one expected it to go: and that it has not only offered suggestions for clearer translations and less obsolete English, but it has also felt called upon to offer settlement of some questions in textual criticism which are by no means ready to be settled. The acceptance of this report would mean putting the seal of the Convention upon speculations which are as likely to be superseded as are those scholars who put them forth.

These are but a few of the weighty matters before the Convention. The gravity of these alone shows the extent of the responsibility. Every faithful Catholic should pray daily that the Holy Spirit may guide and rule, and that all matters may be decided for the glory of God and the good of His Church.

Parish Notes.

The 7.30 week-day Mass will be resumed on September 30th.

Rev. J. M. Davenport will preach on September 29th, at 11 A. M.

Mr. Sears has been appointed Choirmaster and Organist by the Vestry.

The Vestry approved of the contract with the Vulcanite Company for the new tiles. This work has been delayed by the non-arrival of the tiles.

We ask all to bear in mind the Rummage Sale, for benefit of Poor Fund, to take place in November. Articles—all kinds—may be sent to Mission House or Parish Building.

The Choir returned Sunday, September 1st, when Mr. Sears took charge of the music. Mr. G. Oswald Calvert has been playing for the High Mass, while Mr. Sears played at Even-song.

At the last stated meeting the Vestry approved of the preliminary plans of Mr. Sellers for the new Clergy House, and a Building Committee, Messrs. Lea, Clay and Keyser, was appointed to attend to the various details. The work will be proceeded with immediately.

Pew rents are due in advance October 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the Vestry Room, Monday, October 7th, to receive money for pew rents and for renting pews or sittings; such rental is subject to the approval of the Vestry. Attention is called to the fact that $1.00 is added for each sitting to meet assessment of Diocesan Convention.

"Communicants in good standing" are only those who (1) make their Communions regularly, (2) attend Mass on Sundays and Holy Days of obligation, and (3) give alms for the support of the Parish and its charities generously, according to their ability.

The Clergy have a right to know the reason of failure in any one of these duties on the part of any individual.

The Offices and instructions for the Guilds of the Sodality of St. Clement will be said as usual this month. Members are reminded that on the keeping of the Rule depends the privileges of wearing the medal; it is not a sentimental keepsake of past faithfulness, but a symbol of present loyalty—only the Chaplain of each Guild can dispense from any part of the Rule.

The interest of the Parish is asked in the preparation of a missionary box to be sent to Oconto, in the Diocese of Fond du Lac, early in Autumn.

Articles of clothing, and gifts, both in money and in kind, will be most acceptable, and may be sent to Miss Lex, 11 S. Twenty-first street, or through the Rev. Clergy.

Catechism Notes.

The sessions of both Catechisms began on Sunday, September 15th.

The use of "Catholic Sunday Lessons," by the Rev. Arthur Ritchie, will be continued, as the book was not finished last year.

There is need of additional teachers, particularly a teacher for the Girls' Bible Class, owing to the fact that Miss Sanford is not able to resume her loving work in this department, and those who can take up the instruction of Christ's children and who do not do it will be held personally accountable.

Sea Shore Home.

The house at Point Pleasant was opened on June 15th, when the Sister in charge, with helpers, went to get the house in order for the visitors. The first regular party arrived on July 1st and was followed by three other parties, the last one returning on August 23d, a small number coming after that day until the time of closing, September 14th.

There were three Sisters during the whole season, while four others came to assist at various special times—221 was the total number provided for. Members of the Guild of the Holy Cross helped. Through the kindness of the following Priests—Revs. W. H. Gibbons, Lacey, Howell, H. S. Smith, C. Fiske and W. Waters—Mass was said 35 times in the Chapel and there were 130 Communions. Religious instruction and catechising was given during a part of July and August.

The season was without any unpleasant incident or mishap, and the opportunity of change brought health and happiness to many an one. One drawback was unavoidable—bathing was not possible—but the disappointment was cheerfully taken.

Hearing Mass.

It is the duty of every Christian man to hear Mass on Sunday. And it is also equally his duty to make his Communion frequently and with due preparation. Consequently, the hearing of Mass can never rightly be used as a substitute for Communion when negligence or carelessness in preparation makes the latter impossible. In all Sacrifice, Communion is the prominent idea, and, in the Christian Sacrifice, Communion becomes an essential, integral part of it. So the consummation of the Sacrifice of the Mass requires Communion, and the priest and those who communicate are the real offerers of the Sacrifice. Multiplicity of communicants, however, does not add anything to the completion of the Sacrifice. It is as complete with one—which must always be the offering priest—as it is with one hundred. In the Holy Sacrifice thus offered, the communicant or communicants represent the whole Church. "Their action is the Church's act of public worship. They do it in the general assembly of the Christian people, and every Christian is bound to take part in that assembly and to assist at the Act of Worship." And to hear Mass means to be present as a worshipper where the Holy Sacrifice is offered. It is thus a duty, and the least, that a Christian can do. True devotion, however, and the desire to live the life of grace, will lead to frequent and carefully prepared Communions, in which the soul shares in the offering and communicates as a part of his oblation—thus becoming a true sharer in the ineffable benefits of the Holy Sacrifice.—(Condensed from the Church Times.)

Obedience.

We quote from the Church Times report of an E. C. U. meeting: In the course of his address, Canon Knox Little observed that authority was a most sacred thing. During the last forty or fifty years there had been times of struggle, when accusations of lawlessness had been levelled against them. No accusations could be more serious to a Christian heart, for the authority of the Church of Christ was a most sacred thing. All authority, however, must have its limitations, and authority, if misused or wrongly exercised, must be disobeyed as a matter of duty. In the Church of England there had been very considerable confusion of thought with regard to authority. They were all very familiar with the constant cry of "Obey your Bishop." Obedience might be mere cowardice, mere flattery, or positive vice. During the years of his ministry a dangerous confusion had arisen in the Church, which had led to a kind of papalism. There were only two principles they could accept in governing the Church—papalism and constitutionalism. If they wanted papalism, and intended to have an autocratic Pope, then he should think the old-fashioned one would do; but his conviction was that Englishmen, whether in State or in Church, had always held out for constitutional government, and they always would. The real difficulty was that there had been a creeping papalism, and that had led to their confusions. They could govern the Church of England in a constitutional way, but they could not govern it by pseudo-papalism; and there had been a tendency to quiet secret conclaves, where it had been arranged that expressions of Archbishops should be put forward as if they were decrees of the Catholic Church of Christ. That would not do. It was not a thing Englishmen would submit to, and it was a thing they were bound to disobey. When they found any sort of approach to papalism, that must be put a stop to. On the question of doctrine, if they found that their Bishop either condoned, or seemed to condone, contradiction of the Faith of the Church, they had to resist.

Reservation of the Blessed Sacrament.

The returns show, as usual, that two methods have been followed in the private administration of Holy Communion. In some cases the Holy Eucharist has been celebrated in private houses, while in others, the more primitive, and, I would venture to say, the more desirable custom of carrying the Blessed Sacrament to the sick from the church, has been adopted. In crowded cities, and in hospitals this latter method is (as I know from my old Edinburgh experience) almost a necessity, unless we are prepared to allow many poor souls to depart hence, without having received, in their hour of need, the most comfortable Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. With us in this diocese the necessity for reserving the Blessed Sacrament for the sick is not so urgent as it is in more thickly populated parts of the country. And yet, even here, it seems to me that reverence would suggest that the mysteries of the Eucharist should be celebrated only in churches and chapels, and not elsewhere, except under special circumstances.

Moreover, is it not better, when we can, to conform to primitive usages, rather than, without necessity, to follow a method of communicating the sick which certainly involves a departure from the ancient custom of the Universal Church—one moreover which has been tried and found wanting, and which often makes it difficult, if not impossible, to administer the last and chiefest consolations of our Lord Jesus Christ to the dying at a time when such consolations are most urgently needed?

One thing, however, must never be lost sight of when the Blessed Sacrament is reserved. We must never, under any circumstances, forget that attitude of adoring reverence which is due from us to our Incarnate God and Saviour, who, though everywhere present on account of His Godhead, as man (in a special and mysterious way) manifests Himself to our faith in the Holy Mysteries of His Body and Blood. We may not, away from the Service of the Altar, be able to show, by outward signs, the adoration that we give Him then and there. But wherever we have Christ's Sacramental presence with us—whether it be in some humble cottage or on the public road, or even upon the sea—let us see to it, that in every way that is possible and expedient, we render to Him just as truly as in His sanctuary that supreme worship which it is the joy of the angels to offer before His heavenly throne.—Charge of Bishop of Argylle to his Diocese, quoted from Church Times.

St. Michael.

Written for "The Sisters of the Church."

Jesus! glorious Prince of Angels!
Of Thine Angel Chief we sing.
Countless are the shining legions
He is ruling for his King.
Michael! Seraph! Great Commander!
Who upon the Dragon trod!
Eyes of lightning! Voice of thunder!
Cry aloud "Who is like God?"

See! he comes! the mighty Captain!
See! he draws his flaming sword,
See! he flies in dazzling armour
To the battle of the Lord.
Lucifer and all his angels
Fall from Heaven to earthly sod,
As they quail before the war-cry,
Thund'ring forth "Who is like God?"

Michael swings the golden censer
Filled with prayers of saintly tone—
Incense from the golden altar
Rising up before the throne.
Songs from earth and songs from Heaven
Meet where man can never trod,
Like the sound of many waters
Surging forth "Who is like God?"

See! on earth the great Archangel
Veils his face and droops his sword,
When the words of consecration
Bring the presence of the Lord.
Guardian of the holy Altar,
Men who kneel where saints have trod
Hear him, like a silver clarion,
Cry aloud "Who is like God?"

When the last dread trumpet sounding
Bursts the graves of all the dead,
He will bear the awful standard—
Cross of love and cross of dread!
Down upon the Mount of Olives,
Where our suffering Jesus trod,
He shall fly with thousand thousands,
Thundering forth "Who is like God?"

Oh! the love of great St. Michael,
Watching o'er the Church of Christ;
Oh! the joy of great St. Michael,
Guarding his dread Eucharist.
Great his strength and great his glory,
On the dragon's head he trod—
With a voice like rolling thunder,
Crying loud "Who is like God?"

Glory to the glorious Father,
Glory to the Son who died,
Glory to the Holy Spirit,
Evermore with us abide.
When the touch of God Almighty
Rends the rock and bursts the sod,
May we meet His Standard Bearer,
With the shout "Who is like God?"

In another column there will be found an interesting account of a visit to Hursley and the grave of John Keble. The writer shows good cause why the memory of the poet-priest should not be suffered to perish. It is not only that he did so much to foster the devotional spirit through his poetic musings, nor that he showed the beautiful example of a man with rare endowments of the mind content and proud to minister to the spiritual needs of simple rustics. It is that he was the great inspirer and guide of the Oxford movement. But so modest was his character, so retiring his disposition, that he preferred to use others as the agents of his influence, himself remaining in the background. Those, however, who knew him best acknowledged the weight of his counsel and the keenness of his foresight. The Church in England and beyond seas at this moment owes a debt of gratitude which it can never repay to the man who lived and died a simple priest of a Hampshire village, and it is meet that some who at least acknowledge the debt should go on pilgrimage to visit his grave. There have been and are shrines more magnificent, pilgrimages more picturesque and numerous, but there have been also names less saintly that have evoked such posthumous honours. The gathering at Hursley last week was profoundly interesting. Such commemorations of a departed worthy are far more convincing proofs of appreciation than is the raising of a marble monument, which too often is only the precursor of oblivion. Let Westminster Abbey be the witness.—Church Times.

"As to Eucharistic adoration, Keble brought home to them what they so much needed to be reminded of now. They must be devoted to the mysterious presence of Christ's Body and Blood under the form of bread and wine. God always to be adored, and wherever He specially places His presence, there to be specially adored, and wherever there is a special adoration of His presence, as in the Holy Sacrament, there to be adored with deep devotion, and in these days they know perfectly well that Reservation, as a comfort for the sick and dying, must be contended for by the Church as a matter of charity to God's children, as that truth connected with what Keble taught of Christ's presence in the Holy Sacrament."—Knox-Little.

The Magazine.

A good many of the old and regular subscribers have failed to renew their subscription for the Magazine. It is quite necessary, in order to maintain its present self-dependent condition, that all subscribers stand by it; and also in regard to our advertisers, we must ask again that all our readers patronize them whenever possible. In order to retain their cards we must give them some return. We recommend our advertisers as being first-class in the various lines of trade specified. Please always mention ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE.

The Work of the Convention.

As is generally the case, the recent Convention is more remarkable for what it left undone than for what it did. This is occasion for thankfulness. The enormous mass of work which lay before it was scarcely touched. In the House of Deputies an unnecessary amount of time was wasted in trying to find out what to do and how to do it. It is amazing that men will travel three thousand miles to represent the Church in a deliberative body whose methods of procedure and voting they have not learned. However, the new Constitution, as recommended, was adopted with some changes. The most notable one was the omission of the Huntington clause, which was intended to provide an "open door" for Christian unity. The debate on the subject showed a split in the "broad Church" party. The article providing for the provincial system went through both houses with surprising ease. It was noted that the New York delegation voted solidly for it, "in spite of Episcopal admonition."

The failure of the canons on divorce need cause neither surprise nor much regret. While they made for a certain strictness which would have been advantageous, they were, as a prominent secular paper clearly pointed out, founded on no principle, but merely on policy. They did not accord with the mind of the Church set forth in the marriage service, "Until death us do part," and "Thou whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder," are sufficiently explicit, and the doctrine loses nothing by not having canonical interpretation.

The matter of Marginal Readings for the Bible caused much discussion and conference. There did not seem to be any great demand for the acceptance of the Commission's report and no one wanted to disparage the labors of these Christian scholars by rejecting their report. So the Commission was continued, and instructed to be a little less radical.

The general tendency of the Convention does not appear to have been one of finality, but rather one of discussion and postponement. The legal title of the Church, the reorganization of the missionary machinery, and many other important matters, are left for the Boston Convention in 1904. Meanwhile may God prosper His Church in this land.

The appointment of Bishops for the Philippines and Porto Rico is surely ill-advised and inexpedient—just as a former one in Brazil and another contemplated experiment in Mexico—and, apparently, those appointed are guaranteed, unlike St. Paul, $3000 and expenses.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

Parish Notes.

No sessions of Catechism on Sunday, November 24th.

The Clergy ask to be informed of all changes in address.

Solemn Mass and solemn Even-song each Sunday during November.

Men's voices (volunteers) are very much needed for the Choir. Apply to Choirmaster.

The offerings on All Saints' Day will be placed at the disposal of the Corporation of All Saints' Sisters of the Poor to assist in paying the interest on Mission House mortgage.

The hymns in the various services are for the devotion of the people; it is hoped that all may sing heartily; it is preferable for all to sing the air and not to attempt the different parts.

Members of the Congregation are asked not to take possession of sittings in middle and north aisles unless with permission of the usher; seats in south aisle are, for the most part, unrented and free.

Donations of money for Altar flowers for St. Clement's tide and Christmas tide are asked from each member of the Congregation; those who prefer may put them in the box so marked in the Church Corridor.

The present addresses of certain parishioners is unknown to the Clergy, and this prevents their being visited. It is the intention that every faithful and regular member of the Congregation shall be visited, as far as possible, by one of the Clergy at least once during each year.

Some very handsome gold brocade has been purchased for the festival burse and veil; enough material has been bought for chasuble orphreys, etc.; the design is one of Mr. Bodley's. Mr. I. E. Linton has promised to make the design for embroidery; the string of pearls and cross, as well as the other pearl ornaments given, will be used.

The cost of the new tiles was $800. About $500 was given by various persons, including Whitsun offerings; $50 was set apart from certain discretionary funds; $250 was, by order of the Vestry, paid from current funds to make up amount. We now have a floor solid and substantial because of its rugged nature—in harmony with the architectural lines of the Church.

The interest of the Parish is asked in the preparation of a missionary box to be sent to Oconto, in the Diocese of Fond du Lac, early in autumn.

Articles of clothing, and gifts, both in money and in kind, will be most acceptable, and may be sent to Miss Lex, 11 South Twenty-first Street, or through the Reverend Clergy.

Rummage Sale.

Articles of all kinds are urgently requested for this sale, which is appointed for Tuesday and Wednesday, November 12th and 13th, in the large schoolroom.

The proceeds are for the Poor Fund, which depends for its usefulness upon the generosity of members of the Congregation.

Sea Shore Home.

About $1500 in cash is now available for the purchase and necessary repairs of a suitable property, but this is not quite half of the amount required, depending, however, upon the interest of friends. Several properties have been examined and terms obtained. It is expected that some purchase may be effected before next summer, for it is a matter of necessity; the house at present used has always been unsuitable and is very much out of repair.

A most desirable property, situated directly upon the beach, on which is a substantial house within convenient distance of the city and near the railroad, is being favorably considered, and, in case of acceptance, title will be taken as soon as possible.

Clergy House.

Mr. Sellers has finished the specifications, and all the details are about completed so that bids may be asked. The cut on the cover of the Magazine is from a pen-and-ink sketch by Mr. Sellers and will give everyone an idea; it will be a great improvement to the Church property. Have you given any donation for the building? Over one-half the Communicants have not. Is this honest, conscientious or just? Is it because you cannot, or is it because you will not?

All Saints.

God of the living, in Whose eyes
Unveiled Thy whole creation lies,
All souls are Thine; we must not say,
That those are dead who pass away;
From this vain world of flesh set free,
We know them living unto Thee.

Released from earthly toil and strife,
With Thee is hidden now their life,
Thine are their thoughts, their works, their powers
All Thine, yet still most truly ours;
For well we know where'er they be
That all are living unto Thee.

Not spilt like water on the ground,
Not buried in a sleep profound,
Not wandering in unknown despair
Beyond Thy voice, Thy arm, Thy care;
Not lost upon a boundless sea,
Not dead, but living unto Thee.

Thy Will be done; for Thou art just,
To Thee we leave them, Lord, in trust.
And bless Thee for the love that gave
Thy Son to fill a human grave,
That none might fear that world to see,
Where all are living unto Thee.

The Invocation of Saints.

Out of the Christian consciousness of the certainty of things spiritual has arisen the practice of the Invocation of the Saints. It has come from the implicit belief in all those manifold relations between the living, the departed and the glorified which are condensed into that article of the revealed faith, "I believe in the Communion of Saints." Christian souls knew that they were aided by the prayers of living saints; thus they besought martyrs on the way to suffering to remember them when they had attained their glory. They had no doubt but that the martyrs would be received into God's presence, and they had no doubt but that those glorified martyrs would pray for them. It was never a matter of explicit statement, every one simply accepted it as a fact and acted accordingly. And they never sought an explanation as to how the saints could hear their prayers; that they did hear them was a simple conviction which needed no explanation. Early Christian belief in the Communion of Saints was too real and practical to admit either the need of its statement or an explanation of it. When doubt finally crept in, the Church settled the matter authoritatively by inserting the statement in Her Creed.

Thus began the practice of the invocation of the saints, and, resting on the conviction of the human heart, it grew and spread—accepted and encouraged by the greatest of living saints and doctors. To-day it has its strength in the assurance of experience that it is neither futile nor vain, and that God has permitted it to be a means of drawing souls near to Him and deepening in them the life of grace. We know that God's saints are pleasing to Him, we know that He is honored when we honor those whom He has glorified. What more natural than to realize how our Lord rejoices when we honor His Blessed Mother by asking her prayers for us! Nearness to God brings a keen sense of our relations to those with Him in glory, and loving devotion has ever led souls to express this more definitely in practice.

Theologically, the invocation of the saints is not a dogma and is not necessary to salvation, but it is a pious practice founded upon most sure warrant of Creed and Scripture. The practice itself may not be proved from Scripture, but the doctrine upon which it rests may. It has been of universal acceptance in the Church, except in the Anglican Church, since the Reformation. Yet even there it has not been denied, but simply removed from required use and left optional because of the undeniable abuses which had arisen in connection with it. It is these abuses and not the practice itself which Article XXII speaks of when it says, "The Romish doctrine concerning Invocation of Saints is a fond thing vainly invented, etc." The Article condemns, not the Catholic doctrine, but a doctrine of a certain kind of people called, in the Latin version of the Articles (which is of equal authority with the English), Romanenses. These Romanenses were those who perverted into extreme superstition the true doctrine as it was held by both Romans and Anglicans.

Thus we need not fear the danger of falling into heresy when we honor God's holy ones by invoking their prayers on our behalf. We need not worry as to how they know our prayers; we may imitate early Christian faith and pray without knowing. So, when our Lord Jesus Christ shall come with all His saints (1 Thess. iii, 13) we shall not be strangers to that attendant throng.

All Saints' Day.

The dead alone are great.
When heavenly plants abide on earth
Their soil is one of dewless dearth,
But when they die, a morning shower
Comes down and makes their memory flower
With odors sweet, though late.

The dead alone are dear.
When they are here strange shadows fall,
From our own forms, and darken all;
But when they leave us all the shade
Is round our own sad footsteps made,
And they are bright and clear.

The dead alone are blest.
When they are here clouds mar their day,
And bitter snowfalls nip their May;
But when their tempest time is done,
The light and heat of Heaven's own sun,
Broods on their land of rest.

PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1901.

St. Clement's Tide.

The key note for our festal joy always comes from the loving greeting of our good Bishop, who writes this year: "I hope the coming observance of St. Clement's Day will be spiritually fruitful to you and all the members of your Congregation." The Bishop also licensed the Collect, Epistle and Gospel for use during the festival.

The first Vespers were sung in the Chapel on Friday evening; the attendance at the early Masses was not as large as should have been, owing no doubt to Saturday being a difficult day for many people.

Messages and greetings from many friends outside the Parish, tidings of Masses offered in many and distant places, made our joy the greater; some absent Parishioners sent their offerings, testifying their love.

Frs. Sargent and McGarvey, Revs. R. H. Paine, D. I. Odell, G. R. Underhill, sent greeting, while many—Revs. H. I. Meigs, Dr. Schulte, J. Sherlock, A. Welling, Chas. Steele, C. H. DeGarmo, Erskine Wright—by their presence manifested their loving interest.

The Choir, under the direction of of Mr. S. W. Sears sang, Mozart's VII Mass, with a real and true devotion, the Soloists being Messrs. Kneedler and Hotz and Masters Cousley and Downey; the hymn during the Procession was the delightful "Jerusalem, My Happy Home," to the old familiar Stamford tune. There was no sermon on the Feast-day but on Sunday Fr. Huntington preached both in the morning and at the Procession of Guilds.

The inclement weather no doubt interfered with the attendance of many, but the festival has been a glorious one—this the glad experience of all.

It would not be fitting to praise the willing hands and loving hearts that made it all worthy of our God's glory, befitting the dignity of St. Clement's, for His people offered willingly the outward reverence of the services, and the inner devotion of the people had in it nothing selfish; it was to follow the example of fortitude to watch and stand fast in the Lord, to be true yokefellows of our Patron, who did not count his life dear.

On Monday evening a company of happy children enjoyed a series of pictures of the Buffalo Exposition, and reviewed with sad interest the closing events in the late President's life.

On Tuesday a number of parishioners courteously attended the Parish Tea. The Principal of the Pennsylvania Institute for the Blind kindly permitted certain pupils to play for us, and some of the choir boys sang. There were the usual remarks concerning the spiritual and material condition of the people and the unity of the Congregation in carrying out the work of the Parish, not according to individual caprice, but in accordance with the desires of those to whom God has entrusted the care and responsibility. The increase of Communions and attendance at Masses are a truer test than ill natured criticism and disappointed selfishness. St. Clement's is a body of faithful, loving souls, as he who knew from "ten happy years' ministry" says: "I am sure there never were, and never will be, such loyal and devoted people as those of St. Clement's in any country."

Parish Notes.

The offerings on All Souls' Day were for Burial Fund—$17.91.

Rev. E. N. Webber will preach every Sunday night during Advent.

Members of the Congregation are desired to join in the singing of the hymns.

A member of the Parish has offered to keep St. Katharine's Altar supplied with flowers, in memory.

The crucifix belonging to St. Katharine's Altar and the cross of St. John Evangelist's Altar have been relacquered.

The Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops was publicly read after the Solemn Mass on Sunday, November 10th, in the presence of such as were minded to hear it.

The offerings at All Saints' were for the interest on the mortgage ($320 a year) on the Mission House and amounted to $163.40, which has been paid over to the Treasurer.

Mr. Sellers has been pushing the work on the new Clergy House as rapidly as possible. The plans are now in condition to get estimates, then contracts made and work commenced and carried on.

"Bona Mors" has been said each Monday. Over 500 names were sent in for commemoration on All Souls' Day, the forms being used almost without exception. Many names were sent in for the Requiems on the other days.

Twenty-five dollars has been promised, on behalf of St. Clement's, toward building a school-house for colored children at Wilmington, N. C. The work is under the charge of Rev. E. R. Bennett. Donations toward the amount are asked.

The rummage sale was a great success, $100 was realized for the Poor Fund. There was a good attendance of buyers, and the various articles were quickly disposed of with every appearance of satisfaction to the purchasers. We are grateful to all who sent donations.

One of the workers in the Shanghai (China) Mission has written as to an oven for making wafers. Arrangements are being made to have it given by St. Clement's. St. Saviour's Ward, C.B.S., will give part—if not all—of the cost; but donations from others will be welcome.

Arrangements have been made so that all the seats in the south aisle shall be free, those heretofore renting pews or sittings having kindly consented to be transferred elsewhere. Members of the Congregation are respectfully requested not to occupy seats elsewhere unless with usher's permission.

Donations of money are asked for the coming year.

Mr. Sears has kindly offered his service for the Children's Mass at 9.15 each Sunday; he will begin on Advent Sunday.

Christmastide.

Donations are requested to provide dinners for worthy poor of the Parish, also for the Mother's Supper, which takes place on Thursday, December 26th. The children will have their tree on Friday, December 27th, at 2 and 8 P. M. The treats for the various Guilds will be duly announced.

Communicants are reminded of the privilege and spiritual blessing of receiving Holy Communion on the Feast of the Nativity. Advent Days, with the consideration of the Last Things and preparation to welcome the Lord of Glory, should have impressed the true end of our being upon the deepest part of our nature. The outcome and our condition will be manifest in the keeping of the birthday of the Babe of Bethlehem.

There ought to be a large number of His followers who will prepare to greet Him with their heart's affection to pay Him homage as their Lord.

The Clergy will hear confessions on the days preceding Christmas; the hours may be learned from the Service List on the bulletin boards. Permission of the Clergy and six hours fast is expected for any making Communion at midnight.

The Endowment Fund.

Four years ago this fund was commenced, and to it we have devoted the offerings on St. Clement's Day, some few legacies and various gifts of small amounts—no special effort—and yet it now amounts to $6,135.81, increased by this year's offerings, $487.98, to $6,623.79. The plan means just one more assurance that this very property is to be devoted so far as in us lies to the purpose to which it was dedicated, the worship of Almighty God, in honour of St. Clement.

It has been a very great happiness to learn that several people have provided legacies in their wills for this fund, and we hope that many others will do the same, and we would urge that some care be taken that the wills are properly drawn and correctly worded, those so minded may get the proper title by asking the Clergy.

"Catholic Champion."

After thirteen years of efficient work for the spread of the Catholic religion, "Catholic Champion" is brought to an end; the labor of the editor and his friends has been a service of love given to the American Church, and it is a matter of regret that the health of Rev. Arthur Ritchie has made it necessary to give the paper up. It has never catered to the popularity of the moment, nor descended to the triviality of compromise, but its attitude has been a definite and unflinching setting forth of the principles of true religion, and claiming all truth and practice as the inheritance of our Communion. We are certain that we express the grateful feeling of all our readers as we make note of this fact.

The Committee of Management desire to remind the members of the Parish that the care of the vestments has been given to the Altar Guild, and it is their duty to keep them in repair and furnish new ones when needed. This they cannot do without financial aid.

Contributions to the Vestment Fund, no matter how small, will be most acceptable, and may be given to the Rector or to the Treasurer of the Guild.

Sea Shore Home.

The property of which we spoke last month has been bought, subject to approval of the title, for the All Saints' Sea Shore Home for Women and Children. It is situated at Sea Isle City, N. J., directly on the beach—Marine Avenue and Ludlam Street—a large building formerly known as Prospect Hall, 44 feet front and 110 feet in depth and an additional lot on Ludlam Street, 46 x 110 feet. The beach is of hard sand and the slope very gradual, so that it may furnish a pleasant playground as well as a safe bathing place.

Sea Isle is a quiet and well ordered place, well suited for the Home. The house is well built and in good repair, but water must be introduced and some sewage arrangements made, the exterior needs painting, the kitchen needs enlarging and a room must be extended to form a temporary Chapel. There are no Services of the Church, so that we shall be doing missionary work—at any rate, ministering to Church people there and so assisting them to live a Christian life. We shall have the services of Dr. Wm. H. Wells, who will look after the health of the household. As to finances, about $1500 is available for the purchase, but the rest of the money must be borrowed, and $500 at least will be needed for the repairs. It is hoped to sell the lots at Point Pleasant for the amount paid for them. It will be with regret that we turn away from Point Pleasant after so many years (since 1887) and with its many pleasant memories and associations, but it is to our own house, directly on the beach, and with safe bathing facilities. Mr. John Douglass Brown, Jr., has attended to all the legal and business matters involved, and the title is vested in Corporation of All Saints' Sisters of the Poor. We earnestly ask continued and enlarged interest on the part of those who have always been kind, and we hope that the work may be increased.

Mr. John Douglass Brown, Jr., Treasurer Sea Shore Home, kindly furnishes this second list of subscriptions and donations:

PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY, 1902.

Christmas at St. Clement's.

The members of the Guild of St. Vincent began their preparations for the decoration of the Church the preceding week, so that everything was ready on Sunday night to put the screen in place and cover it; the work was done in time for the festival, and right cheerfully it appeared. Monday and Tuesday the Clergy heard confessions, while the Sisters, members of the Altar Guild and other workers made ready sacred vessels, vestments, ornaments, flowers—all that was needed to do honor to the feast and give due solemnity to the services. Mr. Sears and the Choir had faithfully prepared the music, the Church buildings had been thoroughly cleaned, Altars adorned, the Crib prepared—every preparation, material and spiritual, had been thought of, planned and carried out.

The First Vespers were sung in St. John's Chapel, the midnight Mass was also said in the Chapel. The singing of hymns during the Service gave a touch of brightness and gladness to the solemn worship, the angelic message of glory and peace to men of good will, those who are found watching.

Low Masses were said at 6, 7, 8 and 9.15, at which 369 made their Communion, performing their proper Christmas duty.

At 11 o'clock Solemn Mass was sung, Rev. F. D. Ward, C. C. Quin and W. A. McClenthen being the sacred Ministers; it was preceded by a Solemn Procession and there was a short sermon. The music was "Gounod's III Mass" with part of "Mozart's VII."

Christmas hymns always strike a joyful note that only increases as the years go by. The familiar words did not fail to arouse devotion once again. "Of the Father's Love," "Adeste Fideles," "While Shepherd's Watched," "Hark, the Herald Angels," and "Angels from the Realms" made real the devotion and praise.

For every purpose God's children had given generously and many a heart was helped and cheered.

It was indeed a festival of interior joy and cheer.

The Clergy and Sisters were bountifully provided for in every way.

The Sisters gave out 36 dinners and 57 persons gave $185.50 for this and the Mother's Supper, while more was provided for the Guild treats, etc.

$108.47 was given for the flowers at St. Clement's and Christmastide.

An anonymous check for Sinking Fund, through the courtesy of Messrs. Drexel & Co., making an explanation and getting the consent of the Contributor, has been placed in the Endowment Fund, which now amounts to $7809.15.

We might speak of many things that touched the heart. We choose one—a letter, that speaks for itself; $6.60 was inclosed:

"Dear Father.—This is what I have received each month for my Choir pay since last January and I have saved it for you to put in the Endowment Fund.

Respectfully yours,

P. S.—If you put this donation in the Magazine, will you please say, 'From a Choir boy?'"

Parish Notes.

$55.00 profit of Parish Tea was added to the Poor Fund.

St. Vincent's and the Altar Guild offices for January will be omitted.

The shrubs and plants have been removed from the western end of the garden.

A hand rail has been put for the outside steps leading down to the Crypt Chapel.

The Choir men will have their annual theatre party and supper on some night during the month.

The familiar music of Marbecke's Mass has been sung during Advent and the Dies Iræ at night.

A set of vestments (white) has been promised; it includes chasuble, stole, maniple, burse and veil.

The Altar Guild has promised two stoles to St. Mark's, Lewistown, Penna., in response to their appeal.

Mr. I. E. Linton has made a very beautiful design for the burse and veil to be used at Solemn Masses on festivals.

$75.50 has been given by fourteen persons for the Children's Fund; the response has been a very disappointing one.

The members of St. Vincent's Guild will have their annual dinner on St. Vincent's Day, Wednesday, January 22d.

The Sisters gave Thanksgiving dinners to seven worthy families; groceries and coal to certain other deserving persons.

Generous response has been made to the fund for Altar flowers, not only by the regular subscribers, but also through the box in the corridor.

Through the generosity of friends, members of all the Guilds, Choir boys, Clergy and Sisters have been specially remembered.

Material for a dossal has been given to St. Mark's, Hammonton, N. J., for which the Senior Warden has written to express the thanks of the Congregation.

The silver cross, "in memory of Eleanor," given each year by a friend, is awarded to Elsie Forrester and a similar one was also presented to Louise Tapper.

The collection on Sunday, January 19th, will be for mission work in this Diocese; last year the amount was $147.33, and we hope it may be even larger this year.

The attendance of workers on Tuesday and Thursday mornings at the Altar Guild has not been as large as it ought to be; it is hoped that the number may be increased after Christmas.

Rev. C. C. Quin has renewed the life of the Choir Club and every Tuesday evening the boys meet and have a happy time. Donations of games for their amusement will be much appreciated.

$10.00 has been promised toward the support of a general missionary for the Diocese of Sacramento; the Rev. Octavius Parker, with the approval of the Bishop, is raising sufficient funds for three years.

Anniversary Masses were said during the month as follows: December 12th, Stewart Stone, Priest; December 14th, John Neill; December 19th, Rachel Hewson; December 23d, Sister Georgina of All Saints.

The Children of the Catechism in accordance with the Bishop's request gave their Advent offerings for Jacksonville, Fla. The offerings of the Little Catechism were given as usual for St. Mary's Home for little colored boys, Baltimore, Md.

$86.75 has been received from four persons toward the cost of the wafer machine for China Mission. The Bishop of Shanghai has written to thank us for the promise of it. It is hoped the order may be given as soon as definite word comes from China.

The Sisters were able to give out dinners for Christmas to those worthy families who would otherwise have had none. The Mothers' Supper was postponed to Thursday, January 2d; the day after Christmas seemed almost too soon for them to be able thoroughly to enjoy their treat.

New Clergy House.

The bids have been received and the lowest estimate, which includes some furnishing, is $15,666; the Vestry has authorized the Committee to sign the contract; the work is to be commenced immediately and the house is to be ready in June. It is greatly to be desired that $2000 still required may be given.

The Bishop of the Diocese.

The illness of the Bishop is a matter of the most intense grief to all the people. Bishop Whitaker has won the respect, admiration and esteem of all by his unalterable justice and fairness, making every one feel that he realized his Divine Commission and Episcopal authority. It cannot but be a matter of sincere regret that he has borne the burden until a serious collapse has come, when the election of a coadjutor a few years ago might have spared him for a longer period with unimpaired strength and that indomitable vigor which has been the wonder and delight of us all. It is very much to be hoped that the proper authorities may not delay the calling of a special convention for the election of a coadjutor. A decision should have been made at once as soon as the Bishop's condition was realized and action taken. It is the only course to relieve the Bishop of all strain and anxiety and to provide for the oversight of the Diocese that is necessary. The prayers of all our people are asked for such a restoration of health as may be God's Will and our happiness.

It is announced that The Standing Committee of the Diocese have asked the Bishop to take a year's rest and to consent to the election of a Coadjutor —a Special Convention to be called for this purpose. The prayers of the people are asked for guidance in the election.

A Non-Parochial Anecdote.

A man was once asked why he did not go to church. "Because," he replied, "I have never found any place which would give me all I want." "What do you want?" "Well, I want the enthusiasm of the Methodists, the dignity of the Presbyterians, the hymns of the Anglican Church and the devotion of the Roman Catholics." "Then," replied his questioner, "why don't you go to St. Clement's?"

Christmas.

Shine undimmed, O Star of Ages!
Hover round us, Angel wings!
Lowliest shepherds, wisest sages,
Worship still the King of kings!
King of kings on Throne Eternal!
Babe, Whose Birth we sing to-night!
Youngest! oldest! most supernal!
Life of Life and Light of Light!

Year by year some links are broken,
Mourned and missed by hearts that love;
Yet we trust the Christmas token
Know them held by Thee above:
Know that ancient splendid story
Sung by seraphs in the night
Spoke of an unending glory,
Life of Life and Light of Light!

Touch thy stricken world with healing,
Bid our wars and discords cease,
Christmas Star! Thy rays revealing,
Shed across our storms Thy Peace.
Hush our tears and soothe our sadness,
Babe, Whose Birth we sing to-night,
Prince of Peace! Eternal Gladness!
Life of Life and Light of Light!

Seashore Home.

It is a great satisfaction that we are able to give a picture of the house at Sea Isle City, N. J., which has been bought. The property, formerly known as Prospect Hall, and owned by Mr. Taws, is now held by the Corporation of All Saints Sisters of the Poor. Mr. Scull, a conveyancer at Sea Isle, after a search of the deed approved the title. The total cost was $2,750.00; the Treasurer had $1,500.00 at his disposal and $1,250.00 was borrowed to make up the amount. About $500 more will be needed to make some repairs, introduce water, and make an addition that shall serve as a temporary Chapel. The building is in very fair condition, and will be in order to open and receive visitors next summer. The furniture, etc., at Point Pleasant will be moved, but there ought to be some new things, particularly iron bedsteads; this may well enlist the interest of persons between now and the summer.

Mr. John Douglass Brown, Jr., the Treasurer, has carefully examined the whole matter, conducted the negotiations and brought them to this satisfactory conclusion. We quote his judgment as to the property: "I had an opportunity of examining the house with the present owner, and was very much pleased with it. It seems to me that at the price paid for it the property is a bargain in itself, and I doubt whether you could have found a house better suited for the purpose. Sea Isle City is quiet, not too large, and easily reached from Philadelphia. The house is directly on a superb beach, and the children ought to be able to amuse themselves safely during every hour of the day, and I should think could be allowed to bathe, and play about on the beach without the slightest anxiety on the part of those in authority."

Missions.

The Bishop of Fond du Lac writes:

"I thank you sincerely for your generous donation to the missionary work of the Diocese. It is a great encouragement to see how it is growing in the Central West."

The Priest to whom the box was sent writes:

"Accept my most sincere thanks in my own name and in that of my people for your most generous kindness to us. Only one barrel, so far, has been delivered, and that is so well filled with such nice and excellent things that it is a revelation to me of the great trouble you must have been put to as well as of the kindness of the good hearts that helped to fill the box. . . . I have already begun to distribute the things and I shall get some ladies at work at once in cutting out, etc. I know it will be some satisfaction to you to know that many poor hearts will be gladdened by your kindness and bodies warmly clothed for the winter. As for myself, the cassock is an excellent fit, and I much appreciate the girdle and beretta. As for the enclosure of $20, I thank you again and again. Will you be so good as to convey my expression of extreme gratitude to all those who contributed to the box and accept the warmest thanks of my people and myself?"

The second barrel was received later and duly acknowledged.

Anno Domini, 1902.

It was a gracious and helpful custom when men and women began a new year with a strong and deep determination to live up to that ideal given in the life of Christ, to strive to attain the very best that they could. This truly marked a new year of our Lord, it recognized the fact that life belonged to Him who gave it and in whom it must reach its end. The resolution had to be founded on a real consciousness of sin. We do not hear so much about it now. People do as they please, their standard is what they like, what is pleasant and easy. Not only is this true of the godless and worldly, but it is defended by those who feel the necessity of something stricter for themselves.

It is not only apparent in social contact and friendly intercourse, every one is right if he does what he thinks he wants to do, and you must not blame him or point out the peril of his position, but in philanthropic effort and neighborly courtesy there must be lavish provision for bodily warmth and comfort, training of the intellect, amusement and recreation, but no thought or heed for the soul, its God, its sins or its future. Well does an English Priest, of wide experience, ask: "Ought the breaking down of prejudice be a result for which Christians should be thankful? Would St. Paul have contemplated the idea of gathering together the Corinthian boxers into a club in the hope that he might get them to look favorably on his Sunday meetings and side with him when there was a street row and he might need their help?

"The business of Christian ministers is to make men Christians."

A new year ought to mean a more vigorous effort to know God, resist sin and walk in holiness of life for ourselves and to teach these principles to others.

Carol for New Year's Day.

The old year now away has fled,
The new year it is entered;
Then let us now our sins downtread,
And joyfully all appear.
Let merry be this holiday,
And let us run with sport and play,
Leave sorrow—let's cast care away.
God send you a happy New Year!

And now with New Year's gifts each friend
Unto each other they do send;
God grant we may our lives amend,
And that the truth may appear.
Now, like the snake, cast off your skin
Of evil thoughts and wicked sin,
And to amend this year begin.
God send us a merry New Year!

And now, let all the company
In friendly manner all agree;
For here we're welcome, all may see,
Unto this jolly good cheer.
Good fortune to my master send,
And to my dame, which is your friend.
God bless us all, and so I end—
God send us a happy New Year!

Oxford, Milwaukee.

During the closing hours of the San Francisco Convention occurred one of those strange and thrilling scenes that arouse attention and kindle interest. The distinguished deputy from the Diocese of New York obtained the floor, and, to the surprise of his friends, confessed the defeat of his long cherished plans and hopes and surrendered his leadership to younger men. The words were pathetic but full of encouragement to those who had faithfully opposed his revolutionary ideas. While the reasons for his action were not at that time apparent to those at a distance, yet the fuller knowledge of the whole tone of the Convention and the temper of its members only shows that the influence of Catholic principles had to be reckoned with; while there was little in the way of advertising oratory, there was much of unwavering opposition and unanswerable conviction.

One of the prominent Bishops of the Pacific Coast writes that it was found necessary to have early Communion in all the churches and that these services were well attended. In reference to change of title, he says that when a subject is discussed earnestly by men on the streets and in hotel lobbies there is no longer a question as to its success but only as to the best manner of carrying it out—the most fitting time for its accomplishment. There were other indications of the influence of Catholics, the appearance of Bishops, Priests and laity at services, where the proper ceremonial of the Church was carried out, as worshippers; also Bishops vested in cope and mitre, with the dignity becoming their ecclesiastical rank, taking part in and countenancing such services. Many, no doubt, returned to their homes more than convinced that the Journalistic Congregation of Rites, constituted a year ago, and to which we then called attention, did not know what they were talking about when they dubbed a solemn and devout service "a circus." Perhaps some of them felt somewhat like a young man, of the Presbyterian persuasion, who said, after attending High Mass, "I would not like to go there all the time, it seems too much like Heaven." Principles succeed not by surrendering but by asserting them. It is still the unalterable doctrine of the Church of the Living God that Episcopal ordination is absolutely necessary to consecrate bread and wine that it may become the Body and Blood of Christ—and in this it differs from Christo-pagans and Unitarians.

Clandestine Marriages.

There is only one reason—and that not a very commendable one for the parties concerned—that can excuse any Priest for reading the Marriage Service for two persons unknown to him and without witnesses who know them.

It is of the nature of an insult to any Priest to be asked to marry those who are strangers to him, as if the amount of the wedding fee was a consideration, and it is a reflection on a woman to bring her without friends to witness to her respectability before a strange clergyman for one of the most solemn events of her life. Even ignorance can hardly excuse any one of the parties concerned in such an unspeakably unworthy performance. In every lawful marriage both man and woman must be of age and baptized and without other partner alive. The Priest must know one of the parties at least, and there should be two reputable witnesses who know them. Witnesses can never be furnished to silly people who are making an escapade of a serious reality.

Clergy House Addition, Etc.

The term used in the architect's plans accurately describes the building which is not in any sense a separate one, but the carrying out of the original scheme and true idea, by which Church, Parish Building and Clergy House are different portions of the same structure, the different parts united as to roof, foundations and walls. The articles and memorandum of agreement were signed by the Rector and Secretary of the Vestry on behalf of the Corporation, and Frank S. Riggs, the Contractor, on Thursday, January 2d, for a building in accordance with certain drawings and specifications which have been prepared by Horace Wells Sellers, architect. The contract includes mason's work, cut stone, plastering, cement pavements, carpenter's work, roofing, hardware, iron work, painting and glazing. Work to commence within six days and to proceed in a prompt and diligent manner, and to be completed, finished and delivered on or before June 1, 1902, the cost to be $13,862.00. Payment to be made in three sums: (1.) When third floor joists are laid and all walls and partitions finished to that level. (2.) When the roof is on and the building completely enclosed, plastered and ready to receive interior wood work. (3.) Within thirty days of final completion of all work, to the satisfaction of the architect and its acceptance by the Corporation.

Plumbing, heating and certain other work has not yet been arranged for.

The Contractor furnishes a bond.

The building is 78 ft. 4 in. by 29 ft. 8 in. three stories and cellar. It is on the south-western part of the Church property adjoining the present Parish Building, the front toward 20th Street, the southern and eastern walls of brown stone—the rooms for the most part have a southern exposure; the entrance is just back of the present south porch.

The first floor provides for reception room, library, refectory, kitchen, pantry and sitting-room.

The second floor has studies for five clergy, two bedrooms and bath.

The third floor has four sleeping rooms for clergy, four other sleeping rooms and bath. Closet room is provided.

The first floor to be chestnut finish, the rest cypress finish, the flooring hard pine; the windows of leaded glass. A large vault will also be built where church records and other valuables may be properly and securely deposited.

The work began on Tuesday, January 14th, without any particular ceremonies, save the prayers of the people at the Mass; but on the following day one of the neighbors called attention to a restriction in the Deed of Clergy House lot which would hinder us putting any building within ten feet of Appletree Street; this restriction had not been referred to in any deed since 1862. Efforts were made to have all parties interested agree to the removal of this restriction, but as the others seemed unwilling, there was nothing to be done except to ask Mr. Sellers to set back fifteen feet of the building to a line ten feet from Appletree Street; this cuts out 7 ft. by 15 ft., but taking advantage of the whole lot it only causes a slight rearrangement, and it is hoped the building may progress rapidly.

Parish Notes.

A violet dossal with wings has been given for the Altar of St. Katharine.

The Parish has a reversionary interest in the estate of the late Miss McManemy.

The annual accounts of the various Guilds and the Poor Fund will be printed in the May Magazine.

Rev. E. N. Webber will preach each Sunday night during Lent and give the Meditations on Ash Wednesday.

A square piano (second hand) would be very useful in the Choir-room; perhaps some one has an instrument they would like to get rid of.

Candles will be blessed on Candlemas day; persons who desire may supply their own or obtain what they desire from Rev. C. C. Quin.

The Vestry at their stated meeting, Tuesday, January 14th, duly elected Messrs. Brown, Flanders and Wetherill as the Lay Deputies of the parish to the special Diocesan Convention.

The 15th annual report of the House of St. Michael and All Angels for Young Colored Cripples has been received; $249 is acknowledged from members of St. Clement's congregation.

The Advent offerings of the children of the Catechism for the Church in Jacksonville, Florida, amounted to $7.00. The Lenten offerings will be for St. Mark's Church, Wilmington, N. C., Rev E. R. Barnett, for which we have pledged $25.00.

The Vestry have authorized the Accounting Warden to make provision for perpetual insurance policies on the buildings when the present term policies expire. The original perpetual policies were sold some years ago, when it was needful to raise money for current expenses.

Ashes made from palms of last year will be blessed on Ash Wednesday at 6.30 A. M., and according to ancient Christian custom will be imposed on the forehead of such as are minded to submit themselves in holy humility and contrition after the manner of the early discipline.

"Remember, mortal, that thou art but dust and unto dust shalt thou return."

The offerings, Sunday, January 19th, at 7, 8 and 9.15, together with those of the week days preceding, have been placed at the disposal of the Bishop of Shanghai, China. They amounted to $56.43. At eleven o'clock the offerings, which amounted to $71.50, have been divided as last year, between the Church of St. John Chrysostom, 28th St. and Susquehanna Ave. and St. Elizabeth's Church, 16th and Mifflin Sts., two very important mission works, in poor neighborhoods, without any rich parishioners and unaided by the Board of Missions of the Diocese.

Bishop White Parish Library Association.

The 62d Annual Report has been received; $1226.22 was received during the year, 29 libraries were sent out during the year as gifts to clergy in various dioceses, at a cost of $1133.13.

Fifteen parishes of this Diocese subscribed $465.50.

Eleven members of St. Clement's gave $24. Miss Brown is the member of the Board of Managers from this Parish.

Lent.

Ash Wednesday occurs on February 12th; it will be kept, as is the custom, as a day of Parochial Retreat; the Addresses will be at 10, 12 A. M., 3 and 5.15 P. M. While permission is given for any one to be present at the Addresses, the full benefit of the exercises will only be obtained by those who give themselves entirely to their spiritual influence. The idea of being alone with God for any period is to reflect upon one's condition with reference to God's purpose, to seek light upon one's duty and by firm resolution to bind one's self for the time to come. To some it means a true start, to others, a return and renewal, and to still others, deeper earnestness and progress. Food will be provided for those who desire it in the morning and at noon, but they must signify their desire on the day before; an opportunity will be given to such to pay the cost of such refreshment. Confessions may be made on Shrove Tuesday; the hours may be learned from the notice board.

Some changes may be noticed in the service list: the Tuesday Bible Class and Friday Meditations are discontinued, principally because they have not been well attended during the last few years. Addresses will be given at Even-song each day except Saturday. No morning addresses are arranged for Holy Week.

Each person is advised to avail themselves of the opportunity of worshipping at the Mass as often as possible, increase the number of Communions, particularly to make their Communion every Sunday. Abstinence should be observed on Wednesdays and Fridays, Ember Saturday and Easter Eve, and flesh meat eaten only once on other weekdays. There should also be self denial in pleasure and amusements of all kinds. The object set before each one should be to know God more perfectly, to love Him more truly, to serve Him more faithfully.

Guild of St. Vincent.

The Corporate Communion of the Guild was made on Sunday, January 19th, being the Sunday nearest St. Vincent's Day, at the seven o'clock Mass. The Annual Dinner took place on Wednesday evening, January 22d, (St. Vincent's Day) at the Clergy House. Members of the Guild of St. Mary in accordance with their usual custom, made all the necessary preparation. A member of the congregation provided some delicacies in addition to the usual dinner. Several were unable to be present, who in past years have been cheerful companions. A very pleasant evening was spent.

Christmas Treats.

St. Nicholas Guild had their Christmas treat on Saturday afternoon, December 28, in the Parish Building. The Chaplain and Guild associates had provided gifts, candy, ice cream and cake for the little lads, who did full justice to the cheer provided.

Guild of the Holy Child, on the same afternoon, had a happy time in the Mission House, where the Sisters and Guild associates had made ready suitable gifts and abundant ice cream and cake for the little girls, who thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

On Thursday, January 2, the usual Christmas supper, turkey, vegetables, coffee, ice cream and cake was provided for the members of the Mothers' Meeting. The Clergy, Acolytes and Choir boys were among the invited guests, while some of the parishioners carved the fowls and quickly supplied the needs of all. After the supper Mrs. Garner sang several songs, much to the delight of all. Rev. F. D. Ward and W. A. McClenthen kindly gave some piano music at the special request of those present.

St. Katharine's Guild were entertained at the Mission House on Tuesday evening, December 31, and what they lacked in numbers they truly made up in the enjoyment of the things arranged and provided by the Sisters and associates for the evening's happiness.

St. Mary's Guild sang their Office in Chapel on Monday, January 6, and afterward had a happy feast in the upper school room; they listened with great pleasure to the musical entertainment which had been arranged.

It is a matter of sincere gratitude that the generous kindness of our people made these treats, together with dinners, groceries and coal to various people, possible for the refreshment of those specially of our own Household of Faith.

The Christmas tree for the Little Catechism took place on St. John's Day, December 27, at 2 P. M. Gifts of dolls, toys, candy were given to each scholar. At 8 o'clock the scholars of the Catechism met and received gifts and candy.

Afterward Mr. Smith, a magician, entertained them for an hour by various mysterious tricks and wonderful doings generally. The children and their guests enjoyed it all immensely.

Mr. Sears arranged for the theatre party and supper of the Choir men on Thursday, January 16, at which time the Chaplain, Choirmaster and men attended the performance at the Garrick Theatre, and completed their evening's enjoyment with the supper.

The Election of a Bishop Coadjutor.

This very important matter in the history of the Diocese is to be determined at the meeting of the Special Convention. Prayers for God's guidance have been offered daily at the Masses and at Even-song from January 4th, and a special Novena began on Sunday, January 26th.

Many distinguished priests have been spoken of as fitted by experience, piety and learning for this high office, and there seems to have been an utter absence of partisan spirit in the discussion. In this Diocese it is perhaps needless to say, that only one sound in the faith and loyal to the Church can be elected. One who thoroughly believes in the necessity of the Sacramental life and Episcopal Office. The Office will not be one of ease or comfort, but manifold responsibility and one that requires wisdom and prudence in the exercise of its important duties. The Bishop of the Diocese in the special prayers set forth has enumerated the human characteristics needful: "a man full of grace and wisdom, approved by Thee, who shall be to the flock of Christ a true shepherd: who shall feed Thy sheep and Thy lambs: who shall hold up the weak, heal the sick, bind up the broken, seek the lost: who shall be so merciful that he be not too remiss: so minister discipline that he forget not mercy."

The Coadjutor succeeds as Bishop of the Diocese, but until that time assists in the various ways specified in the letter of request.

THE BISHOP'S ROOMS,

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 26, 1901.

Dear Brethren of the Clergy and Laity:

It has long been recognized by all of us that to attempt to fulfill adequately the responsibilities resting upon the Bishop of this Diocese imposes a burden which few men, at most, are able to bear.

Attention to this fact has been focused by the sudden prostration which came upon your Bishop six weeks ago, reducing him instantly to a condition of physical helplessness, induced, as eminent physicians have declared, by overstrain of work and care.

The recovery from this attack, of which the physicians gave hope, has, by the favor of God, been proceeding day by day.

But it is also the opinion of the physicians that permanent recovery is possible only by continued relief from overstrain, and that this can only be secured by the appointment of one who will share with me the obligations and privileges of the administration of this great Diocese.

The Standing Committee has heartily concurred in this expression of opinion by the physicians, and in a letter of touching sympathy has advised me to take action along the direction suggested, and to do this without delay.

I, therefore, in accordance with the provisions of Article III of the Constitution, hereby call a Special Convention to meet in the Church of St. Luke and Epiphany, in Philadelphia, on Tuesday, the fourth of February, A. D. 1902, at eleven o'clock A. M., for the purpose of electing a Bishop Coadjutor of this Diocese.

Title I, Canon 19, Paragraph 5 of the Digest requires that the Bishop of a Diocese in giving consent to the election of a Bishop Coadjutor shall state the duties which he thereby assigns to the Bishop Coadjutor, when duly elected and consecrated.

In compliance with this provision I hereby state that the duties assigned by me to the Coadjutor of this Diocese will be:

First, The superintendence and charge of all Diocesan missionary work, save that the appointing of Missionaries will be shared.

Second, The sharing of the Confirmation appointments, and of all other Episcopal services, as Consecrations, Ordinations, etc.

Third, Taking the place and duty of the Bishop in connection with certain of the Institutions of the Diocese, presiding at Meetings, etc., as may be arranged between us.

Fourth, It is my earnest hope that in all the work of the Diocese there will be hearty mutual coöperation on the part of the Bishop Coadjutor and the Bishop, and that we way work together with one heart and one mind.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and seal this 26th day of December, 1901, and in the thirty-third year of my consecration.

O. W. WHITAKER,
Bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

Attest:

H. M. G. HUFF,
Secretary.

The Function of the Church.

"The Church idea, pure and simple, excludes temporal ends and objects, and dealing with the spiritual and supersensual, is concerned primarily about the things of God. It is not the object of the Church to teach men anything which can be learned by the use of their natural powers; therefore the Church is not a school of philosophy or science, nor was it intended that she should interfere with the work of science and philosophy within their legitimate spheres.

"It is not the object of the Church to modify or change social conditions, to advance civilization, nor to help men to the attainment of physical comfort, temporal advantages, wealth, health or material prosperity. These things, relating to our natural state, are outside the range of Church existence. They are proper objects of pursuit, and men who have been enlightened and elevated by the spiritual forces of the kingdom will be the better qualified for success and prosperity in the world while yet they sojourn here, but the Church does not propose them as objects of pursuit under her guidance; nay, though destitute of all these things, and poor in everything but faith and love, men may be rich and abounding in the fulness of the Kingdom. The Church has no direct concern with men except as the heirs of an immortal life, and pilgrims who seek a country beyond that from which they have been led forth. Everything in her policy, principles and practical working refers to and aims at transterrestrial, supramundane ends; all begins, proceeds, terminates on parallels and meridians drawn about and running up to the throne of the Heavenly King. If this primary truth had been kept in mind from the beginning, the aspect of Christendom would have been very different from that which it presents to-day, 'by schisms rent asunder, by heresies distressed.'

"I know with what disgust these statements will be received wherever it is held that the Church should leave her proper field, and enter those of politics, social reform and domestic economy; that her mission is mainly that of a mutual benefit society, a school of ethical culture, or a motor in the work of the elevation of the lower classes. But it must be held for truth that wherever the leaders in the Church sink her spiritual character, wholly or in part, and direct her energies toward temporal and secular ends, however valuable and attractive, they undermine her health and enfeeble the circulation of her heart. They are rewarded with none of those fruits which they might have reaped in the field which is the world. They see, as the result of their labors, neither the conversion of the individual soul nor the prosperity of society."

Spiritual Progress.

"Was ever a saint heard of who was satisfied with his moral advance? The idea of a saint is of one who learns to despair of himself and to forget himself as he goes on to God.

"Christian faith, hope and love teach a man to look through his own self-improvement to that which is the aim and object, as well as the source, of all improvement—that is, to the true ultimate end of all things, God Himself.

"A man's conversion does not mean simply his turning from immoral to moral acts; it means primarily his turning from himself to God. He will be always leaving himself behind if he is always rising and following our Lord Jesus Christ, who is ever going forward.

"He will never be turning round to look at himself and contemplate what he has gained, but pressing on to that which is always beyond him—the mark of his high calling. Morality is an impossible thing if it goes no further than itself, if it has not a Divine basis and a Divine goal; for then it will turn to corruption, either in morbid self-torture, as with the Indian devotee, or in a cold utilitarianism, or in a grotesque self-complacency. 'And now, Lord, what is my hope?' Not in any measured improvement in moral or spiritual activity; not in anything which I can do, but 'my hope is even in Thee.'

True advance for man is advance toward God. We were not created for any little improvement of ourselves, which we ourselves could compass, but for God. I may be very useful and do a great deal of work which is valued; but that will never constitute the improvement I long after, for I was not created to do ever so much valuable work, but to love God with all my heart and all my mind and all my soul. The saints have not always been enormously active persons; what made their life saintly was that they were seeking God. 'They had an eye unto Him and were lightened'; and so they brought light into human life, for they brought God into it.

"If all my plans go wrong any day, if I cannot move hand or foot to do any good, I may have lost nothing after all, for still I can praise God, honour and serve Him with all my heart; and if so, why may I not that day gain a substantial advance in Christian character and virtue?"—Fr. Congreve in Christian Life, etc.

Support of the Parish.

A new financial year began on Lady Day, March 25th, and a supply of envelopes has been furnished to each one who has made use of this system and some few others who have asked for them; there are several packages prepared for anyone who may desire to make use of them. It is very commendable that all but a few have been faithful during this year, and this entirely due to people's own fidelity—not the result of dun or reminder. It is satisfactory, honorable; a matter of real joy. To be sure there is a large amount of money owed to the Parish that we should like to see liquidated; there are also some unpromised and unpaid obligations. God's debts are not covered by any statute of limitations, they are due to the uttermost farthing.

The Sea Shore Home.

April 1st sees the last of the occupancy of the "Osborne Cottage" at Point Pleasant, and with it our association with that pleasant town by the ocean, extending over so many years, practically comes to an end.

Many have been the courtesies and kindnesses that have been shown during our dwelling in their midst, to the Sisters, the visitors and the Home. The memory will always be of many happy days, and to some the thought that there health was restored, life almost given back, vigor renewed and energy reëstablished.

About the middle of March, Sisters went down to pack up the furniture that was to be moved, and to send it over to Sea Isle City. The officials of the Pennsylvania R. R. extended special courtesies in the matter, not only in particular attention as to the journey of the freight car, but also notification of its speedy arrival; it was stopped on the Stone Harbor Branch, directly back of the new house, and in this way was quickly and conveniently unloaded. It seemed best to dispose of some of the old, worn-out furnishings at Point Pleasant, and so there was an auction sale of old things—beds, etc. Various individuals have promised new beds and other things, and we have no doubt but that others will be glad to do what they can. The various repairs will be arranged for as soon as possible, that all may be ready by July. It is pleasant to learn that various persons are preparing to show interest in a practical way, and enlisting the interest of their friends, and we expect that people at Sea Isle will welcome their new neighbors and awaken an interest in the Home that may soon offset what we shall lose by removal from Point Pleasant. Various details have to be settled yet, but one more step has been taken.

Sister Georgina always felt that a true beginning was made when, five years ago, a suitable Altar was provided, and now a proper place is established for it to be set up.

"Those who wait on the Lord shall renew their strength."

Confirmation.

Preparation for the worthy reception of the Sacrament will begin after Easter.

It is very important that all who sincerely desire to be strengthened in their souls by the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost should give their names to the Clergy or Sisters.

The Sacrament of Confirmation will be given on Friday, May 9th, at 8 p. m.

Prayer-Book Society.

The Sixty-seventh Annual Report of the Female Protestant Episcopal Church Prayer-Book Society has been received through the courtesy of Mrs. G. E. Fryer. 3795 books have been distributed at a cost of $1,132.59. The annual subscriptions amounted to $605.77, of which $84.00 was given by 31 persons belonging to St. Clement's, being the largest amount given by any parish. Twenty-six parishes contributed.

A waste paper basket has been sent for the lower Vestry.

New Prayer Books have been provided for the south aisle.

A set of Festival Albs for the Sacred Ministers, to be used at High Mass, has been received; also three new surplices.

An Ablution Cup, cut glass, with silver cover, also a silver vessel for Holy Oil, has been given by a communicant.

The Choir sang Mozart's vii Mass (with Eyre's Creed) on Palm Sunday, and Schubert's Mass in F on Easter Day.

An improved tubular cutter has been bought for the Altar bread. This will make it very much easier to perform the work in the future.

A Satin mat for the Missal stand of St. Katharine's Altar, beautifully painted, is an Easter offering in loving memory of Julia Dunlap.

The accounts of the various Parochial activities, the number of members and associates, etc., will be published in the May Magazine.

Mr. Sears will give an organ recital in the Church on Saturday afternoon, April 12th. Confessions will be made in the Chapel on that afternoon.

The Paschal Candle is the Easter gift of a communicant in memory of a mother. The decoration is the Easter offering of a communicant.

Pew rents are due in advance April 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the Vestry room Monday, March 31st, 1–3 P. M., to receive money, rent pews or sittings.

The oven for baking Altar bread, together with a proper cutter, has been sent to the Church Missions House, New York, and will be forwarded to China at the first opportunity.

A parishioner has promised to be responsible for the preparation of the south garden for the summer; also to plant trees on Appletree Street as soon as the work on the building will permit.

It is announced that a majority of the Standing Committees of the Dioceses of the Church have approved the election of Rev. Alexander Mackay-Smith, S. T. D., as Bishop Coadjutor of Pennsylvania.

The Fifteenth Annual Retreat of the Guild of St. Vincent was made on Passion Sunday. Members of the Guild of St. Mary kindly assisted in the preparation of the meals, which were at the Clergy House.

In spite of the very stormy weather, the attendance of the faithful at the Lenten Services, both on Sundays and weekdays, has been very good. The number of Communions made has been somewhat smaller than usual, and fewer strangers have been present.

It is hoped that money will be available to put the sidewalk on the Twentieth Street side of the Church in good condition, and to point the stone boundary wall. The frost has damaged the Cherry street sidewalk very much, and this will be repaired immediately.

The Annual Retreat for men took place on Mid-Lent Sunday. Only a few attended the exercises. Some were prevented at the last moment, and others, no doubt, were not aware of it because notice was not given, through forgetfulness, on the Sunday preceding. The meals were at the Clergy House.

All Saints Mission House, Cherry and Lambert Sts.

Twenty-first and Arch to Broad—north to Spring Garden, west to 18th, south to Vine, west to 21st. These boundaries were definitely assigned to us at the meeting of Convocation. We hope that the various institutions within our limits will remember that we are willing to minister at any hour to those who desire spiritual help.

It has been very satisfactory to receive the Easter Communion Cards of some at a distance, with kind messages and offerings, and to see the familiar faces of those who returned to spend Holy Week at St. Clement's. Not all have been mindful of Christian courtesy; some did not care to take the trouble; others did not see the use—neither of which excuses would they deem sufficient from others in any matter that concerned themselves.

The Retreat for the Guild of St. Mary took place on Thursday, March 20th. It began with the 9.30 Mass, and the exercises during the day were in St. John's Chapel and included five addresses, with the singing of a Metrical Litany during each interval. Members and associates made the Retreat. Others attended some of the exercises. The Chaplain, Rev. F. D. Ward, gave the addresses. Dinner and supper were provided in the upper school room. The babies were taken care of in the Mission House. At night the Stations were made in the Church.

Clergy House Extension, Etc.

On February 28th the attorney for the owner of 2028 Cherry Street began action to compel the Church corporation to cease building entirely on that part of our lot, 2026 Cherry Street, citing the restriction and complaining that in our alteration of plans we were not conforming. On March 10th the answer was returned, and it is hoped the matter may be taken up on Monday, March 24th, in Court of Common Pleas, No. 3.

Work had progressed almost to the completion of the foundations, but was stopped on the serving of a copy of the complaint until the matter is decided by the Court. The answer denies that the construction is in violation of the restriction. Attention is called to the fact that we expect to make other alterations to our Parish buildings. It is asked that the injunction shall not be granted, as it would amount to an absolute prohibition of the improvement of our premises.

The case came up on Wednesday, March 26th, in Court of Common Pleas No. 3; Judges McMichael and McCarthy, who listened with great attention and interest to the arguments. Mr. Brown very clearly and ably presented the answer for St. Clement's.

The owners of 2030 Cherry Street, it is only fair to say, have been most kind in the whole matter and willing to unite in a surrender of all restrictions.

Palm Sunday.

A bright and sunny day made "Hosanna" indeed appropriate for the welcome of our King.

Palms were blessed at 6.30 A. M. and distributed to the faithful at the Choir gates; also after the different Masses, at the door.

The Procession took place before the Solemn Mass, when Revs. C. C. Quin, F. D. Ward and W. A. McClenthen were the Sacred Ministers. The large Congregation included many strangers, some of whom were to all appearances only curious and without any Christian notion of the meaning of the services or the Palm tokens. It was not a generous curiosity, for its liberality was displayed by 270 nickels and 262 pennies. We hope none had to walk home, deny themselves a cigar or other necessity on account of this. Each one, of course, was anxious for a seat and a piece of palm.

Reports.

The following annual reports of Church institutions are hereby acknowledged:

Episcopal Hospital, $72.89 from St. Clement's.

All Saints' Home for Children, Baltimore, $108.00 from St. Clement's.

St. Mark's Guild, Jersey City, sends copies of the following books, and we desire to commend them to the attention of all who have charge of the religious instruction of children:

"Lessons for Children of the Church;"

"The Church Catechism in Verse, for the Little Ones;" also,

"Way of the Cross."

The various instructions are short, definite and well expressed.

The Endowment Fund.

The Fourth Annual Statement of the Pennsylvania Company, Trustee, just rendered, is as follows:

The increase in this fund during the past year has been very encouraging. It is a true and laudable purpose to desire to maintain and carry on the worship of Almighty God on this spot for the benefit of the souls of men, women and children, to provide and secure the teaching of the Catholic Faith and to minister the Sacraments, and in particular to perpetuate the daily offering of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass in accordance with the words of the Lord Jesus, "Do this in remembrance of Me."

We would remind those who have received spiritual benefits here, or learned to serve God, that the gratitude should be manifested not to any individual who is only God's instrument, but to God's Church itself.

During the past year one large amount was given anonymously; several amounts as thank offerings for blessings; a number of small donations (131), and St. Clement's Day collection.

Investments are as follows:

Consolidated Traction Co. of N. J. 5 per cent.,	$1,000 00
Lehigh Valley R. R. 4½ per cent.,	1,000 00

Easter.

"Easter is the Festival of the Resurrection. On Good Friday the disciples saw their Master dead upon the Cross; on Easter Day they see Him standing before them, living and glorified. He is the same Christ who died: they see the wound prints in his body; but a mysterious change has passed over Him: His body is glorified. No longer bound by earthly laws but endowed with heavenly powers and capacities, He can appear and disappear at will; in fact, He has not come back to the conditions of earthly existence in which He was before. He no longer lives habitually in the sight of men. He is for the most part in the spiritual world where no human eye can see Him, and this spiritual world, this 'Kingdom of Heaven,' He 'opens' to His disciples when He shows Himself to them from time to time according to His will: 'When Thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death, Thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers.' He reveals to them the reality of the Resurrection life, which is victorious over death and able to conquer all the powers of the enemy. During forty days He is seen of His disciples and 'speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.'"

—Jervois.

Blessed Mary.

"Let us, then, contemplate for a moment a cloud floating near the horizon, in the twilight, before the day breaks. See it so resting, grey and calm and still; the land lies beneath in shade and the morning star shows its pure, pale light. Something of a like calm, tranquil, expectant time belongs to the soul, which has been weaned from the natural life as from a day which has passed, and having been purified from that which was earthly by the interior night which has fallen upon nature, awaits, with a certain conviction of His having already dealt wondrously with her, the approach of God, in a fresh mode of His revelation. Thus was it with Blessed Mary, as, in the twilight before 'the Day-spring from on high' arose to visit us, she waited upon God in her dedicated life, sharing that 'mercy' which 'is on them that fear Him throughout all generations,' and seeking, above all things, that God's Will should be done in her own life, actuated as it was by His consuming love, and weaned from earthly desires. We do not need to supplement from the false gospels that which the Holy Gospels record, in order to be assured of this great characteristic of her life—a conformed will—since that is an essential part of the lowliness of His 'handmaiden' which in her canticle she declares that God has regarded. With a conformed will—that best, yet hidden, preparedness for the fulfillment of God's gracious and wonderful work in the rational creature—she waited upon Him in blameless integrity of life, and the fruit of an habitual self-surrender was shown forth in her conduct when Gabriel announced the unspeakable honor which the Almighty purposed to bestow upon her. For then, indeed, it was that Mary said, in faithful conformity to the Will of God, 'Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to Thy Word.' And as she spake, it was with her as when the rising sun, coming to tabernacle within some pallid, waiting cloud, sets it on fire with his radiant power; for then indeed, her life became the tabernacle of the Most High, as the Eternal Word was made flesh of her very substance, and she, being herself translated henceforth into a new estate, her joyful mysteries began."

—Fr. Hollings.

Easter.

"In Eastertide we can repeat the words of Scripture with literal accuracy and in the present tense—'The Lord is risen indeed.' We can say this just as it was on the first Easter Day. 'He is risen indeed, and hath appeared unto Simon, Alleluia!' Each of the events commemorated in the great Festivals of our Lord has its own eternal continuation.

"Easter is more especially the day of life, life not only begun, but reasserted, triumphant, proved indestructible; and life is not an event, but the base and possibility of all events, something which each moment repeats all the wonder of its origin, and is unchangeable in this sense: that it cannot cease to be life and become death, as a moving body can be diverted, and what rose may turn and fall.

"Life, while it exists, is always the same life. Death is not a change of it, but its absence. The life of Him who dieth no more is unchangeable the same as on the Day of Resurrection, and yet it accepts and preserves all the different advancing movements and varieties of good which appear among men. Rather it is the sole source of these, and human history, especially in the Church, contains a revelation of the changeless life of Christ, a revelation which occupies space and advances in time. History only contains this revelation, not consists of it. For there is much in human action which is by no means His. Yet, besides much evil, there are good things, and right and wise, and all these, wherever found, spring from His grace and must be claimed as His own. Certainly with regard to whatever is good we may say of Christ, even in His sacred human life, 'Whatsoever is done upon earth, He doeth it Himself.' That unconquerable continuous life as it causes, so also it gathers up, all good that is done and said and planned.

"This familiar Easter thought encourages Christians to look fairly upon the world and to take part in its real activity. There is good to be seen, and this will teach us about Christ. There is good to be done; it is His own work. Certainly there is a time when a man can only turn quite away from outward things. 'Love not the world' is the lesson he must learn; and, conscious of loving it indiscriminately, loving it in the sense here intended as a body independent of God, he must close his ears and turn away his eyes from it. But if by God's mercy he learns to love God's Will, he may begin to have some share in the love with which God Himself 'so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son.' But two strong guiding restraints are needed by anyone who claims this new approach to the world.

"God's love of the world is a love of altar sacrifice. He who aspires to stand among God's servants must test himself by the question: 'Do I seek to give myself, or to make others serve my private good, or gain or treasure?' To give and not to gain—that must be the rule of a lawful secularity. And, in the second place, to love good things is to love the work of Christ, to learn true things is to learn His Life. But how shall I be sure of my judgment of what is good? Shall I finish by following my own taste, and missing Christ? Each one must first and last be inwardly and directly seeking Christ himself, and receiving from Him the grace and truth which came by Him, and thus, and thus only, will he be able to detect and love that which witnesses to Christ's love in the world. Does this involve a practical proof in a circle? Does it presuppose exactly the knowledge which is desired? Not the knowledge exactly, but a deep preparation for knowledge: Something which, while it may not dispense with the revelation yielded by life, is the sole preparation for receiving it. . . . .

"Christians secretly conformed to Christ by the rule of Scripture and the way of prayer, afterwards point to Him where He lives among the sons of men, and are guides along the lines of His revealed activity, whom, having not seen, they loved."

John Douglass Brown: R. I. P.

The Counsel of Jesus the Nobleman Who has gone into the far country, to His servants is: "Occupy till I come:" our dear friend was found in his lot when He came; we can truly say "Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous, and give thanks for a remembrance of His holiness."

Early in the morning of Saturday, April 19th, he entered into the blessed rest of God's faithful ones, having received the Viaticum and Holy Unction on the previous Sunday.

He had been identified with the life of the parish since 1860, a vestryman since 1873, and a delegate to the Diocesan Convention since 1889. He will always be associated with the removal of the debt from the property: with indefatigable patience and indomitable perseverance, he threw himself into this holy purpose; and even when others faltered, he held on, and as each step was taken his heart was glad; only when the whole was accomplished, was he entirely satisfied, waiting to "enter into the joy of the Lord."

The burial Office, together with Solemn Mass and absolutions, was said in the Church on Tuesday, April 22nd, at 10 A. M., the interment being at St. James the Less.

In the heavenly Kingdom may perpetual light shine upon him and eternity of days.

Easter.

"Gladness" is the special note of those who fulfill the Paschal precept, for they truly have seen and known their Lord and God, not indeed in human form and fashion, but in the "Power of His Resurrection" which always renews them in a true and blessed way. Only real penitents partake of the Peace which is His gift to those who struggle with temptation, who refuse to be bound by their failure and sin or to be restrained by human sorrow; those who with true love and proper dispositions early seek their Lord in the Blessed Sacrament are not disappointed. Jesus comes and abides with them. The world goes on with its earthly amusement.

467 made their Communions at the early Masses; others, with kindly Easter courtesy, informed the Clergy that they would make their Communions elsewhere, and some, hindered by sickness and other causes, made their Communion during the Octave.

The Church was crowded at the Solemn Mass. Revs. F. D. Ward, C. C. Quin and W. A. McClenthen were the Sacred Ministers; the music was Schubert in F. "Hail, Festal Day" was the Processional. At Solemn Evensong, Barnby's service was sung with Warwick Jordan's Te Deum.

All the members of the Choir earnestly assisted Mr. Sears in the fatiguing work of the preliminary rehearsals, as well as in the glad devotion of the services. The same music was sung on Low Sunday.

Rogation Days.

The card, it is hoped, may be filled with the names of those who are willing to promise at least fifteen minutes on all three days for the Intercessions. The hours begin at 6 A. M., when the Church is open, and continue until 10 P. M., when it is closed. It is no help to promise the time, 7 to 8: 9.30 to 10 or 5 to 5.15.

Special intercessions may be placed in the box in the lower vestry door, and will be offered at the Masses.

Parish Notes.

No Mother's Meeting on Ascension Day.

1196 Communions March 23d-April 20th.

The Solemn Mass on Ascension Day is at 7 o'clock.

A Bazaar for the benefit of the Seashore Home will be held at 2009 Pine Street, Wednesday, April 30th, 3 until 6 o'clock.

Mr. Sears gave an organ recital in the Church on Saturday afternoon, April 12th: Mr. Brinton sang. A large number of people were present.

Saturday, May 3rd (Invention of the Holy Cross) there will be an extra Mass at 6.30, specially for members of the Guild of the Holy Cross.

The Confirmation has been changed to Monday, May 5th, at 8 o'clock, when the Right Rev. the Bishop of Delaware will act for the Bishop of the Diocese.

First Vespers of Corpus Christi will be sung in St. John's Chapel, on Wednesday, May 28th; the annual meeting of St. Saviour's Ward C.B.S. will be held immediately after.

On Tuesday, April 8th, the Choir boys, under the care of Rev. C. C. Quin and Mr. Sears, were very much entertained by the performance of Kellar, at the Park Theatre.

The offerings at all the Masses on Ascension Day will be for All Saints Seashore Home, Sea Isle City, and it is much to be desired that everyone may be very generous.

The offerings on Whitsun Day will be devoted to certain needed repairs, external and internal, of the Church property; the character depends on the amount.

Holy Week was very solemnly observed by the people: the various solemn ceremonies of Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Easter Even were followed with devotion. The attendance was very good.

It has been decided to increase the amount of insurance on the Church buildings and also to take out perpetual policies; although it will be a large amount to expend at one time, it seems a wise thing to do.

467 Communions were made on Easter Day, and 422 cards were handed in; these represent those who are really interested in the parochial life and work. A number of Communicants made their Paschal duty for proper reasons at other Churches, and a number also during the Octave.

Church of the Annunciation.

The people of this parish, where Catholic privileges are always available for God's people, are now engaged in an earnest effort to pay off the mortgage indebtedness on the property; in this they deserve the assistance and prayers of everyone who believes in the truths of the Catholic religion.

The love of God can only be spread in His own way, the building of altars, the offering of the Holy Sacrifice, provision for penitents: true missionary activity consists only in this and not in any human system of worship. The faithful Rector has toiled arduously and quietly amid many difficulties; it is much to be desired that this effort may result in complete success.

Clergy House Extension, Etc.

Judge McMichael handed down the decision of the Court on April 4th: it was in favor of the Church; the building was not on the "rear end" of the lot, as it is ten feet back from Appletree Street, and, further, is not a dwelling house, as it is a part of the whole ecclesiastical structure. The owner of the adjoining property, not being satisfied with the interpretation of the restriction, has given notice that she will file bill of exceptions.

Consecration.

The Consecration of the Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Pennsylvania has been appointed for Thursday, May 1st (SS. Philip and James, Apostles) at the Church of the Holy Trinity.

Corpus Christi.

"The Thursday after Trinity Sunday is called 'Corpus Christi' Day. It is the Feast of the Blessed Sacrament. The words 'Corpus Christi' mean 'the Body of Christ.' The name is given to the day because the Blessed Sacrament is the Body of Christ. This is why the Holy Eucharist is so great and holy a service. In it is our Lord Himself really come to be with us. For where the Body and Blood of Jesus are, there are His Soul, and His Godhead. Wherever the Blessed Sacrament is, there God is, in a very wonderful and special way.

Everything about the Altar should be as beautiful as we can make it, for the Altar is the throne of God, the place where He comes to be with the children of men. So we put flowers about it, and have lamps before it, and at the Holy Eucharist candles are lighted, and incense offered, to make a sweet smell before the Lord. We do all this because God is there. The Blessed Sacrament does not depend on these things. Wherever a Christian Priest blesses bread and wine in the power of the Holy Ghost and says these words of Christ: 'This is My Body,' 'This is My Blood,' the Blessed Sacrament is there, God is with us.

Communicants.

It is made the duty of the minister of each Parish, according to Canon XVI, Sec. 2, of this Diocese, before the meeting of each Diocesan Convention to remove from the list of Communicants "the names of all persons who have died, or received Holy Orders, or taken letters of transfer to other Parishes, or been excommunicated or suspended, or having formally renounced the Communion of the Church, or who in the judgment of the Minister have permanently ceased to be Communicants of the same, or who, having removed from his Parish without notice, after reasonable time and due effort, cannot be traced."

Attention is called to this, for any person so careless cannot be transferred elsewhere, as in good standing, even if ten or twenty years ago the Clergy then knew them. Ordinary civility requires that a suitable apology should be made, even before they ask for record of Confirmation and previous good standing to permit their names to be entered on the list of some other Parish.

Repairs.

The total of Whitsun Day collection was not very encouraging when account is taken of what is needed. The corridor sadly needs cleaning, the stone boundary wall should be painted and a new pavement laid, at least, on Twentieth street and some persons think that some repairs should be made on Sanctuary walls, mending broken places, restoring color and cleaning. Less than $100 was given, and one person sent a further donation of $125.00. It is much to be desired that those who forgot or neglected should send a donation.

Holy Orders.

The Rev. W. A. McClenthen received Priest's orders at the Church of the Atonement, the Right Rev. the Bishop Coadjutor officiating on Trinity Sunday: his first Mass was said on Monday, May 26th, at 7 o'clock, at the High Altar. He remains as one of the Clergy of the Parish.

At a stated meeting of the Vestry of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, held Tuesday, May 13th, 1902, on motion it was resolved that a minute of recognition and appreciation of the faithful services of John Douglass Brown to the Parish be entered on the minutes and a copy sent to the family.

Mr. Brown became a member of the Parish in 1860, a Vestryman in 1872, a Delegate to the Diocesan Convention in 1889, so that he had seen the growth of the work from almost the very beginning, a continuous interest during the service of all the Rectors.

In 1890, he became Treasurer of the Sinking Fund for the extinguishment of the debt on the property and continued in that position until the effort was successful: $33,833.33 was collected and paid out by him. It was largely due to his unremitting labors and hopeful perseverance that the result was finally attained.

In the advocacy of the Catholic principles to which the Parish bears witness, his earnest, loyal and willing aid was ever given.

In his own spiritual life there was evident the power and fruit of God's grace.

In the Heavenly Kingdom may perpetual light shine upon him and eternity of days.

ROMAINE KEYSER,
Secretary.

Diocesan Notes.

The 118th Convention of the Diocese met on Tuesday, April 29th, and continued two days, a shorter session than usual and although all necessary business was transacted, there was still very much idle time; the Convention was spared a few of the unimportant speeches of certain members.

The Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese was consecrated on Thursday, May 1st, Feast SS. Philip and James, Apostles, in the Church of the Holy Trinity, a large number of people, some devout and others who, to all appearances, were not, had obtained cards of admission. Only clergy were given Communion.

Parish Notes.

Solemn Mass was sung on Corpus Christi at 9 o'clock.

The 9.15 Mass on Sundays will be without music until further notice.

St. Mary's Guild had their Office on Monday, May 12th. Is was postponed on account of the Rogations.

The Guild of the Holy Child had their picnic on Saturday afternoon, May 24th. They went to the Zoo.

Mr. S. McKean Bayard, a Communicant of the Parish, has been elected a member of the Vestry, and has accepted.

The Parish record of burials has been gone over, and names of Communicants have been entered in a book under date of death that their souls may be remembered at the Altar on each anniversary.

On Tuesday evening, May 27, in the Parish Building, an entertainment was given for the benefit of the Sea Shore Home. Several kind friends gave their services and the evening seemed to pass pleasantly. The attendance was not large. It is not possible to say how much money was realized.

The Bureau of Highways has served notice that Cherry Street is to be paved with improved pavement. The curbs on Cherry Street must be reset and the roof drains must be connected under ground. These two items will cost about $100, and so leave little or nothing of the small amount given on Whitsun Day for improvement and repairs.

The Bishop of Delaware has been graciously pleased to accept the offer of a set of white silk Vestments for the Chapel of the Good Shepherd at Bishopstead, Wilmington. The work will be done by St. Clement's Altar Guild, and it is a great satisfaction that we are able to do this as a token of our appreciation of much kindness and courtesy received from him.

The Vestry have increased the insurance by taking additional policies of perpetual insurance amounting to $13,000, covering the Church and Parish buildings. The original $20,000 has also been altered to cover these buildings. In addition there is $3,000 on 2026 and $9,000 on furniture, etc., and organ. It is also expected to buy perpetual policies when present term ones expires.

Acting on counsels' advice, the Building Committee directed the architect to proceed with the work; the Vestry later approved of this action. On Monday, May 5th, the contractor put the men at work; it is now progressing with all dispatch. It was the unanimous opinion of the learned Judges of the Court of Common Pleas No. 3 that we undoubtedly have the right to build. The owners of 2030 Cherry Street have again signified their willingness to aid us in any way within their power. The grounds around the Church have been put in order, shrubs, trees and vines planted, and already the appearance is very pleasing.

The Rogation Intercessions were made by a sufficient number of devout people to fill the time from 6 A. M. to 12 midnight. Quite a number who have been responsible in former years were unwilling or unable to do so. It ought to be remembered that a devotion of this kind depends for its power, efficacy and value upon the sincere dispositions of those upon whom such obligation rests. This is a corporate act, the duty rests upon every member of the Parish, particularly upon those to whose consciences God has brought it home, and to these spiritual fatigue or coldness does not act as a dispensation nor furnish an excuse to God who changeth not.

The Picnic.

The annual picnic will take place on Saturday, June 21st. All the children of the Catechism and Little Catechism who have been regular in attendance will receive tickets free. Almonesson Park has been chosen as the place. It will be reached by ferry from Chestnut street wharf, and then by special cars to the Park. The boat leaves the wharf at 9 A. M. for Kaighn's Point, where cars will be in waiting. Adults and others not members of this Catechism, may buy tickets, and only those who have our ticket can go on the special cars.

Ascension Day.

The "Men of Galilee" still remember the Angel's promise concerning "this same Jesus" and ever are found keeping His Feasts and observing His Fasts that the Hour of His return may not overtake them unawares. Ascension Day ever falls upon a careless, heedless world, only the chosen few enter into its spirit and profit by its glorious fact: Jesus taken up into Heaven, Human Nature raised upon the Heavenly throne and in union with Him crowned with glory and worship.

The Solemn Mass was sung at seven o'clock, the members of the Choir and the Acolytes having their breakfast immediately after in the upper school room.

At ten o'clock all the Choir boys, Rev. C. C. Quin and Mr. Sears, started, with their luncheon, for a picnic; the day was spent at Laurel Springs, N. J. and the whole party, from all accounts, thoroughly enjoyed themselves, returning in the evening happy though tired.

The offerings at Ascension were for the Sea Shore Home, Sea Isle City, Building Fund, the whole amount was $162.36.

Women Dressed Man Fashion.

The Bishop of Long Island deserves the hearty gratitude of every right minded man and woman in the protest that he has made against the modern fashion of singing women in certain churches being dressed as men; the custom is not simply "improper" it is a disgrace to religion and a scandal.

No modest woman ought to countenance or share such custom, no Christian gentlewoman should permit any daughter or relative to array or display herself in such vulgar fashion. As there is so very little innate sense of modesty now-a-days, it is all the more necessary to guard and cultivate what there is. There is nothing to be said in favor of the custom.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of Delaware, acting for the Bishop of the Diocese, visited St. Clement's on Monday, May 5th.

It seems that attention ought to be directed to the responsibility of sponsors that they take care that the children be brought to the Bishop. It is very sad that hundreds are lost to the Church through neglect of this duty; and it must be that many souls are lost in the end. Very seldom does anyone seem to remember or carry out their duty. The Bishop confirmed each one separately kneeling before him. First Communion was on Whitsun Day at seven o'clock.

The foundation stone of the tower of the Conventual Church at Cowley was laid on Monday, May 12th. The Church Times gives the following account:

"At the close of the High Celebration—at which, by the way, Father Benson, the Founder and late Superior of the Order, preached—a procession was formed, headed by thurifer, cross-bearer, and taper-bearers. Starting from the High Altar, and proceeding to the spot where the stone was to be laid, Psalm lxxxiv was sung, with the Antiphon, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid by Christ the Lord. Allelulia." The form of service which followed began with the Invocation, and lesser Litany, and Lord's Prayer, and versicles and responses; then, after a prayer for a blessing on the work, Father Page sprinkled the stone with holy-water, and said the invocation as he made the sign of the Cross over its several parts. Two collects followed, after which Lord Halifax laid the stone, saying as he did so, "In the Faith of Jesus Christ, we lay this foundation-stone, in the Name of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, Amen." The Father Superior again sprinkled the stone with holy-water, saying, "Thou shalt purge me, O Lord, with hyssop," etc. Then followed Psalm lxxxvii with the Antiphon, "And Jacob arose early, and set up a stone for a pillar, and he poured oil thereon, and vowed a vow; surely this place is holy, and I knew it not. Alleluia."

Sea Isle City.

The work of preparing the house for the summer has been going on steadily. Certain very necessary alterations and repairs have been made; water had to be introduced, a temporary chapel fitted up and other things inside and outside attended to. It is much to be desired that the cost of these may be provided, it will amount to several hundred dollars, and in addition the new beds must be provided. The house will not accommodate as many as the one at Point Pleasant, so that those who are to spend a time there must arrange for that time which may be assigned to them, and changes cannot be made.

The bazaar at Mrs. Fox's residence brought in about $135.00, the Ascension offerings at the church amounted to $112.36, with some subscriptions from members of the congregation in addition. $100.00 has been given for alterations to chapel.

The annual report for 1902 has just been printed, copies may be had from the Sister in Charge. A picture of the new house is on the inner page, the list of subscribers is 81 and 63 business firms gave supplies of various kinds. Dr. Justus Sinexon of Philadelphia and Dr. Whittaker of Point Pleasant kindly gave their professional services.

Knives, forks, tablespoons, vegetable dishes, cups and saucers, kitchen utensils of all kinds, specially large baking pans and pots, porch chairs, beds and matresses, canned fruits and vegetables, dry groceries of all kinds, will be gratefully received. Subscriptions and donations may be sent to Mr. John Douglass Brown, Treasurer, 517 Drexel Building, or to the Sister in Charge, All Saints' Mission House, Philadelphia. All applications must be made at the Mission House, Philadelphia, on Tuesdays, 3 to 5 p. m.

The Parish Magazine of the Church of the Annunciation announces that the special collection in that church on Trinity Sunday will be for the Sea Shore Home. It also refers with appreciation to the work of the Sisters in this work as well as in Philadelphia.

30 beds and 15 matresses are needed, the cost will be about $180, of which $100 is still needed.

The Catechism.

The closing session of the Catechism was kept on Trinity Sunday in the church as a fete, and a solemn Magnificat was sung. Prizes were awarded—for the best examination, to Harry Johnson; for general excellence, to Jennie Johnson; for the best record from Christmas to Whitsunday (offered by Miss Randolph to the girls of her class), to Anna McKittrick.

Corpus Christi.

Sing, to-day, the endless glory
Shed upon our altars fair,
Sing the Love beyond all telling
Still content to meet us there,
Spite of spirits undiscerning,
Hearts too cold or hard to care.

Sing the wondrous condescension,
That can choose to stoop so low,
Yet another Bethlehem seeking
In His faithful Church below,
Shunning not the daily wounding,
Given, alas! by friend and foe.

Sing, to-day, though hearts are heavy,
To the hills your eyes upraise,
From His radiant Presence shining,
Streams a light across our ways.
Who shall mourn, while He is faithful?
"I am with you all the days."

Sing we, too, our Holy Mother,
By the Spirit sanctified,
Who, Her Bridegroom's sorrows sharing,
Scorned, deserted, oft decried,
While she kept the Gift supernal
Could in patience still abide.

Sing! though foes are gathering closer,
Gates of Hell shall ne'er prevail!
Sing! though e'en within the fortress,
Hearts begin to doubt and fail.
Sing! for surely dawn is nearest,
When the stars begin to pale!

Devotion.

"'If there is no purity, there is no prayer, there is no drinking of the water of heaven.' As prayer, in its fundamental sense, is the lifting up, not of the mind alone, but of the heart and will to God, as it desires, not that the Will of God should be altered, but that the Will of God should be done; as its essential principle is the correspondence of sons with a Father, it is obvious that, in all its forms, there must be a growth of character also with the revealed character of God. . . . .

"That wilful sin while unrepented of must act as a barrier to prayer is implied in the wider sense of the word 'devotion' itself. 'Devotion' means a life given or devoted to God. 'The devout' are those who offer themselves to God to serve Him, a definition which, if realized in life, would make an antithesis expressed too frequently between 'the devout' and 'the good' impossible. When we approach God as our Father there can be no sort of mercantile transaction in our life, because our position as His sons by adoption and grace excludes the idea. A father could not possibly accept so much homage in exchange for so much 'license to sin.' Hence, any sin known to be such, and consciously allowed, must be, from the nature of the case, a barrier to Communion between the child and the Father. Until the first movement toward penitence, and the frank confession, putting the penitent into an attitude in which forgiveness becomes possible, have taken place, the correspondence of the human will with the divine, which is a condition of such Communion, is broken. That is a consideration which it is never wise for the most devout people 'who ask of God righteous ordinances,' and 'delight to draw near to God,' to ignore, and there is a further, possibly a less familiar, consideration also. If the outward prayer is to be effectual, its intention must be due to the prompting of the Holy Spirit. But, in words expressing the earnest striving after holiness, by which the early Church was characterised, 'the defiled spirit cannot be acknowledged by the Holy Spirit, nor the gloomy by the joyful, nor the thralled by the free. No one entertaineth an adversary; no one admitteth any, save his own compeer.'"

Pusey and the Church Revival.

The Bishop of Fond du Lac has put forth in the interests of the C. B. S. a little book with the above title. It gives a sketch of the Saint and the rise and principles of the Catholic movement. The Bishop has also printed in pamphlet form an address to the C. B. S., of which he is Superior General, setting forth the attitude which it should maintain toward the problems of these present times. A deep real love to Jesus Christ Himself in the Blessed Sacrament is much needed. Without this, devotion becomes weak, mechanical and cold.

Novena for Vocations.

A special effort, by continuous intercession, was made after Ascension Day that "God may be pleased to multiply Vocations to the Religious Life, to the Sacred Ministry and to Mission Work; and that He may be pleased to give grace to all whom He may call to realize and to follow their vocations in a spirit of generous self-surrender."

It is about time that the attention of Christian people was called to the fact that God gives grace to live for Himself only. Were this realized, "Clerical poverty," that thing so monstrous and unnecessary, would never be seen. The alms of the faithful are not rightly used to support a family, and it is "the family" that causes poverty, the lax discipline of the last 350 years, countenancing what is called the marriage of the Clergy, has been the cause of much mischief.

The S. S. J. E., under whose direction the Novena was made, published a very useful pamphlet, "Helps for Intercession," that might be employed for a similar purpose at other times. Devout people should pray earnestly against the human selfishness that prevents generous response to God's manifest calls.

Fasting Communion.

"The Bread that I will give is My Flesh." S. John vi. 51.

"Believing, as every true Churchman ought to do, that in Holy Communion we verily and indeed receive the Sacred Body and Blood of our Blessed Lord, there ought to be no hesitation on our part as to the time of day at which it is most fitting to receive, viz.: in the morning, before many earthly thoughts have had time to enter our minds, and before any earthly food has passed our lips.

But it is not a matter left to our own judgment. The judgment of the Church of God in all ages has been given more decidedly in favor of fasting Communion. S. Augustine's idea was that this was the matter which S. Paul "set in order" when he came to Corinth, in order to prevent any return of the excesses by which the Corinthians had disgraced that Blessed Sacrament.

However that may be, we know what the mind of the Church is on the subject, and as dutiful children we should try to obey her to the best of our power. If we have any difficulty in this matter from one cause or another, it is well to consult someone else, especially some clergyman in whom we have confidence, and whom we believe to be able to give us good advice."—St. Mark's Messenger.

Corpus Christi.

A Solemn Mass, as well as First Vespers, was arranged by St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., for this important festival. It is only fitting that the honor that Catholics feel to be due to the Blessed Sacrament should have its special manifestation by a worthy observance of this festival.

The Parish Building.

At a meeting of the Vestry, April 7, 1863, a Committee was appointed to report plans and estimates for a Sunday School Building. May 14th a resolution authorizing the purchase from Mr. William S. Wilson of a lot on Cherry Street extending west of the Church 18 feet, running southward 64 feet, then narrowing to 4 feet and running to Tower Street. A Committee was also appointed to solicit subscriptions of large and small amounts to construct a Sunday School Building. This ground was conveyed to the Corporation on July 7th.

October 6th, by advice of an architect, the work was postponed on account of the impossibility of obtaining suitable stone and contracting on any fair terms; also, the subscriptions were not large enough to authorize the beginning of the building.

January 5, 1864, another Building Committee was appointed. May 15th the plans of Mr. John Notman were adopted, being for the building as it now stands. A record is to be found of some $3,000 raised by subscription, etc., also money raised by bond and mortgage. The work was stopped once or twice through lack of funds and certain other difficulties. There is no record of the completion, but January 2, 1866, a mortgage was placed on the new building, and April 2d a Committee was appointed to report a plan for its management and as to organizations meeting in it. From time to time there is reference to a Day School being carried on in certain of the rooms, and later a Chapel was fitted up, but not, we believe, in the room now so used. Apparently the building was not well constructed. While the walls were still "green" the heavy roof was put in place, and the west wall, unsupported by proper buttresses, was forced outward, thus at this very early stage displaying the irregularities that are so apparent. The mischief seems almost wholly to have happened at this time, for in 1887–88 there was a very careful examination made by a Committee of the Vestry, including Mr. J. C. Bland, a competent engineer, who made certain suggestions as to wrought iron rods, plates, etc., to strengthen the walls and prevent any progress of the outward thrust. This was carried out in the spring of 1888, under the direction of Mr. Jacob Myer. Unfortunately, the suggestion to build four stone buttresses against the west wall was not carried out, but some wooden props resting against the wall of the Clergy House substituted. The further covering of this wall with cement was not attended to for several years.

To all appearances there has been no very considerable increase in the danger of the wall during these thirty-seven years, and certainly not since 1888; indeed, the wooden props have rotted and fallen down, one after another, without any apparent increase of the "bulge." In connection with the new building the Building Inspector, after examination, gave permission to go ahead, and later Mr. Hill, the Chief of the Bureau, gave his consent.

June 9th, notice was served that the west wall must be taken down immediately, because certain persons in the neighborhood had made complaint that it was unsafe. Upon consultation with the Department it was thought best to appeal against this, and a Commission was appointed which, on June 21st, made a careful examination of the structure.

The Building Inspectors postponed their report until July 7th; meanwhile it is expected that by means of tie rods the weakness of the roof may be overcome, and an examination of the floor joists may suggest some plan for providing against any danger there. The Chief and Board have been most courteous and fair to us in this whole matter. Mr. Sellers and Mr. Riggs will submit a plan to Mr. Myhlertz, the Inspector of the District, for his approval.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen will be away until the middle of July.

The exact hours for Confessions will be found on the notice boards in the corridor.

St. Mary's Guild will meet on Monday, June 30th. No Mothers' Meeting July 3d.

The 7.30 Mass on week-days and 8 o'clock on Sundays will be discontinued until September.

The 7.30 Mass on Mondays (Requiem) will be said in the Crypt Chapel until further notice.

Flowers are specially asked for the Altar during the summer. They should be sent to the Church by 4 o'clock on Saturday.

The Rev. E. N. Webber expects to spend July at Sea Isle City, so that we shall be able to provide a daily Mass as well as Sunday services.

There will be no night service on Sundays during July and August. The attendance has been very small during several years past. Evening prayer will be said at 5 o'clock.

The unexpected demands upon us neces-arily postpones all those improvements and repairs that we hoped might be the beginning of others; the amount of money given on Whitsunday will cover the cost of setting the Cherry Street curb and putting drains underground, but the sums since received must go into Parish Building repairs, and it is hoped that the worry of this new situation may be relieved by generous offerings to carry out the requirements.

The work on the new Clergy House has been progressing with great and satisfactory dispatch. The construction is good and solid and the general effect all that could be desired. Through the kindness of one who is interested, a house filter will be installed, and the floors will be of white oak. The one will add to the convenience and the other to the beauty of the building. Mr. Sellers carefully superintends the work, and Mr. Riggs not only supplies good materials and faithful workmen, but himself gives it that personal attention that shows deep interest.

The Pic-Nic.

On Saturday, June 14th, the children of both Catechisms, with many of their parents and friends, went to Almonesson Park for the annual pic-nic. The start was made from the Chestnut Street Wharf at 9 A. M. Special cars, waiting in Camden, took the picnickers to the park and brought them back again, leaving the park shortly after 6. Many spoke of the delightful ride between Camden and the park.

There was a note of enthusiasm in the day's enjoyment which was gratifying to those who had the responsibility. All enjoyed the various amusements and entered into them with much zest. There were plenty of boats and they were well used. The boys were especially happy in the fine bathing. The Rev. F. D. Ward took charge of the bathers and his timely aid and skill in the water prevented what might have been a serious accident. It was a happily spent day, unmarred by storms of any kind.

All Saints Mission House, Cherry and Lambert Sts.

Sea Isle City.

The house has been in the hands of the carpenter and plumber for several weeks. It was necessary to introduce water; partitions had to be built to separate the various parts—kitchen, pantry, closets, laundry—and a good many small repairs. A room has been enclosed on the ground floor which will serve as a temporary Chapel. It will accommodate about fifty persons. The house needed painting on the outside. These have cost a considerable amount of money, so it is hoped that those who are interested may make special donations.

It turns out also that very little of the furniture at Point Pleasant belonged to the house, so a large sum of money has been expended for kitchen and table ware. The generous donations of a few have provided sufficient for the beds.

Some of the Sisters have been at Sea Isle getting the house in readiness and supervising the repairs and improvements since early in June. Thursday, June 26th, was selected for the formal opening blessing, an account of which will be given in the next issue of the Magazine. The first party to occupy the house were to start June 30th and remain until Friday, July 11th.

It is not possible to permit individuals to stay over their time, but it is hoped to give an opportunity for a visit to as many as heretofore.

The people at Sea Isle have manifested a very great interest in the work, and we hope that this may be increased as we become better acquainted. We expected to arrange for religious services as often as possible on Sundays and during the week; nothing definite can be promised, as much depends on the encouragement that is given.

The letter printed below is a very great encouragement to us.

The Bishop of New Jersey writes, under date of June 9th:

"The Sisters are just as heartily welcome in Sea Isle as they were at Point Pleasant, though I am sorry for the change of base. . . . If the Clergy who minister to the Sisters are able to extend their ministrations to others, I will be very glad. There can be no intrusion upon the rights of others, for Ocean City is a community by itself and some miles from Sea Isle. I pray the good Sisters may be prospered in the new home as they certainly were at Point Pleasant. I am only sorry that we cannot offer them anything in the way of spiritual advantages from the 'Associate Mission.'"

St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S.

The annual festival this year began with Solemn Vespers on the eve of Corpus Christi, in St. John's Chapel, and the business meeting was held in the Vestry immediately afterward. The Treasurer's report was received and Mr. Mowry was re-elected.

Solemn Mass was sung at 9 o'clock on Corpus Christi, and there was a good attendance of members with others. The offerings were given to the Chapel account at Sea Isle City.

The condition of the Ward is in every way most encouraging; the attendance at monthly Vespers is most gratifying. Bearing in mind the very important object of the confraternity, it is desirable to increase the number of associates. Those who are interested can always obtain a leaflet explaining the purpose.

Feeling in Religion.

The idea is frequently expressed that feeling in religion is untrustworthy, and that reason is the all-important thing to be cultivated. As a matter of fact feeling is just as trustworthy a source of information concerning spiritual matters as is reason. The notion that it is not is based on ignorance of the constitution of our nature. Every man may be described as a central vital knot, with various faculties radiating from it. That knot is the "personality:" to it belong reason, feeling, will. These are powers of that personality, but they are not the personality itself. The personality is something distinct from them, back of them—something for which they act. We may think of these three faculties as workmen for that mysterious "personality" which makes each one of us a human being. These workmen are of equal skill and of equal rank. No one is of greater value than another. Each one, after its own manner, brings to that inner personality to which they belong the knowledge of things outside. One is as good a carrier as another. And the things which these working faculties bring home to the personality which makes them work are the real things of the universe to that personality. This reality is assured, not because the reason, or the will, or the feeling, has done the work, but because the work done has affected the personality for which they are working; and the personality is equally affected by the product of each of the workmen.

Consider, for example, a gorgeous sunset. The feeling brings home the power of beauty and the whole being is stirred. The reason brings home the fact that this sunset is merely a series of ethereal vibrations which are absolutely mechanical. The personality is profoundly affected. Two coordinate faculties have seized upon a single object and brought it home, each in its own way. But now suppose that the reason, being uninformed, does not know that a sunset is caused by mechanical vibrations of the ether: and so the personality does not possess the consciousness that the reason is acting, thereby the feeling brings home its influence. Is the sunset any less real? Not at all. The personality has a consciousness of the fact of that sunset just as surely as if the knowledge were supplied by the action of both faculties.

Exactly the same thing is true in religion. A pagan is deeply affected by the sight of a crucifix; his reason has told him nothing of its meaning, but his feeling has conveyed to his personality a sure knowledge of spiritual truth. A child of six loves to go to Mass that he may worship the Lord Jesus Christ; his reason is not capable of telling him about God's presence on the altar, but his feeling has given him an adequate knowledge of the fact. So when any person realizes a spiritual fact—e. g., God's presence, His love, His mercy—that realization is just as true and of just as much value if it is brought by the feeling alone, as if it had been brought by the reason alone or by both together. Of course realization is complete only when all the faculties work together in full measure; and knowledge furnished by one faculty should be verified by that furnished by another. Nevertheless the feeling is, by virtue of the construction of man's nature, capable of furnishing him with the truth; and practical experience has always shown that the vast majority of human beings are more affected for good by feeling than by reason. Consequently feeling in religion is not to be despised nor relegated to a second place; and if any preference is to be given at all, feeling should have it.

Both reason and feeling are "very far gone from original righteousness" and are therefore very liable to error, especially in spiritual matters. While they have the power of conveying truth to the personality, they have also the power of seizing upon falsity and conveying that as truth. So it is always important to verify the products of each by those of the other. Perhaps this cannot be done. Frequently the reason is so uninstructed that it is of no use in testing the products of feeling. Then appears the need of a further test, and one which shall be external to the personality. Such a test has been provided in the revelation of Almighty God. Therefore anything conveyed to the personality as truth which is not capable of verification by illuminated reason is necessarily false. So it is plain that for all men, and most especially for the more uninstructed, the feeling is of the utmost importance in conveying to the personality those certain and established truths given by God, and hard of understanding; while the interaction of feeling with reason, and their mutual dependence upon revelation rule out effectually those spiritual vagaries and "efflorescences of devotion" which lead an unbalanced feeling into mere sentimentality.

Mutilation of the Holy Bible.

"The omission from Christian Bibles of the books known as the Apocrypha is one of the strange results of the Reformation. From the time of the Apostles they had been read by the Christian Church as part of Holy Scripture. They were included in that collection of sacred books, published in Greek by the Jews of Alexandria, which we know as the Septuagint. This was the common Bible used by the Jews wherever the Greek language was spoken. It was used as such by the Apostles and all the first preachers of Christianity; It was always current in the Church, and was soon rendered into Latin for the use of Western Christians. There seems, however, to have been a narrower tradition among the Jews of Palestine. They reckoned a smaller number of sacred books, existing in the ancient Hebrew or the current Aramaic text, and gathered into several collections. During the second Christian century, these collections were carefully revised and amalgamated by the labours of the Massoretic scribes, and thus the Hebrew Bible was formed.

The Hebrew Bible had for some time no currency among Christians. They knew it, but they held it of little account. It belonged to a hostile tradition, the tradition of those who had rejected Christ. Origen, for example, noted the fact that the book of Tobit was rejected by "them of the Circumcision," but was read by "the Churches." Other books omitted from the Hebrew Canon were accepted without hesitation by men like Irenæus, Athanasius, and Cyril of Jerusalem, in the list of sacred Scriptures which they carefully distinguished from Apocryphal. St. Jerome was the author of a new tradition. An ardent scholar and a critic of no mean skill, he sought the original text of the sacred books. He plunged into the task of learning Hebrew, and finding the Jews of his age in possession of a compact Bible, with a carefully edited text, he was led to attribute to this an importance never before dreamt of. He translated some books anew, and revised the old version of others from the Massoretic text. He did not attempt to cut the Latin Bible down to the limits of the Hebrew Canon, but he suggested a new distinction between the books which were common to the two collections and those which were peculiar to the Septuagint. He assigned to the former a far higher authority than to the latter.

There was some critical ground for this distinction. The books retained in the Hebrew were supported by two separate and hostile traditions. The Septuagint, though still used by some Jewish synagogues, was supported in the main by the Christian tradition only. The bulk of the Jews disliked it so much as to provide a new Greek version closely following the Hebrew text. But Christians naturally preferred their own tradition. They unanimously held to it, using the Hebrew only for critical purposes, and that very sparingly, until the sixteenth century. The Swiss Reformers then led a revolt. They attacked the Latin rendering of the Vulgate — for no obvious reason, unless it were for the sake of breaking the tradition—and encouraged the use of Castellio's new version. They quarreled also with the Christian Canon of Scripture, acknowledging only the books of the Jewish Canon. Their movement was not without influence in England. St. Jerome's distinction was emphasized, and found conspicuous expression in the Thirty-nine Articles. The books omitted from the Hebrew were not, however, in any way rejected. They were printed in all editions of the English Bible, even those that issued from Geneva. They were appointed to be read in church, and were constantly and familiarly quoted by ecclesiastical writers. But they were carefully gathered together in a place by themselves, and were usually marked by the title of Apocrypha. The title was singularly inept, for it properly means private or secret writings which are not publicly read, while these were so read in Divine Service; it also acquired a popular sense implying worthlessness or falsehood. For this cause, or because of some fanatical devotion to the Jewish Canon, the English Puritans fiercely assailed these books. Many of the Non-conformists refused to read them when appointed for use in Divine Service, and strove eagerly for their exclusion at the revision of the Prayer Book in 1661. This kind of Nonconformity continued in spite of all authority, and continues to our day.

* * * * * * *

Copies of the Bible were multiplied, from which the "Apocrypha" were omitted altogether.

* * * * * * *

It is impossible to justify the neglect into which these books have fallen. They are of unequal merit and importance. So also are the books of the Hebrew Canon. The distinction is, indeed, purely accidental. On no intelligible principle can the book of Esther be received and the book of Tobit rejected, Ecclesiastes be honoured and the Wisdom of the Son of Sirach set aside. On no Christian principle can the Canon of Rabbinical Jews be exalted above that of the Christian Fathers. It is reasonable, with St. Jerome, to prefer those books which are in both Canons to those which are in only one. Further we dare not go. Citation in the New Testament is sometimes taken as defining the authority of the Old Testament, and the quotations of Scripture in the New Testament are almost always taken from the Septuagint, of which these books were an integral part. Critics have noted two hundred and twelve places where these quotations differ textually from the Massoretic Hebrew; in only fifty places do they differ materially from the Septuagint. The Hebrew text is of first-rate value for those books which exist in Hebrew; the Scribes were jealous for the smallest variation, while the Greek translators were notoriously careless. Yet even here scholars prefer in some cases the testimony of the Greek version as preserving an original reading, and for the inclusion or exclusion of a book there is little to choose between the two authorities. The question which has arisen regarding the Coronation Bible will serve to inform the English public, and we may reasonably hope that English Christians, when duly informed, will show some preference for the Christian Canon of Scripture."—Church Times (England.)

Uncharitable Conversation.

"Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath."

There are in the world many schools which teach how to speak well; there is not one which teaches silence, according to the school of Jesus Christ. If in this school you learn to keep silent, you also learn how to speak well; that is, to speak in conformity to the dictates of charity, and consequently you will fly slander.

Slander consists (1) in attributing to another an evil which does not exist in him; (2) in exaggerating a real evil—in these two cases it takes the name of calumny, because it is complicated falsehood; (3) in making known a hidden fault without having a legitimate motive of necessity or of great utility; (4) in misinterpreting good; (5) in hiding or diminishing the merit which belongs to anyone.

Accustom yourself not to speak of the affairs of others or of things which do not concern you. We have sufficient care around us without talking about the affairs of others. This circumspection will be an excellent preservative against slander.

When St. Peter had the curiosity to ask of Jesus what would become of John, the Lord made this reply: "What is that to thee? Follow thou Me." Why askest thou of things which do not concern thee? Think of following Me, and nothing beyond. You ought to say the same to yourself every time curiosity leads you to think of or to criticise the actions of others.—St. Marks Messenger.

The annual report shows 24 Wards and 11 temporary Wards. St. Saviour's Ward is second in number of associates (73) and first in amount of annual dues, $81.53. There ought to be more members of this Ward, the object of the Confraternity is one that necessarily appeals to every Christian who believes in the Incarnation, that Jesus is God, and who trusts in the efficacy of the sacrifice on Calvary and its divinely instituted memorial.

Catholic Work in China.

The money sent by St. Clement's to the Bishop of Shanghai will be used to assist in the erection of a building in a work just started thirty miles out of Shanghai. Twenty or thirty people have been induced through a young Chinese Christian to apply for instruction in the Christian religion in order to prepare themselves for baptism. A month or so ago the little congregation was organized and arrangements made for services to be held there regularly on Sundays for the time being in a rented house. Since then they have collected a sum of money and are just now buying a piece of land in order to build a church on it. At first a kind of Parish house will be built on one side of this piece of ground. When more money is in hand they will try to build a permanent church.

Rev. F. D. Ward will return August 1st.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen returned for Sunday, July 20th.

Rev. C. C. Quin will be away during the greater part of August.

The Offices of St. Vincent's and St. Mary's Guilds will be omitted in August.

Mr. Sears, the Choirmaster, sailed for England July 23rd and expects to return about September 1st.

The Choir will be absent August 10th, 17th, 24th, and 31st, hymns will be sung at the eleven o'clock Mass.

The Missa de Angelis has been sung at the High Mass during July, greatly to the devout satisfaction of those who love the Church's old plain-song.

Work on the new building has progressed very satisfactorily, so that it is almost under roof when the second payment on account must be made. In every way the structure is an improvement, and gives every evidence of remaining firm for many years.

The sad and sudden death of Thomas Conner, well known to many of the older members of the Congregation, seems to call for a particular reference, he had faithfully served as sexton of the Church for about seven years, "Upon his soul may Christ have mercy."

The final decision as to the west wall of Parish Building was made on Monday, July 14th; it may remain, the roof beams must be strengthened by 1⅝-inch tie rods bolted into the wall; this, with expenses in connection, will cost about $200. So that our repair fund this year has barely covered these unexpected demands.

All Saints' Seashore Home.

Thursday morning, June 26th, the chapel at Sea Isle City was blessed and the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass offered for the first time. Very appropriately St. Clement is the patron.

In the afternoon the blessing of the other parts of the house took place, the Office in the Priests' Prayer Book being used. The various rooms were properly censed and sprinkled with Holy Water.

There were present Revs. G. H. Moffett, C. C. Quin, F. D. Ward, the Mother Superior of All Saints, the Sister in Charge and other Sisters of the Community, several friends from Philadelphia and a few from Sea Isle City.

On Monday, June 30th, the first party, fifty in number, went down and remained until July 11th. The second party went on July 14th and returned July 25th. The number was forty-five.

Rev. E. N. Webber began the daily Mass on Thursday, July 3d, and it has continued during the month. In accordance with the authority given to us by the Bishop of New Jersey, the people of Sea Isle have been invited to share these privileges, and on Sundays, in addition to the low Masses, Matins have been said with sermon at eleven o'clock and evening prayer with Instruction at five o'clock. Although the attendance has not been large yet, it is hoped it may increase and sufficient interest aroused to enable more suitable provision to be made.

The necessary repairs have cost a good deal more money than was expected, and very little has been given for the purchase and repairs. It was hoped that a special interest would be taken.

The Place and Importance of Meditation in the Christian Life.

We shall try to speak of the practice of Meditation as one of the greatest means by which the Christian soul is to be helped forward in the way of perfection, the life of likeness to Christ to which each is called by the very fact of having received baptism, and having been made a member of Christ.

Baptism is the entrance to the Kingdom of God. It is the door from which the Christian sets out on his progress back to God that he may know Him, love Him and serve Him, and thus fulfil the purpose for which God has created him. The life set before each Christian is that of growing "in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." It must be a life of active earnestness in spiritual things, if it is to approach in any measure to that of our Lord Himself, as we consider that life on earth of the man Christ Jesus. It can be no vague condition of dreamy blessedness, a state of waiting to be saved, without on the part of man a working out of his "own salvation with fear and trembling."

"Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect." In these words our Lord has set the standard for us as followers of Him. It is not one which we would have dared choose for ourselves, but He has put it before us, and, if we would be faithful, we can do nothing but strive to realize it.

Yet it is too true that very many have taught themselves to associate the idea of perfection with the lives only of very pious, holy Christians long since passed out of this world, or of those now in Religious Orders, and to comfort themselves with the reflection that they can never in their ordinary Christian lives be expected to rise to any great height of holiness.

The words of the saintly Keble stand as true now as when he first wrote them:

> We need not bid for cloistered cell,
> Our neighbour and our work farewell,
> Nor strive to wind ourselves too high,
> For sinful man beneath the sky.
> The trivial round, the common task,
> Would furnish all we ought to ask;
> Room to deny ourselves; a road
> To bring us daily nearer God.

The truth is that each is called to reach that degree of perfection which is possible in the state of life and the age in which God has placed him. The twentieth century cannot revise the principles of the Christian religion nor the characteristics of the Christian life as taught to men by our Lord Jesus Christ Himself. Our Lord never promised that the work of reaching heaven and seeing God would be easy for man—at least, in his natural state. "The Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." "If any man come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow Me." It is only to those who realize the presence and the power of Christ in them, and who work with Him faithfully, that our Lord says, "My yoke is easy, and My burden is light."

We know that the great characteristic of our Lord's life as the Perfect Son of God was that he always sought after and did the Will of the Father. "Christ pleased not Himself"—this is the keynote of that perfection which brought from the Father in Heaven the testimony, "This is My beloved Son in Whom I am well pleased."

So is it with Christians—to please God and not ourselves, this is perfection. To learn what is the Will of God, and then to bend our own will to serve God and do the things which He requires, this is the only life which God will approve.

The important place which Meditation holds in the Christian life grows out of the fact that by means of Meditation we are able to know God as He is in Himself and as He has revealed Himself to man, and also what He requires of man. By reason of its effect in strengthening the powers of man's will and directing them towards God, Meditation has a value so practical and helpful for all who are striving to follow Christ and come to God that many spiritual writers have held that Meditation or mental prayer, if not, indeed, indispensable to salvation, is necessary for attaining perfection, and that there can be nothing like a spiritual life without it.

Meditation has been defined as the "exercise of all the powers of the soul in the apprehension of God." And again, "Meditation, in its simplest and widest sense, is reading the Bible devotionally." It is then listening to God's voice in order that we may learn His will and shape our actions with it. But this does not mean that Meditation may be aimless, or without direct purpose, and the best results will only follow when it is practiced with some regular and settled system and method.

All of man's faculties, his imagination and memory, his understanding and his will are brought into service in Meditation. It is not the exercise of one power of the soul to the exclusion of the others, but all are united, and help in the apprehension in all its completeness, of the truth which is brought before the soul, or the mystery of the Faith which we are contemplating.

The imagination may be ravished with the vision revealed to it of the Majesty and Beauty of God; the intellect may find its highest gratification in striving to fathom the mysteries of the Divine Being and understanding the perfection of the Divine Attributes, but unless the affections of the soul are stirred with an abiding love of God, and the will is moved to seek God alone, and above all things, and to serve Him with utmost devotion, the Meditation has not borne real fruit in the life.

The true use of Holy Scripture as we shall discover in Meditation, is not to make men learned, but wise—"wise unto salvation;" it instructs us "unto all good works." God Himself—Truth—is revealed to us not a mere something remembered by us, but a Living Principle to become food to our souls and strengthen them. Meditating, it may be, upon the life of our Lord here on earth, we learn, as we could learn in no other way, that our "meat is to do the Will of our Father" and "to finish His work;" we remember that we are to do all things to the glory of God, because this was the way our Lord acted, never seeking His Own glory. And this sets fire afresh to our devotion to our Lord and brings to our lips the confession of our unworthiness in the past; we see all the weakness and paltriness of even those efforts in the service of our Lord, upon which at one time we had prided ourselves; we get a deeper conception of what is required of us in the present, and how far off we are from living up to our responsibilities in God's sight; and there is born in our will the resolution that, for the future, we will make a consecration of all the faculties and powers of our being, such as we have never yet made in all our life. The greatness of God has come so near to us; the vastness of the work of showing forth His glory by our lives has been so clearly revealed to our soul; the never-faltering devotion of our Lord Jesus Christ, while on earth, to the Will of the Father has so appeared before us in all its reality and truth that our poor human selfishness feels itself burned up, and the affections of our heart, and all the movements of our Will are given without reserve to thinking and doing only whatever God may require of us. For the future we feel that the purpose of our life is to be even as was that of our Lord, "I come, not to do My Own Will, but the Will of Him that sent Me."

Surely that Saint spoke the truth who said that no one who practiced Meditation for fifteen minutes each day could ever be lost. Meditation keeps the soul in its true relation to God and spurs it on to earnestness and perseverance in the Christian course beyond any other practice of the spiritual life.

We may know then that it is only through the greatest misconception of what Meditation really is that we sometimes hear Meditation spoken of as though it were an act of the soul only when in a state of passivity and listlessness, or that there are some who tell us that Meditation is not practical for active, busy minds. As though they would say, "it is very well to try it when there is nothing else to be done." As we have seen, Meditation, when truly understood and practiced, is a manifold act of the whole of a man's being. All his powers are aroused and kept active by it, until he is led to fulfil the true purpose of his creation, and rises up to know and love and serve God and to live and act on this earth for God's glory only. And busy people are the very ones who would be helped by the practice of Meditation to keep a true balance in their spiritual lives.

It is to be feared that very often much of the shrinking from Meditation can be traced to spiritual indolence, which does not wish to know too much of revealed truth, lest the lines of duty pointed out, should be those against which the will of man rebels and which it cannot force itself to follow. Never was there an age of such self-indulgence as is ours! And some forms of present-day activity, in what is popularly termed Church-work, can only be rightly described as self-pleasing, since there cannot be discovered any zeal for God's glory in them. "Be still, and know that I am God," which is the very spirit of Meditation, and the life of all true work which is done for God is not the attitude of soul in which much modern work which professes to be for God is done. Rather, to let themselves be known above all things, and God have only second place, is the spirit of too many, who yet would tell us that they feel called to work in the Lord's Vineyard.

There is another, although quite different, tendency of the day, which the practice of systematic Meditation would help to counteract. We must all feel conscious at times, at least in some quarters, of the tendency to over-dogmatise, we may call it, to preach the Faith as contained in the Creeds, always in the most severe dogmatic form, with very little, if any, exhortation as to applying to Christian every-day life the Truth taught with such exact and incontrovertible statement of doctrine.

In the exigencies of Church life in a country and age like our own, we do not mean for one moment to belittle the great need there is for clear-cut and strong dogmatic teaching of the Faith which has been handed down to us from our Lord Himself. What we wish to emphasize is that exact expression of truth is not the only way in which it is to be given to men but that the heart and the moral nature must be touched and aroused, as well as the intellect, if truth is to have its complete effect and strongest influence on the lives of men.

By Meditation upon the facts of the Creed they become not mere bundles of dry doctrine, but statements of the Truth of God, which human hearts may learn to love, and apply in their daily conduct, showing the fruits of faith in a deeper thankfulness to God for all that He has done for man in making, redeeming, and sanctifying him; displaying also a fuller grasp of the meaning and helpfulness of that fellowship with one another here on earth, which comes from union in the Body of Christ.

Here we see the necessity of cultivating in lay people the love for Meditation, as the highest form of prayer, that they may experience more and more "the joy and peace in believing," which is intended for them, and may learn to give back to God in their service of Him some of that tenderness which He shows as a Father, towards them, His children. Holy Scripture used in Meditation, whether in the form of the Creed, or in passages from the Bible, becomes the very living voice of God, speaking at this very moment to individual hearts, as though intended for no one else. And how it shows them God's great love and pity for them, and stirs them to give themselves to Him with real contrition and an ever deepening love and devotion, as they are taught more and more of the knowledge of God. Meditation brings a spiritual direction and purpose into the life, and, being regularly practiced, keeps ever new that perseverance in the pursuit of holiness, without which man's life must become aimless, and fall into a state of irresolution in which man yields more easily to the enemy of man's soul in his efforts to draw him away from God.

Spiritual writers who have written upon Meditation never allow us to think that Meditation can ever be an easy thing. It would not be of much use if it were. In order to keep alive the fire and spirit of Meditation, and make it profitable, a habit of spiritual reading must be persistently kept up along with it. This is as the oil which feeds the lamp. It is also impossible for any lasting result to come from Meditation unless it is practiced according to regular method, yet at first the irksomeness of it grows out of this very necessity for system which appears so artificial and constraining.

There are various methods to choose from, but with so many excellent books of Meditation about us containing rules for the practice of it it will not be necessary to enter upon details here. It will be sufficient to say that the method of St. Ignatius is more adapted to modern habits of mind and is the method upon which most books of Meditation are framed. We are familiar with the leading points of the Ignatian method. After the Preparation and the Preludes, which employ the memory and the imagination, there is the application of the understanding to the subject before us. The third and very important part of Meditation is the use of the will in producing affections and resolutions. The resolutions must be practical, and must be particular, not general, and they should have to do with the probable events of the very day on which we are meditating in order to yield the best spiritual results. The conclusion of a Meditation is important and should never be hurried, lest a too sudden reaction from the recollectedness of prayers should spoil the whole Meditation.

We are cautioned not to look for ectasies, but rather to persevere in the painstaking way of Meditation, and not expect to reach God by some shorter way. And for our comfort we are told that what we sometimes call bad Meditations are generally most fruitful. When we feel ourselves beset, perhaps, by distractions, our perseverance in Meditation becomes an act of greater obedience, than in a time of spiritual fervour and satisfaction, and the act of humility in bearing with our own imperfections may prove a great step towards the perfection which we are seeking.

The six subjects of Meditation usually recommended are the attributes and perfections of God, the mysteries and virtues of our Lord, the actions of the Saints, the virtues, the vices, and the Christian veritics.

Let us remember that Meditation is not Perfection itself any more than are other practices of the Spiritual life. It is one only of the "implements and tools of the Spiritual art" by which man attains to that perfection for which he was created. And, as St. Benedict beautifully pictures it, man must abide patiently, performing his allotted work where God has placed him, till the evening closes, and the day of life declines, and the tools are put away, as the great Master comes and says: "Cease now from thy labour, it is enough."

Sea Isle City.

The third party went down on Monday, July 21st, and returned Friday, August 8th, the household numbered 54.

The fourth party went down Monday, August 11th, and returned Friday, August 22d, the household numbered 50; a small number remained through the first week of September to close the house.

The house, with all its conveniences of situation and management, has been a great advantage. The various people, old and young, have been enthusiastic in their praise, and the behavior and enjoyment of all have been very gratifying. The nearness and safety of the beautiful beach has been a great help in the care of the children and opportunity for bathing. The low excursion rates have enabled husbands and fathers to spend the Sunday with their families, and so added to the pleasure of all.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company have been most generous in their provision. A special car attached to the train at Camden is switched on to the Avalon branch at Sea Isle City and stops at Ludlam Street, just back of the house, and on the return a similar convenient arrangement is made. The excursion rate for our parties have also been very low.

The services have been kept up each day as well as on Sundays. Rev. E. N. Webber left August 2d, when Rev. W. A. McClenthen went down, returning August 11th. Then Rev. Joseph Sherlock until August 16th, Rev. F. D. Ward August 17th to 25th, Rev. C. C. Quin August 25th to September 1st.

The Bishop of New Jersey had prepared us not to expect much interest on the part of the people at Sea Isle in the religious services. A few people have taken advantage of the privileges offered, but some spending the summer, who called themselves "church" people, have given their souls a holiday rest; it is a strange condition of things and hard to reconcile with any real idea of the love and nature of God: people glad of an excuse not to have to worship their Creator. To be sure, it is partly accounted for by their ignorance of their obligation and duty. Sometimes the excuse is, "We are not high church and cannot follow the service; it is so different."

Some of the Sea Isle people have been very kind. Mr. Taws, a neighbor, has entertained each party with a graphophone.

The Fair was held on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 19th and 20th, and was a very good beginning and realized more than was anticipated. It will take some time to get the people or even visitors interested. One of the great attractions of the Fair was a large quantity of home-made candy, given by Mrs. Wells, which found a ready market. The season has been without serious illness, Dr. Wells having faithfully looked after the health of the household.

Not Affecting Morals.

The sad notice which proclaims to the world that a Priest has been forbidden to exercise his ministry sometimes ends with some such words as these: "For causes not affecting his moral character." We are not concerned whether this is a canonical or technical form only and so understood; what we desire to call attention to is the fact that a man's faith is surely a part of his moral life; if he loses his faith, denies his faith, surrenders his faith, it does affect his moral life—if he denies all sacramental power and becomes a Protestant, agnostic or infidel, his moral life is affected; if he denies the grace of the Sacraments that he has ministered or received, that fact affects his moral life very seriously. It may seem a kind or gentle thing to say that certain things do not affect his moral character, but it is not true; any act or acts that cause "deposition" seriously impairs a man's moral character, whatever the nature or expression or the opinion of the people.

Parish Notes.

Even-song at 8 o'clock, September 7th.

The candlesticks of St. Katharine's Altar have been refinished.

Rev. E. N. Webber has kindly assisted during the month by taking Masses on several occasions.

Rev. C. C. Quin left town August 5th for his holiday, and will return for the first Sunday in September.

The Office of the Guild of St. Vincent will be omitted in September, on account of the Chaplain's absence.

The Anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Hannah P. Smith was said in the Crypt Chapel, August 13th.

The Catechisms begin Sunday, September 21st, at 3 P. M.; the Bible Classes, Sunday, October 5th, at 3 P. M.

The 8 o'clock Mass will be resumed on Sunday, September 14th, due notice will be given of the 7.30 on weekdays.

It is expected that the boundary wall of the Church property will be put in good order, stones repointed and, where needed, reset.

Sunday, September 14th is the Feast of the Holy Cross, members of the Guild of the Holy Cross should be careful to receive Holy Communion.

Rev. F. D. Ward returned on August 2d, during the month he went to Orr's Island, Maine, and blessed "Farleigh," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fryer.

The new building has not progressed as rapidly as we would wish, but it must be remembered that this is the busiest time, and the legal proceedings hindered, so we lost our turn, as it were.

The Office of the Guild of St. Mary will not be said on September 1st, because it is a civil holiday, but will, with great propriety, be transferred to Monday, September 8th. The Nativity B. V. M.

Cherry Street, with its asphalt pavement, is a great improvement, it will lessen very much the noise of passing wagons. Perhaps, sometime, Appletree Street will be similarly improved, then we shall have further cause for thankfulness to the city government.

The frames of two of the carbon prints hanging in the Crypt Chapel (Murillo's Holy Family and Bellini's Annunciation) had become very much warped. Through the generosity of the one who gave them originally, new frames of solid oak have been supplied.

Mr. S. Tudor Strang, formerly Organist, substituted on Sundays, July 27th and August 3d, when the Missa de Angelis was sung by the men of the Choir only. Mr. Rowland played the hymns at the eleven o'clock Mass on the other Sundays of August, when all the Choir were absent; the Choir will return September 7th.

Female Immodesty.

The objections made to women wearing men's clothes in church have not been answered by some who apologize for this custom; the fact that they really look like men, at some distance, sufficiently condemns the practice.

The Bishop of Delaware has drawn attention to the scandal of women shamelessly appearing in church without any covering on their head, and, of course, this class of lawless females is indignant. Modesty is a distinguishing characteristic of a Christian woman, and both of these practices transgress the laws of modesty.

The Catechism.

The regular sessions of the Catechism will be resumed on the Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity, September 21st, at 3 P. M. The object of the Catechism is the proper instruction of the children in Christian faith and life. This is a serious responsibility which creates an obligation both for the Clergy and for the Laypeople. The Clergy's obligation is recognized on both sides; they know it, try to meet it, and the people take it for granted that they must furnish religious instruction for the young. But the obligation of the people is not generally recognized; they do not try to do their share, and in these days, the number of people who consider religious instruction a necessity is growing alarmingly smaller. And so the Clergy ask for a more serious consideration of this obligation by the people of the Parish, together with loyal and enthusiastic support in the work of the Catechism. This support may be given in three ways. First, by faithful intercession for God's blessing on the work, then by personal assistance, finally by furnishing information concerning those unknown to the Clergy, who should be sought out and looked after.

Concerning personal assistance, there is need of teachers for the Sunday afternoon sessions, and also someone to assist at the organ.

Missionary Weakness.

Enthusiasm is good when there is something back of it, otherwise it is useless.

A Missionary Council is to be held in Philadelphia, October 21st-23d. The programme includes reports, speeches, conferences, business of various kinds, plans to raise money; the devotional part is very meagre—a celebration of the Holy Communion after the opening sermon, morning Prayer on the other two days. No wonder, when talk and money are the prominent ideas, that actual accounts of mission work make one feel that efforts to help are hardly worth while. The Apostles "broke bread" daily, following the orders of their Master, "Do this in remembrance of Me," they depended on the Saviour's promise, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." The Blessed Sacrament is the only proper foundation; the offering of the Holy Sacrifice, not human talk, is the only way to preach and teach the religion of the Crucified. Jesus Himself lifted up is a more attractive power than the speech of an enthusiastic business man, a clever ecclesiastical manager or a successful Episcopal dignitary. In England the large societies, the S. P. G., for example, have learned that it is a very necessary part of any missionary activity and spirit to arrange for Masses, to be said for the intention, at as many altars as possible.

Big halls, large churches are not enough; many Masses are the true shrine of devotion, the strength of missionary effort. After all it remains true what Christ said: "Without Me, ye can do nothing."

Christ has revealed Himself as His religion, not talk about Himself, and the Holy Sacrifice is Christ Himself. That is the power, the life and the meaning of Christianity.

The Organ.

From time to time notes of interest in connection with the work and history of the Parish have been printed. This puts the information into a permanent form. Following out this, we desire to put on record some account of the organ. The contract for the first instrument was made by the Vestry with Mr. J. C. B. Strawbridge, February 25, 1858. The work was carried out during the succeeding months and completed, ready for use, in the latter part of 1859. The contract price was $2238. Mr. Strawbridge became Organist and continued in that position for several years.

February 11, 1865, the Vestry, by resolution, directed the sale of this instrument. July 1st an offer of $3000 was accepted, and, on September 14th, a resolution was passed authorizing the purchase of the organ of the Harmonia Sacred Musical Society for $4700—$1000 to be paid in cash, $2100 in Parish bonds surrendered by Messrs. Moon, Lambert, Clark and Lowber, and $1600 in new bonds. The Accounting Warden was authorized to issue new bonds of the Church, payable in four, five and six years, to the amount of $3700. These bonds were not entirely paid off until 1886.

Meanwhile, May, 1883, this instrument had become so entirely worn out that it was determined to remove it from the gallery and rebuild it at the eastern end of the Church, it having been found difficult to support the Choir of men and boys, which had been introduced in 1869, with an instrument so distant.

Mr. Roosevelt contracted to renew the mechanical parts, revoice all the pipes and rebuild for $5500. The work was completed and the organ used for the first time on St. Clement's Day, 1883. The whole cost was $6165.44, which was met by subscriptions, $2434; organ recital, $351; one person, $3500. Since then the organ was thoroughly cleaned in 1894. It still remains one of the best instruments in the city, but requires constant care and attention to keep it in proper condition. We must expect that in the course of a few years it will require a thorough overhauling, and when that occurs, it is much to be desired that the larger pipes shall be returned to the gallery, a choir organ being placed somewhere on the east wall, both to be controlled and played from a keyboard in the choir, electric connection being had. This will restore the Church to the dignity which is now lost, the two chests of raw pipes destroying the architectural lines and symmetry of the building.

Ember Days.

The September Ember Days are the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday after the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, a very appropriate association, for the Priest must expect to glory only in the Cross and the Crucified—his vocation must remind him that he is not his own, nor even the property of his family—his purpose in life is higher and more important than a salary, his work not the mere satisfying of human ambition. Prayers are needed in particular for those who are candidates, and, as such, preparing in various schools and seminaries. What do they need? Not, first of all, learning or intellectual training, but the cultivation of their vocation, the formation of their priestly life and their devotional character: the Sacerdotal Spirit. In this, it is sad to say, that they get almost no assistance or training, important, difficult and necessary as it is. They come away with the seminary testimonial in their hands, and, as far as the professors are concerned, no preparation for the work of the ministry in its true sense. The lectures they have heard on Pastoral Theology and Parochial Management are not of the slightest help, they might just as well have been delivered in the Chinese language. The three years in the seminary, during which habits of devotion, self-sacrifice and experience in the hardness of living ought to have been acquired, have, in many cases, established an untrue ideal and unreal point of view. They have lived the ordinary life of the ordinary student, with the exception that they have not worked as hard or been nearly as much interested in their work. The lay reading experiences that they have had has left the evil impression that if they want to be away for a Sunday from their Parish, it is no sin to defraud their people of the Mass, and they just provide for them "morning service." During their term time they have had little or no spiritual help from the professors, and no one has noticed or cared whether their rule of Confession or Communion have been faithfully kept. We are surprised that a church paper has taken up the absurd argument that people expect their Clergy to live in a certain way; they do not expect anything of the kind, and they despise the Clergy in their hearts and disown them in their thoughts when they copy and ape the customs of the world. Men with true vocations need to be trained to give all they can to the service of Christ and His Church and to receive only enough for support; those who squeeze a wealthy or poor parish for their maintenance are a scandal and reproach. "The laborer is worthy of his hire" is responsible for more sins of covetousness than any other misapplied text. The greatest missionary ardor would be kindled if Bishops and Clergy were deprived of their big salaries and generous perquisites. The candidate for Holy Orders would have a higher ideal than success—he would think there was something more important than influence of friends, letters of introduction to distinguished and wealthy wardens, invitations to deliver best discourses, or best way to distribute flattering photographs. Pray for those who are preparing for Holy Orders in these Ember Days.

By the Catholic Church we mean an organization founded by Divine authority upon the Apostles, with a universal mission to all nations in all future ages, its claim to be universal depending not upon the number of its adherents but upon its revelation to the whole world of the Divine will and purpose. Athanasius contrâ mundum: the universal faith did not forfeit its universality when it was upheld by a single authority. For the English Church no higher position is claimed than that of two ecclesiastical provinces within, and subject to, that Divinely-appointed organization which can be traced back through history to Apostolic days with its continuous traditions, doctrines and polity. As such it claims, even though it does not gain, the adherence and submission of all who, within the area of its two provinces, profess the Christian faith. And it does so, not with the motive of self-aggrandisement, but because it sees no other body which, since the dawn of Christianity in this country down to the present day, has continuously maintained the Apostolic polity, doctrines and traditions.—Church Times.

Courts of Appeal.

One of the miserable results of the religious upheaval of the sixteenth century and the most serious, as far as the Clergy are concerned, was the sweeping away of all proper ecclesiastical courts; this has been the cause of much tyranny on the part of those in authority, who have been free to vent personal spite and malice. In England the "Victorian persecution" is an example in our time, in this, the saintly Dr. Pusey was cruelly silenced for two years, Lowder Mackonochie, de la Bere, Cox and many others were unjustly deprived of their livings or maliciously hounded to their deaths. Tooth, Green, Envaght and Dale were imprisoned and many others were treated in a high-handed and illegal fashion, but God's purpose in the Catholic Revival has prevailed in spite of all. In this country we inherited this despotic condition. Bishops, as well as wealthy and influential laymen, have mercilessly attacked, unjustly condemned, injured in character and reputation Priests whose sole offence has been that they have taught and practiced the only true religion, the Catholic Faith; there has been no redress, no appeal, no justice to be obtained. Many an one has been brought to an early grave, such as Dr. de Koven, of Racine; and the history of this Parish tells of more than one who was treated with outrageous injustice and petty revenge.

The main obstacle at the present time to the establishment of proper courts of appeal is the opposition of ruling laymen in General Convention, who block every effort, and the Bishops, whose duty it is to protect their Clergy, are indifferent or afraid to take a determined stand. It is time that definite steps were taken. Laypeople, who have the interests of the Church at heart, will use every effort to compel consideration and action that will deliver the Church from this stigma.

Latin Harmony.

There are some very painful illustrations of this splendid and attractive virtue evident to all at the present time. In France, the expulsion of the religious orders and closing of their schools, the leaders in this are certain men who have formerly exercised the office of Priest, and, therefore, were trained by the Church. In Italy, a certain noted case shows the effect of the discipline, but it is only a type of many others not so public.

In Spain, there is the same opposition to ecclesiastical control, the fury has not burst forth mainly because the government has promised to deal with the question. In America, there is the divided opinion as to the Friar question in the Philippines, public utterances show a very decided split as to this affair, only another indication of the existence of some kind of "Americanism."

Even the respectable Latins themselves have ceased to defend and apologize for the Philippine condition of things. These facts rather overthrow contrary theories of that wonderful and mysterious Latin Harmony.

Leo XIII on Holy Eucharist.

The following extract and comment are from the Church Times:

"But the chief aim of our efforts must be that the frequent reception of the Eucharist may be everywhere revived among Catholic peoples. For this is the lesson which is taught us by the example, already referred to, of the primitive Church, by the decree of councils, by the authority of the Fathers and of the holy men in all ages. For the soul, like the body, needs frequent nourishment; and the Holy Eucharist provides that food which is best adapted to the support of its life. Accordingly all hostile prejudices, those vain fears to which so many yield, and their specious excuses for abstaining from the Eucharist, must be resolutely put aside; for there is question here of a gift than which none other can be more serviceable to the faithful people, either for the redeeming of time from the tyranny of anxious cares concerning perishable things, or for the renewal of the Christian spirit and perseverence therein. To this end the exhortations and example of all those who occupy a prominent position will powerfully contribute, but most especially the resourceful and diligent zeal of the Clergy. For Priests, to whom Chrish our Redeemer entrusted the office of consecrating and dispensing the mystery of His Body and Blood, can assuredly make no better return for the honor which has been conferred upon them, than by promoting with all their might the glory of His Eucharist, and by inviting and drawing the hearts of men to the health-giving springs of this great Sacrament and Sacrifice, seconding hereby the longings of His most Sacred Heart."

Is not this the voice of a pastor? Has it not the ring of evangelical truth and fervor? Are not all differences of doctrine or practice trivial in comparison with the fundamental verities here set forth? Does not their utterance bring into scandalous relief the divisions of Christendom which hold asunder, nay, which force into hostile camps, men whose hearts are burning with the same fire of Divine love? How many of the words here quoted would the Bishop of Durham condemn? How many of them would he shrink from using himself? There is another question. Why do not our own Bishops speak to us in this strain? They speak on the same subject, but how? Dwelling on doubtful details as if supremely important, carping, querulous, ever ready—

To hint a doubt, or hesitate dislike—cold in the presence of the majesty of love, swift to rebuke indiscreet devotion, but silent in the face of crying neglect and altars the least frequented in Christendom—is it any wonder that they fail to impress, and the guidance passes from them to the leaders in rank and file? If they would speak to us in this vein they would assuredly be heard.

Clergy House Extension.

The work proceeds very satisfactorily, and it is expected that when completed everyone will have an opportunity of inspecting this addition to the Parish property; at present we cannot say when it will be finished.

Herman Noss & Sons, of York, Pa., who have furnished the mill work, have promised to finish the woodwork of the refectory as a contribution. Various persons have inquired as to what is needed in the furnishing. Desks and chairs for the studies of the Clergy; the book-cases have been provided, and some other articles, but bed and table linen, towels, kitchen utensils and blankets are some of the things that would be useful. It may be remembered that the Parish has done nothing for the furnishing or replenishing of the Clergy House since 1893.

The contract for the glass has been signed. Plain white panes, with symbols worked in the lead, in the principal rooms; of St. Clement, mitre, anchor, chapel, tools, monogram; of St. Peter, keys; of St. Katharine, crown, wheel, palm, sword, book, etc.

The second payment of $5000 was made on the contract September 16th. The contracts amount to $16,500, and there is extra work to be provided for, as well as the architect's commission.

The plastering, which has a rough finish and colored, is completed.

The oak floors have been laid, and the window and door frames with the interior woodwork is being done.

C. B. S.

There will be no issue of the C. B. S. Intercession paper for October, and the Superior General directs that the September paper be used in lieu thereof.

C. B. S. Vespers will be sung on the second Sunday of each month, followed by an instruction, beginning on October 12th. The hour will be 4-30 instead of 5 o'clock.

Sea Isle City.

The house was closed on September 5th, though later some work had to be done. Seventy-five Masses were said in the Chapel and 153 Communions made, Matins with Sermon and Evensong with catechising on nine Sundays, also catechising once each week; there was one baptism, the Offerings amounted to $18.98, which went toward the board of the Priests taking duty, this amounted to $86.50; the difference, with their traveling expenses, was met from a special fund and not from subscriptions to the Home. It is hoped that the expenses of the Home will be covered by the money received. We would urge those interested to bear in mind the house during the winter that some money may be available for further work in the building. It is very much to be desired that the lots might be sold at Point Pleasant, and there is some hope of that—but we must wait an opportunity.

Through the courtesy of a friend, the Sister in Charge was enabled to get a car load of coal. After supplying the House, the rest was sold, much to the convenience of persons at Sea Isle, and a profit of $36.25 realized for the House.

nature of the Sacraments, for he addressed the Galatians: "As many of you as have been baptized in Christ have put on Christ. There can be no Jew or Greek, there can be no slave or free, there can be no male or female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." That, in so great difference of race, position and sex, they are one, is this a result of the assent of the will or of the unity of the Sacrament, since to these there is one Baptism, and they are all clothed in the one Christ?'

"Similarly, to mention three great names in the West, widely separated in point of time, St. Augustine, St. Thomas Aquinas, and Pope Leo XIII, lay stress on the fact that the Church has essential unity by inhering in her Head, Christ. 'The Son of God,' wrote Leo XIII, 'decreed that the Church should be His mystical body, with which He should be united as the Head, after the manner of the human body which He assumed, to which the natural head is physiologically united.'

"To add to these western writers the teaching of the East at the present time, in the 'Longer Catechism of the Russian Church,' it is said, 'Why is the Church one?' 'Because she is one spiritual body, has one Head, Christ, and is animated by one Spirit of God.' 'There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all.' 'Are we still more expressly assured that Jesus Christ is the one only Head of the Church?' The Apostle Paul writes, that for the Church, as, 'The building of God, other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.' 'Wherefore the Church, as the body of Christ, can have no other head than Jesus Christ. The Church being to abide through all generations of time needs also an ever abiding Head; and such is Jesus Christ alone. Wherefore, also, the Apostles take no higher title than that of "Ministers of the Church."' 'What duty does the unity of the Church lay upon us.' 'That of endeavoring to keep the unity of of the Spirit in the bond of peace.' 'How does it agree with the unity of the Church that there are many separate and independent Churches, as those of Jerusalem, Antioch, Alexandria, Constantinople, Russia?' 'These are particular Churches, and parts of the one Catholic Church: the separateness of their visible organization does not hinder them from being all spiritually great members of the one body of the Universal Church, from having one Head, Christ, and one Spirit of faith and grace. This unity is expressed outwardly by unity of Creed and by Communion in Prayer and Sacraments.' 'Is there likewise unity between the Church on earth and the Church in Heaven?' 'Doubtless there is both by their common relation to one Head, our Lord Jesus Christ, and by mutual communion with one another.'"—Darwell Stone.

Parish Notes.

Teachers are needed for the Catechism.

J. C. B. Standbridge was the name of the first organist of St. Clement's.

Miss Wolverton has kindly volunteered to play the organ at the Catechism.

The Anniversary Mass for Julia Dunlap was said on Tuesday, September 16th, at 7.30.

Boys are needed for the Choir, also tenors and basses as volunteers. Apply to the Choir Master.

The Offices and Instructions for the various Guilds will be said this month according to the Kalendar.

The 8 o'clock Mass was resumed on Sunday, September 14th, and the 7.30 (week-day) Mass on September 15th.

Mr. Sears, of the Choir, returned for Even-song Sunday, September 7th, when the night service was resumed.

Guilds: St. Nicholas, Saturday, October 11th, 10 a. m.
Holy Child, Saturday, October 18th.

All kinds of articles, clothes, and odds and ends will be welcome for a Rummage and Jumble Sale, or whatever anyone likes to call it—the proceeds for the Poor Fund.

The ceiling and walls of the lower Vestry have been found to be in such a bad condition that it has been decided to take down the whole ceiling and give an entire new white coat to the walls.

The Psalms and Hymns will not be announced at Even-song. The number of each hymn can be seen on the notice board, and those few who cannot may, with little trouble, obtain them from the Choir announcement in the corridor.

It may be of interest to members of the Congregation to know that there are fifty tons of coal in the Church cellars, and ten more tons contracted for, so there is no immediate cause of anxiety on that account, for an economical use of this supply may carry us through for some time.

Pew rents are due in advance October 1st. The Accounting Warden will be in the Vestry room Monday, October 6th, to receive money and to rent pews or sittings, subject to the approval of the Vestry. Attention is also called to $1.00 a-sessment on each rented sitting to pay Diocesan dues.

Four 1½-inch iron rods have been placed east and west in the Parish building, securely bolted on the outside walls, and strengthened with pine timbers. This is intended to take the "thrust" of the roof, and is done according to the instructions of the Building Department. The appearance on the church side is not sightly, but it cannot be helped.

At Solemn Even-song hereafter the proper Office hymn will be sung. This gathers up the teaching of the day and carries out the spirit. The place will be just before the Psalms. At Vespers the Office hymn is sung before the Magnificat, but Even-song is modeled after the old Matins Office, where it comes before the Psalms, and so it is proper to follow that custom at Even-song.

Communicants in Good Standing.

(1). Those who make their Communions regularly, either in their own church, or, if elsewhere, who report to their own Clergy as to such communions.

(2). Those who attend Mass on all Sundays and Holy Days of Obligation, unless they are hindered by sickness or work over which they have no control. Pleasure or indifference or pique is no excuse.

(3). Those who give alms according to their ability for the support of the Church, its services and charities. Each is under obligation to make a definite pledge either by envelopes or pew rent. If unable, the reason should be made known to the clergy; unwillingness or disapproval is no sufficient excuse. Under ordinary conditions one-tenth of income is the rule; offerings are in addition.

All other persons, however self satisfied, are not in good standing, for they are neglecting solemn and serious responsibilities, disobedient to God's purpose for them.

The Missionary Council.

This consists of representatives from every Diocese and Missionary Jurisdiction, Clergy and lay, together with all the Bishops. It meets in the years when there is no general convention. The opening service will be in St. James' Church, Twenty-second and Walnut Streets, on Wednesday, October 22d, at 11 a. m. Meetings will be held at various places on the succeeding days.

The House of Bishops meets on the 23d, and an attempt will be made to straighten out the Mexican affair and, if possible, to remedy the blunders which heedless complacence as to that wretched business has caused the Church.

The following letter has been received, under date of August 14th, from China, acknowledging the wafer oven sent by St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S.:

"The oven, together with alcohol lamp and cutter, has just been received, and I have spent the morning opening the box and getting it in order. I write to thank you and the kind friends who were interested in sending it out. The need for such an oven out here has made itself known by the large number of orders I am constantly getting.

"Besides China, I send to six or seven clergymen in Japan. I started in a most crude way on a little old-fashioned iron some one had stored away in his luggage, but much time has been lost in the long, awkward process. I feel now like taking a new lease on life and really making a business of it. There is no reason why it cannot be made a source of income as well as supplying a long-felt want in many of our Churches in the interior. I have not half tried, and the whole thing has grown up of itself. Especially I thank the children for their part in it, and tell them how much we appreciate it. 'Tis a great improvement on my old kerosene tin fixed up for a charcoal stove on which I heated my iron."

Repairs.

In addition to the rods in Parish building, the upper Sacristy, the Choir and Acolytes rooms, as well as the corridor, have been calcimined and the floors varnished. Provision has been made for further light in St. John's Chapel and the Vestry room. The Welsbach burners on the inner side of the Sanctuary Arch have been renewed. Arrangements have been made to repair walls and ceiling of Vestry and Church corridor; also to paint the latter. Outside, the stone boundary wall will be put in good condition and a patent pavement laid on Twentieth Street. Mr. Sellers is also preparing a sketch for new oak doors for the Church opening on the south porch. This includes heavy outer doors with wrought iron hinges, etc. Also inner swing doors, with glass panels, to give as much light as possible. These, it is expected, will be in keeping with the dignity of God's House. It is thought sufficient money is on hand, or promised, to meet the expense of these various improvements—about $1000. These have all been necessary, as are various other things in connection with the property.

In addition to the above, repairs of various ornaments of the Church and Altar have been made.

Discipline and Cheerfulness.

"To God, Almighty and most Merciful, the God of bountiful goodness, our prayer is addressed. His Almighty power is shown in His ability to 'keep us from all things that may hurt us.' His goodness is shown in His willingness so to keep us. His mercy—there is something both retrospective and prospective in our appeal. We know we have failed so often, both in cheerful accomplishment of His Will and in readiness to avoid the things which we felt were hurtful to us. And our want of correspondence to the 'bountiful goodness' of God in the past makes our plea for mercy in the present and future the more urgent. Whatever may have been the case in the past, we feel as though now we could not do the things that we would. We throw ourselves upon the limitless mercy of our God, upon His goodness and upon His Almighty power. We had been thinking that our lives did not matter; that so long as we did not do any positive harm it was all right. What a revelation it is that the 'Almighty and most merciful God' has been thinking of us all the time; that we rest upon the Mind of God; that the success or failure of our lives depends upon our accomplishment of the things which God would have us do. We are so insignificant, and yet 'the very hairs of your head are all numbered.' God Himself has a design for the most insignificant of our lives: 'See thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the Mount.'

"Two things then we see—I. That for every life there is a rule—the Will of God. ii. That our duty consists in a ready and cheerful accomplishment of that Will.

"i. Consider the infinite peace of the soul which recognizes the Merciful Hand of God in directing the circumstances of life. Even the things which seem to hurt us are accepted as the loving discipline of Perfect Wisdom, and God uses the outward circumstances of life for the training of the spiritual being. Both 'body and soul' have to be surrendered to the Will of our Father in Heaven. Without discipline the life will bear no fruit.

"II. 'Cheerfulness is the very life and soul of all good works; no work is good which is not done in a spirit of alacrity and joy.' Such cheerfulness is the outcome of our perception of our true relationship to God. 'Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear: but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.' This cheerful alacrity is the characteristic of—(a) The King of Saints. 'Lo, I come to do Thy Will, O God.' (b) The Virgin Mother and the Saints. 'Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to Thy Word.' St. Paul—'Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?' St. Peter—'Arise up quickly . . . and he went out and followed Him.' (c) The Angelic Hosts. 'O praise the Lord, ye angels of His; ye that fulfil His Commandment, hearken unto the voice of His Word.' It must be the characteristic of those who are trying to follow the King of Saints in the royal road of the cross."—Preparatio. pp. 297–9.

St. Francis of Assisi.

In the latter part of the twelfth century (1181), St. Francis was born. He brought into life a new spirit, a new power, "a new seed." To put down the events of his life would not give us any true idea of St. Francis himself. We must read the numberless anecdotes, the words he spoke, the little actions of love and humility which he performed, as they are so exquisitely described for us. To race through these stories would only bewilder us; abbreviation conveys no idea. A new interest in his life has been awakened of late, and an interesting literature makes us understand the times, the nature of the great movement, its relations with events, its development, the extraordinary influence of the friars.

The stigmata is now accepted as a fact, and the stories of his influence on animals must have some real foundation. His was a pure, simple nature which, without any effort, finds an affinity with every creature of God, just because the Father made them both.

St. Francis was a Mystic, one who never strives for effect, or says or does what he does not feel. He simply behaves as the child of God, not by any effort of his own, but by a genuine surrender to the motion of the Spirit within him, crying, "Abba Father." Let us live as if this were true, as it is. This means, he says, utter poverty. I must forsake all that I have that I may be Christ's. It means a complete surrender of material wealth. It soon passed into something more glorious in the spiritual sphere. He prayed before his crucifix "that in all things I may act in accordance with Thy Holy Will." He was no mad fanatic, giving away his money and clothes like a dancing dervish. Such an opinion leaves out of sight the long nights spent in prayer, his wandering on the hills, his meditations in seclusion of retreats in caves and woods. His acts and conversation are the outward expression of a mind that by continuous communion with our Lord has learned a tremendous secret.

"Blessed are the poor," is the key of life for the simple child of God. Selfishness and covetousness hold down truth and obliterate God. None who desire more of things of this world really live, they suffocate the true life and shut out the air of God. Deceitfulness of riches chokes the word of God and makes it unfruitful. Poverty becomes his bride. Christ, who became poor, would lead all men to God in His way—all must deny themselves; forsake all. Francis, in his simplicity, accepted the astonishing invitation.

It never strikes him that this is a state of misery, it is a nuptial celebration, not a funeral. His idea of joy was to take God at His Word. It came from the heart; he even met death singing, not in the way of jest, but in a spirit like the joy of angels.

It was the happiness of a child in the Father's house; no reason to be sad there, he can trust Him. He has nothing to do but to play in His Presence and be ready at His bid and call. He wants everyone to be happy, to come and play. We, not God, brings the sadness. Throw it away. We have Christ, who is giving us life and joy and peace; is bringing us to the Father; is turning earth into Paradise. The Friars took care of lepers and repaired churches. "All Europe woke with a start," "leaped to follow in his footsteps." He was unique, few understood his holiness. He was an inspirer rather than a founder; it was the Papacy that developed and organized those who had been stirred by his teaching and spirit. This was not wrong, it was inevitable. (1) Anyone who would follow St. Francis must be prepared for absolute beggary and to kiss lepers; this was not likely to attract many. (2) He did not want his followers to have any rule; he had no genius for organization, but it was necessary, if they were to continue to exist. (3) He was away in distant places and spent much time in meditation and prayer. (4) All could not preach nor could all beg and live in huts, so it was regulation or collapse.

St. Francis inspired a great revival which dealt a blow at feudalism from which it never recovered, restored hope to tens of thousands in an age of religious and social despair, raised to life the dead body of the Church, so that it is impossible for us to suppose that the Spirit of God has ceased to move on the waters or the gates of hell shall ever prevail against God's city.

He is the saint of this modern time; he inspired a generation, a continent. The pursuit of riches, the worship of ease and comfort, the pride of life—if ever they did lead to the screening off of God from His children, then more than ever are they doing it now. If ever the heathen had cause to mock, "Where is now your God?" now, more than ever, where is God in our empire building—in our politics, in our trade—even in some of our religion?

If only a few could come together and live, believing poverty a blessing, not a curse. If only a few could trust God. We are slaves to conventionalities, poor as well as rich, bound hand and foot by fashion. O for a little of the enthusiasm of those first Friars who took God at His word.

We have a genius for killing enthusiasm. St. Francis and Brother Juniper would have had little chance with our Bishops. There are not many perhaps, but with a little encouragement from our self-complacent, statistic-loving, sublimely-contented Church some would be ready to preach Christ to the world after the manner of St. Francis.

"My little children," said St. Francis once, "great things have we promised unto God. Greater things hath God promised unto us. Let us keep what we have promised. Let us aspire to what He hath promised. Pleasure is short: punishment is eternal; suffering is small, glory is infinite; many are called: few are chosen; all are judged. Brothers, while we have time, let us do good unto all men."—Condensed from an address by Father Adderley, reported in Church Times.

The Organic Unity of the Church.

"St. Paul describes the unity of the Church as consisting in the relation of Christians to the one God, the one revealed faith, the one sacramental life, the one hope, and the indwelling of the one Spirit. This conception of Christian unity has never been altogether out of sight in the history of the Church, though at times and in places there has been a tendency to dwell chiefly on the visible unity of outward organization rather than on the invisible unity in which the members of the visible Church inhere in Christ. Thus in the writings of St. Cyprian, and, to some extent, in those of St. Augustine, and in a still higher degree, in much modern Roman Catholic theology, the most prominent aspect of the unity of the Church is that of external organization. But, while it is certainly true that such external and visible unity as is involved in the possession of the one sacramental life, the chief means of which are Holy Baptism and the Holy Eucharist, is necessary to the unity which is a 'note' of the Church, there have been many recognitions in quarters of unsuspected orthodoxy of the truth that the essential unity, without which the Church cannot be, is participation in the one life of Christ. In a well-known passage in his book, 'On the Trinity,' St. Hilary, of Poitiers, wrote: 'The apostle teaches that this unity of Christians results from the nature of the Sacraments, for he addressed the Galatians: "As many of you as have been baptized in Christ have put on Christ. There can be no Jew or Greek, there can be no slave or free, there can be no male or female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." That, in so great difference of race, position and sex, they are one, is this a result of the assent of the will or of the unity of the Sacrament, since to these there is one Baptism, and they are all clothed in the one Christ?'

"Similarly, to mention three great names in the West, widely separated in point of time, St. Augustine, St. Thomas Aquinas, and Pope Leo XIII, lay stress on the fact that the Church has essential unity by inhering in her Head, Christ. 'The Son of God,' wrote Leo XIII, 'decreed that the Church should be His mystical body, with which He should be united as the Head, after the manner of the human body which He assumed, to which the natural head is physiologically united.'

"To add to these western writers the teaching of the East at the present time, in the 'Longer Catechism of the Russian Church,' it is said, 'Why is the Church one?' 'Because she is one spiritual body, has one Head, Christ, and is animated by one Spirit of God.' 'There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all.' 'Are we still more expressly assured that Jesus Christ is the one only Head of the Church?' The Apostle Paul writes, that for the Church, as, 'The building of God, other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.' 'Wherefore the Church, as the body of Christ, can have no other head than Jesus Christ. The Church being to abide through all generations of time needs also an ever abiding Head; and such is Jesus Christ alone. Wherefore, also, the Apostles take no higher title than that of "Ministers of the Church."' 'What duty does the unity of the Church lay upon us.' 'That of endeavoring to keep the unity of of the Spirit in the bond of peace.' 'How does it agree with the unity of the Church that there are many separate and independent Churches, as those of Jerusalem, Antioch, Alexandria, Constantinople, Russia?' 'These are particular Churches, and parts of the one Catholic Church; the separateness of their visible organization does not hinder them from being all spiritually great members of the one body of the Universal Church, from having one Head, Christ, and one Spirit of faith and grace. This unity is expressed outwardly by unity of Creed and by Communion in Prayer and Sacraments.' 'Is there likewise unity between the Church on earth and the Church in Heaven?' 'Doubtless there is both by their common relation to one Head, our Lord Jesus Christ, and by mutual communion with one another.'"—Darwell Stone.

Parish Notes.

Bona Mors will be said each Monday after Even-song.

New ceiling and walls have been put in the Sacristy, and the floors varnished.

On All Souls' Day the Offerings will be for the fund for purchase of a burial lot.

The Masses on All Souls' Day, November 3d, will be at 7, 7.30, and at 9 o'clock Solemn Mass will be sung.

The cracks in the plaster of the corridor have been filled, the ceiling and walls painted and the floor varnished.

Upon the completion of the new building, the south door only of the Church will be open during the week.

In St. John's Chapel, the cracks in the walls and ceilings have been filled, new paper put on and the floor varnished.

Donations for Altar flowers during St. Clement's tide and Christmas tide may be put in the alms box marked for that purpose.

The rebuilding and pointing of the boundary wall of the property, and the pointing of a corner of the Church walls has been completed.

Sunday, November 2d, Even-song will be said at 5 o'clock, and at 8 o'clock Vespers of the Dead will be solemnly sung, followed by a sermon.

The numbers of the hymns to be sung at the various services during the month are printed for convenience. It is expected that this may be continued each month.

A patent asphalt pavement will be laid on the Twentieth Street front at a cost of $228 16. Over $500 more would be required to do the same on Cherry and Appletree Streets.

The lower windows on the north side of the Parish Building have been covered with galvanized iron screens to guard against broken windows and also annoyance from outside during Choir rehearsals.

The Rummage Sale will not be held until the early part of December. It is hoped that many donations may be sent in, as the demands on the Poor Fund promises to be very large during the coming winter.

During November a Requiem Mass will be said on each allowable day at 7.30 o'clock (consult Kalendar). Names to be mentioned should be written down and given to the Clergy at least the day before.

The Offerings on All Saints' Day will be placed at the disposal of the Corporation of All Saints Sisters of the Poor to assist in paying the interest on the mortgage of the Mission House. This amounts to $320 a year.

On All Souls' Day (Monday, November 3d), names of baptized persons intended to be read should be written down on the blanks and handed in before Sunday, stating at which Mass they are to mentioned, as they can be read out only at one Mass.

Attention is called to the bad treatment of Prayer Books and Hymn Books by the people who use them, as well as to the fact that many are carelessly or deliberately taken from the Church and never returned. Those who use the books would greatly help in their care by being particular to put them in the racks rather than on the seats. The mutilation by pencil or tearing out leaves is unpardonable.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who does govern all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplications, and grant unto this Parish all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare; schools in which to train the young in Thy faith and fear; ministers to labor in this portion of Thy vineyard; a Church restored to the beauty of holiness. Strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; rouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; bring all to be of one heart and one mind within the fold of Thy Holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. 8 P. M. (St. Andrew's Day transferred), Solemn Even-song.

Saint Clement's Day is the Feast of our Patron, the liturgical color is red, the introit, gradual, sequence, collect, epistle, gospel, together with antiphons and hymns, are of St. Clement. This is an entirely different feast from the Dedication Festival, which is the actual day of the consecration of the building. Saint Clement's was consecrated April 12, 1864, but this has never been specially observed. For some years the two facts were commemorated on November 23d, but this, besides being unauthorized, is confusing. Of late years we have practically been keeping the Dedication Festival on the Monday in the Octave, the First Vespers being solemnly sung, followed by Procession and Te Deum, and on the Monday a Requiem for departed Communicants and Benefactors, with one of the Parish gatherings, usually for the children, at night. This has proved a convenient, satisfactory arrangement, and, we believe, is quite proper.

In the earlier days white vestments were worn, because the Parish possessed no other complete set, and no change has been made. It seems only right, however, that this unusual custom should not continue. So this year the proper color, red, will be used. Eccentricities of ritual, liturgics and ceremonial are inexcusable and absurd, for any variation from ordinary custom a suitable reason should be had.

Saint Clement's Day this year occurs on Sunday. As may be seen, the opportunities for Communion, instruction, devotion and social entertainment have been arranged for. The Octave day being the first Sunday in Advent, no other feast may be observed on that day. The Octave is commemorated, and the observance of Saint Andrew is transferred to Monday, December 1st.

Communicants of the Parish should remember that a special duty and privilege is theirs for receiving Holy Communion during this season. This year we should have a large number availing themselves of spiritual opportunities. We have many blessings to be thankful for. We have much cause to seek God's help in the year to come.

The Offerings at all the Masses on St. Clement's Day will be for the Endowment Fund of the Parish, which amounts to $8202.24. Every member of the Congregation is asked to give generously.

The Offerings on Thanksgiving Day will be for the Poor Fund. This promises to be a very trying winter for the sick and distressed, and we can only aid as we have the means put in our hands.

Offerings are also asked on that day for the Episcopal Hospital. These should be placed in an envelope marked "Hospital."

Confessions will be heard on Friday and Saturday, and the hours may be learned on the Church notices.

The Procession of the Guilds belonging to the Sodality of St. Clement will take place on Sunday night, November 23d. Members and Associates are asked to take part as an act of honor to Almighty God. All should wear their medals. Women and girls will meet in the upper school room to put on their veils. Men and boys in St. John's Chapel. All should come not later than half-past seven o'clock.

Tickets for the Parish Tea (25 cents) may be had at the Mission House. Any surplus is placed to the credit of the Poor Fund.

Collect:

O God, who makest us to rejoice in the yearly solemnity of Blessed Clement, Thy Martyr and Bishop, favorably grant that we, who keep his festival, may likewise imitate his fortitude in suffering, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. Phil., iii, 17—iv, 4.
The Gospel. St. Matt., xxiv, 42-48.

The Parish Tea.

This is the one occasion in the year when all the members of the Congregation have an opportunity of meeting together, and it ought to take precedence of every other social engagement or amusement. One feature of the evening is a statement of Parish conditions and plans, and one ought not to manifest an indifference toward the Parish as a body that is anything but loyal.

Clergy House Extension.

It is hoped that the work may be finished some time this month, and a complete report of expenditures, in addition to contracts, will then be given.

The interior is being finished with all dispatch, though somewhat delayed through non-delivery of hardware.

The response for furnishing and replenishing has been very generous on the part of the few who have shown interest.

A study of the Building Fund, as given in the different numbers of the MAGAZINE, shows that one-half of the so-called members of the Parish have not given so much as a dime.

The Clergy are very grateful for the following donations for furnishing the new house:

The Misses Freeman—blankets.

Miss H.—bed spreads, sheets, pillow cases, bath towels.

$20 Anon. $200 Anon.

Miss Kates—tablecloths, napkins, towels, glass towels, down comfortables.

$25.00 from Mrs. G. E. Fryer.

Promises from various other persons of different articles.

The Altar Guild.

With the new beginning of work, Tuesday and Thursday mornings, it is proper to speak of the great work that the faithful members of the Guild are doing, not only for the Parish, but outside. The amount is only limited by the numbers of workers and their diligence. It is much to be desired that a larger number should devote themselves to the things that must be done, so many people refuse to do anything except what gives them prominence or what they like. They want special work. Such are of no use. A new set of Cottas for the Acolytes is needed, and it will be a favor if anyone who is willing to assist in the making of them would apply after the 9 30 Mass on Tuesdays or Thursdays.

"In the Hour of Death."

Death is the one event common to all men. It is important for every Christian to be informed how to prepare for it and meet it that no necessary preparation may be omitted or neglected. The following counsels are intended, by way of instruction, how to make a good death, that is, how to die in a state of grace; also, to state the rights of a sick person and the proper care of a dead body, as well as the duties owed to the departed soul: The "Parish Priest" has as much right at the bedside of a Christian man or woman, who is seriously ill, as the "family physician" or the "trained nurse." It is a very serious responsibility to risk the eternal loss of an immortal soul for a fancied danger to the patient. A physician or nurse exceeds the limit of their privilege when they forbid, and relatives assume a terrible responsibility when they acquiesce. To deny a Priest his right to minister and expect him to call and inquire at the door, on the footing of an ordinary acquaintance, or, like a messenger boy, is to be guilty of rudeness and discourtesy to the office which he bears, and is only prevented from being a gross insult by the fact that it is done through ignorance rather than intention. The soul needs to be made ready for death by Confession, Holy Communion and Holy Unction. To deny these is to rob it of the "powers of the world to come." There are temptations against which the holiest needs to be fortified. Grace and spiritual consolations are as needful as medicines, stimulants or nursing. During the "article of death," psalms, prayers and ejaculations should be frequently used, the soul committed to God when it has departed, prayer for its rest and peace should be immediately offered, rather than the outcry of a personal loss or selfish grief.

The use of any embalming fluid is advised against. A crucifix, with lighted candles, should be placed at the head of the dead body. Friends should kneel and pray for the soul when they enter the room rather than gaze foolishly with unreal sympathy upon the face. Request should be made that the prayers of the faithful at Mass each day be offered for the soul.

The most hideous mockery of all, perhaps, is the ordinary preparation for the grave. A man should never be dressed as if he were going to his office, or an afternoon tea, or theatre, or his marriage. Such clothes are inappropriate. A woman should not be clothed in opera dress, or walking costume, or a dinner gown. These are the garments of the world which has ceased to affect the person. They may be a suggestion that such an one has died "out of grace" and without hope. The body of a Christian should be wrapped in a winding sheet or a plain black gown, like a pilgrim's garb, without collars or cuffs, laces or ribbons. It is an insult to the dead that they should be artificially prepared by poison or dress to look "life-like." The seriousness of death and its awe should be the impression made upon all. Religious are buried in their habit, because that has been the outward sign that they are dead to the world, and the Clergy in their Vestments, because these are the tokens of the service of God. A crucifix should be placed in the hand.

The coffin should be of a simple pattern, not lined with silk or satin, but with linen or muslin. Flowers should not be arranged around the body; if they are used, they may be put on the floor or on a table at the head or foot. No elaborate metal handles or ornaments.

A wicker coffin and no outer box is preferable that the body may speedily return to earth. The burial, not in a vault, but in the ground, and without brick or stone covering.

The coffin should be closed before the service begins. Watch should be kept by friends day and night, not sitting around discussing imaginary virtues, but praying for the purging away of the remains of real faults. Vespers of the dead should be said on the night before burial, which ought to take place as soon after death as possible.

A Requiem Mass should be said on the day of burial, either early or in connection with the burial office, which should always be in the Church. Music is not necessary, and when arranged for, should be simple in character. The hymns should be serious and solemn, with suggestion of resurrection hope, not as though the soul had already attained the Beatific Vision.

Flowers should never be brought into the Church, except a very few, e. g., palms on the top of the coffin. All others should be sent from the house to the cemetery. It is very vulgar to exhibit them in Church.

The grave should be blessed and the body committed, some friends remaining to see that all is properly finished.

The monument should be after some Christian pattern.

The soul should be remembered at the Altar on the same date of the succeeding month and on the anniversary each succeeding year.

Catholics should make their wishes, as to sickness and burial, known to relatives, that they may not be deprived when they are no longer able to express themselves.

Persons should always expect to pay the organist and choir for a burial service.

"Called to Be Saints."

A common reflection will reveal how widely human beings differ. Time and space draw broad divisions.

The herdmen of the plains of Jordan and Canaan were probably different from the herdmen of the plains of New Mexico and Arizona, though a similarity may be noticed, too—the rising and subduing of evil passions.

A narrower range would embrace the contiguous shores of Africa and Italy in apostolic times.

Yet the contraction of view would lessen little or nothing the variety of scene.

If we confine observation to two individuals born of the same parents, we find the contrasts there that time and space develops to such conspicuous magnitude.

We are the material of which all the varieties of mankind are made, and the influences that have produced one or the other of them would have a tendency to make us the same.

This variety, limited by the bounds of humanity, and constitutional as the phases of the moon, is the property of God and of God's Church to mould into lives fit for the Kingdom of Heaven.

Christianity knows no effects of time and no influences of place. The great and the lowly, the poor and the rich, the wise and the unlearned are admitted to her privileges on equal terms. David was a king and Lazarus a beggar; St. Peter a fisherman and St. Augustine a philosopher; St. Barnabus was a landed proprietor and St. Matthew a revenue clerk.

All sorts and conditions of men have contributed to fill the role of saints, and they have done it without deserting their post or neglecting their duties.

If we think that poverty or servitude, horny hands or a black skin are inconsistent with high dignity, the Church thinks quite otherwise. St. Cyprian was a native African and Elisha a ploughman. If we think the pomp and circumstance of royalty or the application and heat of controversy unsuitable occupations for a saint, the Church thinks differently. St. Helen was the daughter of a king and the wife of an emperor and the mother of an emperor, and St. Athanasius defended the faith against the world.

The great Church of God makes saints in every land and of all time without disturbing the ranks and conditions of men into which God has disposed them. St. Etheldreda was a British queen and St. Ann a Hebrew matron. Abraham was a very rich man and Moses a famous lawyer, yet there is no sarcastic insinuation flung at their piety.

And as it was in the beginning so it is now and ever shall be to the end.

Our positions in life are probably sufficiently near the centre of the great stream to render them quite obscure. Be well assured that if ever we are to become saints it will be in that obscurity.

Our glorification will be accomplished by the grace of God and our own co-operation; and the grace of God does its work where we can best co-operate with it, and that is in our natural position.

The graces that will flourish best in our life are those that are native to the soil, and the fruits that are perfect are not those that are forced.

Parish Notes.

Over 550 names were sent in for All Souls' Day Masses.

The Mothers' Supper will be on Tuesday, December 30th.

Seven Thanksgiving dinners were furnished for poor families.

A surplus of about $50 from the Parish Tea was given to the Poor Fund.

The Christmas treat for the Catechisms will be on Monday, December 29th, at 2 and 8 P. M.

A special prayer of thanksgiving for the recovery of the Bishop was used on the first Sunday in November.

The Offerings on All Souls' Day were for Burial Lot Fund and amounted to $25.70; this Fund now is $541.88.

Mr. S. H. Bateman has been appointed usher of the middle aisle, Mr. Nixon having been unwell for some time past.

The subscriptions and donations for the house at Sea Isle City covered the cost of repairs as well as expense of maintenance.

The Sisters ask, as in former years, for generous donations to provide Christmas dinners for the worthy poor and also for the Mothers' Supper.

On the Sunday nights in Advent, after the first, the Litany will be sung in procession; this is the proper manner. The Congregation stands during the procession and only kneels when the Choir kneels.

The delay in the finishing of the new building still continues. Some of the hardware has come; there is still some of the interior woodwork that has not been delivered. It is impossible to say when the building will be ready.

The Right Rev. the Bishop Co-adjutor made a tour of the churches in the Northwest Convocation on Thursday afternoon, November 13th. He was received, upon his arrival at St. Clement's, by the Clergy of the Parish. He inspected the Church, Parish Building and went over the new house.

Every Christian should make their Communion at Christmas, if possible, on the day itself, carefully preparing for a worthy Communion by self-examination, contrition and Sacramental Confession. Then, indeed, may each one feel that He Who of old time was born of Mary will be again born in their purified souls.

A very beautiful piece of hand-made lace has been given by Mrs. Mowry, in memory of Hiram and Sarah Mann, for St. Katharine's Altar. The design is a vine with leaves and bunches of grapes, the centre is St. Katharine's wheel, with palms on each side and surmounted by a crown. It is a labor of love and has been the work of three years.

The Offerings on All Saints' Day were for the interest on the Mission House Mortgage ($320); they amounted to $126.18. This amount, with $50 promised by the Vestry half-yearly, was sent to Mr. John Douglass Brown, Jr., the Treasurer of the Corporation. A check for $50, received in addition to the above, was given to the Sister in Charge and will be used for some needed repairs.

Rummage Sale.

A sale for the benefit of the Poor Fund will be held in the Parish Building on Tuesday, December 9th, and Wednesday, December 10th, afternoon and evening. Articles of all kinds will be gladly received—partly worn clothing, shoes, household articles of all kinds.

Saint Clement's Tide.

It is not ordinary joy that the Bishop of the Diocese thinks that "it is entirely safe to begin work," and we are glad that his yearly greeting to the Parish is the first one of those that are our annual encouragement. He writes: "It is my hope that the observance of the day may be fruitful in spiritual blessings to you and your people." The Bishop also graciously approved the use of the Collect, Epistle and Gospel.

Devout "followers," after proper preparation, came and received Christ the Lord, at the early Masses; at the Solemn Mass a large number of friends of the Parish assisted. F. Sargent preached (St. Jude 20, 21) on the loyalty to the Faith, willingness to suffer, and love of Jesus, which must characterize the martyr, showing how St. Clement's has always borne witness to these, taking its share in the wonderful spiritual force of the Catholic Revival which has reached all countries and awakened the devout spirit.

At night the Procession of the Guilds of the Sodality was a solemn stately march of those whose love and enthusiasm was not afraid or ashamed to bear witness to the power of the Truth and their devotion to their Lord, even although they might shrink from the necessity, in all times the faithful have been called upon to testify publicly as to their position and choice. F. Sargent again preached.

277 Communions and over five hundred and fifty dollars for the Endowment Fund testify to the underlying devotion of our people.

The Choir, under Mr. Sear's faithful training, sang Gounod's Troisienne Masse Solennelle, No. III, in the morning, and at night, Smart's Magnificat in E flat and Warwick Jordan's Te Deum in C.

The entertainment for the children of the Parish took place on Monday evening, November 24th, and was a very enjoyable occasion. A comedy called "Murder Will Out" was given by some of the girls—Misses Virginia Finney, Catharine Gibison, Bella Hepburn, Theresa Mullen, Lizzie Renard and Sadie Brown taking part. It was very well done and aroused much laughter. Then Miss Savidge, who had kindly come in to sing, gave several entertaining songs, Mr. Sears playing the accompaniments, and the children, by request, joining in the chorus of the last one. The music was followed by a drill, in which Misses Emma and Bessie Barraclough, Lillie Johnson, Ethel Mullen, Bella Hepburn, Virginia Finney, Catharine Gibison and Lizzie Renard took part. The girls were dressed in reversed costumes, and the grotesque false faces and unexpected gestures were very amusing. All those present seemed to enjoy the evening thoroughly, and many words of appreciation were heard for the girls and the music.

The Parish Tea on Tuesday night was very well attended in spite of the weather, some few outside friends, Revs. H. P. Dyer and A. Hess among them. Mr. Brinton and Miss Fryer kindly sang and our friends from the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind gave instrumental music. Rev. R. H. Paine, of Mount Cavalry, Baltimore, an old and valued friend, and Rev. A. Goldring, of Paget, Bermuda, made addresses. A loyal and devoted spirit has pervaded the whole festival and once more gave evidence that those who "rejoice in the yearly solemnity of Blessed Clement" are true to their traditions and customs.

May our Lord Christ ever protect and guide His faithful ones, and may our Patron, St. Clement, ever aid us by his prayers.

Missionary Box for China.

It is planned to prepare and send a box to China this year. The Altar Society have promised to make a set of vestments of white silk, Chasuble, Stole, Maniple, Chalice, veil and burse. The cost of the silk has been promised. It may be, later on, we can supply all—amice, girdle, purificators, corporal. St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., will provide silver Chalice and paten, and, it is hoped, Cruets, Wafer Box, etc., and, as far as possible, all things needful for proper celebration of the Mass. Some old silver has been promised and $10 toward further cost of sacred vessels. Contributions of money for this box are asked from members of the Parish. Further particulars will be published as soon as arranged.

St. Ignatius, New York.

The new Church, situated at West End Avenue and Eighty-seventh Street, was dedicated on Sunday, October 19th. It is a handsome building and worthy of the skill of the architect, Mr. C. C. Haight.

Rev. Arthur Ritchie, the Rector, was one of that zealous and enthusiastic band of young men who did so much for St. Clement's in those earlier days. His work at St. Ignatius has been of wonderful spiritual force and depth, and every Catholic owes him a debt of gratitude for his persevering and unflinching witness to all that we hold dear. In this new and greater sphere of usefulness we desire not simply to testify to what is apparent to all, but also to wish him God speed.

Orders.

Materials for set of Altar linen and 1 surplice. Value, $11.00.

Work Stamped.

1 chasuble, 7 stoles, 3 maniples, 6 burses and veils, 1 super-frontal, 1 pulpit fall, 4 sets book markers, 2 sets orphreys, 2 ornaments, 1 fair linen, 4 corporals, 1 amice, 1 palla—34 pieces. Value, $30.30.

The Guild is making a set of Eucharistic vestments, chasuble, amice, stole, maniple, burse and veil for the Bishop of Delaware. Several members have been working on them during the summer, and it is hoped that they will be finished for Christmas.

As their missionary work for this year the Guild has promised, at the suggestion of the Chaplain, a set of white Eucharistic vestments for the Missionary Bishop of Hankow for use in his jurisdiction. A number of other gifts have been promised, and there are several orders.

The Committee of Management again desire to remind the members of the Parish that the care of the vestments has been given to the Altar Guild, and they cannot keep them in repair, and furnish new ones when needed, without financial aid. It has also been necessary to import a quantity of silk from England, as it is impossible to buy the proper colors in this country, except in very expensive silks. This will empty the treasury at present, although it will eventually save a great deal of money.

Contributions to the Vestment Fund, no matter how small, will be most acceptable and may be given to the Rector or to the Treasurer of the Guild.

The Incarnation.

Christianity is supposed to have something to do with civilization. Where the former is there is always the latter. The propagation of the Gospel dispels barbarism. That it is the pioneer in this work and institutes and sustains civilization might be allowed to pass without dispute by Christians. Thus the missionary becomes a benefactor to all around, benefiting the savage first and directly and all others indirectly—since the barbarian is an undesirable neighbor, as might be illustrated by certain differences arising within the memory of living men, in Asia, Africa and America.

This is not particularly lucid to us. If civilization is the effect of Christianity it cannot possibly precede it. If civilization depends upon Christianity it could not continue without it. Neither of which conclusions is true.

This limits the civilizing work of Christianity to the present operation of converting the savage, which is a limitation of some extremity, considering how small the fraction is that represents the proportion of savages in process of conversion to the whole number under Christian influence.

It appears to us, unless we are prepared to believe, persons who repudiate Christianity sink into barbarism, that the civilizing work of Christianity is not worth considering.

Our idea of civilization is something different, quite. It is the creation of the social instinct inherent in human nature; an instinct which is a distinct endowment of the mind, having its own function and not confused with any other. It may be vitiated or paralyzed; a man would still be a man if it were. Its operation precedes that of reason. On the satisfaction of this instinct society exists and its future development proceeds, the principle of its adhesion being, do to others as you would have others do to you. It supposes the same instinct in others.

Whatever may be the attainments of a community, generation or nation, they are the result of the operation of this power. Producing civilization it produces the conditions which alone render human attainments possible.

It creates the sphere of all mental activity. Whatever perfection humanity may arrive at, that perfection is not the result of enlarged mental capacity, but of the superior external conditions under which that activity was permitted to operate—and that is civilization, and that is the dominion of the social instinct.

Civilization is accomplished without Christianity because it is generated from an operation that Christianity is not the author of. It reached its most brilliant perfection before Christianity came into the world. Its pursuits have led some into positions of fancied opposition to Christianity and they have declared their hostility accordingly. But it is a desirable state. Everyone is concerned in its universal spread because it is the accomplishment of the design of God. When man was made he was made a social being—made in the image of God. And God is not a solitary Person. It is not the work of Christianity, but of an instinct as old as human creation. It is not the work of man but of God, who made man social in the beginning. It is not an accidental ornament but an essential constituent. If a man could be found without it he would be incapable of civilization. He might become a domesticated animal but not a civilized man. It is an entity capable of attaining the end of its creation. It has no element in it now that was not in it in the beginning. It is constituent in human nature not applied. Its sphere of action is as wide as the world, and its object is the attainment of worldly perfection. Its value is that it is the ground on which Christianity does its work—if she does not find the ground prepared for her she has to prepare it for herself. When civilization has done its best work is the time when Christianity begins, and that is when she did begin—in the days of Augustus.

Christianity is so immeasurably above civilization that it seems incredible anyone could confuse them. Their relative positions are so important that they cannot be ignored without disregarding the common truth that the general mind has to be prepared by the general circumstances of the age for great changes. And the work of Christ and his apostles would remain an enigma.

When civilization had consummated its work and the world was brought to the height of its glory it was prepared, as it never was before, and never has been since, for the greatest that it was ever to undergo here or hereafter. That change was that man was to be divine in the mystery of a Sacrament. Not that he was to be reformed, but reintegrated. Not that he was to become a better creature, but a new creature. But great and incomprehensible as the change was, man was prepared for it as well as he could be, because the structural principles of civilization are the same with those of Christianity. They are both ordained for the race, not for a part. They both cover the whole of human life, beginning before reason begins. They are both a possession of right, not a possession of favor. The working principles are the same. In one the bond of perfection is, do to others as you would have others do to you, and in the other it is charity.

The Clergy House.

On Monday evening, February 9th, quite a number of the Congregation came to the Clergy House that they might extend their good wishes to their Clergy. Many who were not able to come, with Christian courtesy, sent cordial greeting or regrets for their absence. We are afraid that some did not understand the notice in the MAGAZINE—we are sorry; while others had reasons, no doubt, sufficient in themselves and satisfactory, for not coming—the Clergy regret that they could not have had their greeting. Some few "friends of the Parish" were kind enough to come, and the Rev. Robert H. Paine, of Baltimore, was again our honored guest. The life in the new house has about settled down to ordinary routine, and experience only confirms the original expectation that the building is in every way an ornament to the property and admirably adapted to its use and purpose. The final accounts will not be printed until the various bills are paid and the things which are not yet in place, such as the filter, shades, pavement, are completed. The money for all these is in hand, so that a work of such importance and cost is added to the Parish property free of all incumbrance and complete in all its appointments. It is only fitting to call attention to the generous act of Mr. Sellers, who only accepts a commission on the amount of the original contracts and makes an absolute gift of the plans for alteration, extras, furniture, Church doors, Parish Building plans, together with his own personal supervision. Mr. Riggs, the contractor, has also treated us in very generous fashion, making no extra charge for the alterations in plans, and also in several matters where the contract did not require it, giving us the advantage of better work and material, as well as giving that attention to the whole work which has resulted in our possessing an edifice of the highest class; his foreman, Mr. McDonald, taking that special care in everything that made it almost impossible for any mistakes to be made; while the cheerful courtesy of all the persons concerned in the prompt attention to the little deficiencies that have shown themselves has left us no cause for any complaint.

Rules for Lent.

Fasting.—Abstain from flesh meat on Wednesdays and Fridays; also on Ember Saturday and Easter Eve; on other weekdays eat it only at principal meal. Be simple as to quality of food; abstain from places of amusement and other pleasures.

Prayer.—Hear Mass, if possible, every day; if unable, visit the Blessed Sacrament or make act of Spiritual Communion each day. Receive Holy Communion at least each Sunday. Make Confessions more frequently. Be more fervent in private prayers and self-examination. Make regular meditation. Read some spiritual book or book of instruction. Use Intercessions for Conversion of Sinners, perseverance of the faithful, repose of the souls of the dead.

Alms Giving.—Give one-tenth of your income; promise some definite sum for Church expenses and charity. Make a personal rule, write it down and offer it to God for His Honor and your soul's welfare. Live in charity with all.

Each one should cultivate some special virtue that belongs to Christian life and character, such as humility, gentleness, patience, kindness.

Books for Reading.

A list of books suitable for reading in Lent may prove useful:

Canon Knox-Little's "Manual for Lent;" "Treasury of Meditation."

"Preparation, Notes on Preparation for Holy Communion;" preface by F. Congreve.

Rev. S. S. Coles' "Lenten Meditations."

Rev. A. Ritchie's "Spiritual Studies on St. Matthew's and St. John's Gospels."

The volumes of the "Oxford Library of Practical Theology."

Rev. Darwell Stone's "Outlines of Christian Dogma."

Parish Notes.

The telephone number is again changed; it is now 1–41–94 A.

Week-day services, until further notice, will be in St. John's Chapel.

The Office of the Guild of St. Mary is postponed to Monday, March 9th.

Mr. Sears' organ recital on February 14th was very well attended and much enjoyed by all.

The Office of the Guild of the Holy Cross will be omitted this month on account of the retreat.

Spohr's "Calvary" will be sung in the Church on Wednesday evening, April 1st, at 8 o'clock.

Subscriptions and donations for Easter flowers may be enclosed in marked envelope or sent to the Misses Arnold.

The Anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Emily Robins, a benefactor, was said on Monday, February 9th.

The gate on Appletree Street and the south door of the Church are open on weekdays; also for Confessions on Saturday nights.

The Bishop of Fond du Lac sends a copy of Fond du Lac Tracts No. 3 entitled "Catholicity and the Vincentian Rule," some parts of which will be found useful.

Generous alms are needed that the current year's accounts may be closed with all bills and salaries paid; the wet weather during the winter has left a large deficiency in the ordinary offerings.

Several of the Church windows on the Cherry Street side have been broken lately. It is a point of view essentially papal that finds merit in such wanton destruction of Church property.

The books of the Accounting Warden are closed on March 24th. It is very important that all delayed pew rents and envelopes shall be paid before that date in order that he may settle all bills.

The cost of replacing one pillar of the south porch will be $80, but it is necessary. New storm doors at the north entrance will also be put in place now. Donations toward the cost of these improvements will be acceptable.

List of Communicants.

After Easter the Parish list is revised. The names of all those who are not known to have made their Communions at least once during the year are taken off the list of Communicants in good standing, not to be restored until they have again fulfilled their Christian duty. They are to all purposes suspended, and cannot be given letters of transfer; in case of removal, they can only obtain a record of Confirmation or previous standing as Communicants. Those who for any reason have made their Communions in some other Church should take pains to inform the Clergy in writing of that fact.

Parish Support and Other Claims.

In order that the Church may be lighted, warmed, cleaned and kept in repair, money is needed; certain charities have to be maintained, obligations to the Diocese met; something is also needed for the support of the clergy. The duty rests upon the members of the congregation. The means should be as regularly and generously provided as circumstances permit. Everyone should give a definite amount; as a matter of fact, many do not do this; not only do they shirk their proper share, but they do what amounts to nothing at all. It is no wonder their prayers are unanswered and the love of God lost.

Lady Day, March 25th, is the beginning of another Parish year; not only is it desirable that those who have been faithful in the past should continue so, but also that many others should realize their shortcomings and behave in an honest and honorable manner.

Envelopes will be sent to all who are not in arrears, and will also be supplied to any others who request such supply. A parish like St. Clement's, which is maintaining such large and necessary interests, unaided by those who have an equal duty, is not under any particular obligation to give to exotic works. Under the Board of Missions where the religious part is the least important of the things done, the true worship of Almighty God is a kind of afterthought. Yet it is often an encouragement to some heroic priest who, because he teaches and practices only the worship of God, is unaided by the board when his work is unexpectedly aided. It is a little absurd also for a Committee of Sustentation Fund to ask our congregation to aid in giving a salary of $1000 a year to some clergyman who confines his work to a couple of Sunday services and voting right at conventions, when the amount appropriated for the support of the parish clergy does not nearly reach that amount, and the work done is considerably in excess of ordinary Sunday duty. It is rather a yoke for priests who have been faithful to the Church's canonical rule and practice to be berated and abused for not being enthusiastic about the support of "widows and orphans" whose existence is due to the selfish and wrong-headed perversity of those who have refused to submit themselves to proper ecclesiastical discipline. It is hardly just to ask those who believe that the Prayer Book standard of Sunday and Holy Day Mass is obligatory to be required to assist in maintaining some so-called mission stations whose only approach to religion is the International system of Sunday School lessons and the building up of a Society of Christian Endeavour. It is somewhat difficult to understand why a few favored, hence acceptable to a coterie of respectable gentlemen in New York, should be supported by a tax called "Apportionment Plan." The efforts do not seem to inspire respect, for the frantic appeals for more money are incessant. The character of the work acceptable to this committee may be judged by the information given in the Spirit of Missions about the various points, some of which is sufficient to make any Christian person blush for shame, that at the demand of a few wealthy men such unnecessary outlay of funds should be tolerated.

To return to ourselves, the most important extra parochial claim upon us is the support of the Mission House of the All Saints' Sisters where the example of the dedicated life is a witness against wealth, worldliness, selfishness—a place where those who are so minded may find some spiritual rest, quiet and refreshment. This is an advantage for all, even though the support falls upon us alone. As an outgrowth of this, the house at Sea Isle City for the women and children demands our interest and support. The spiritual privileges are not forgotten in the material benefit; Mass is said daily during the summer months. Other places and parishes where the Catholic religion is practiced have a claim upon us superior to many highly favored and approved works whose usefulness is mainly that no one is taught anything definite or objectionable. This position, while right, true and just, necessarily exposes us to attack and criticism; but we must submit to this, for it is part of the witness for truth that we should expect to be evil spoken of.

Do not, under any circumstances, give your money or efforts for any unworthy cause.

Concerning the Law of Fasting.

It is only with the law of fasting that we are concerned. Fasting in itself is neither here nor there. It is not an act of Christianity any more than marriage is. Probably everybody in the world fasts; probably every people and every generation of past time has fasted. It antedates the Ten Commandments by thousands of years. It is found in the laws of all religions and nations from China to Yucatan. In Britain it was taught by one religion that was extinct before the Christian era and by another that arose in the seventeenth century. In this immense period it seems to have lost nothing in estimation, for the Presbyterians place fasting along with the due administration and worthy receiving of the sacraments instituted by Christ. That which was universally practiced before Christianity was known, and has continued universal since, cannot owe any of its virtue to Christianity. It is simply a usage of mankind and is of no interest to us beyond an item of history.

But fasting in obedience to law is another story. Law includes the notion of penalty. Disobedience is a demerit. Fasting means something when its neglect becomes an offense.

That a public law of fasting has been in full operation in the Christian religion from the beginning, and for the greater part of the time was administered by the civil authority, and that Christ drew a sharp distinction between obedience to his law and the worthlessness of fasting not subject to it, even though it seems to have been of considerable severity, no one will dispute.

Law accompanies a nation and develops as a nation develops. In the unsettled tribe individual command is the only law. As life becomes settled and the various arrangements assume constancy, law appears more definite. Its history will at any time present the variations representing the changes through which the nation passed and the uniformity of its operation certifying the perpetuity of its obligation. This is the law that regulates fasting as it has regulated sacrifice. No one would suppose a heathen or Jewish sacrifice an act of Christian worship at all; neither could their fasting be. We might fast to starvation; ignoring the law, it would do us no good, for without law neglect of fasting would not be wrong.

History sustains the necessity of the law: sacrifice without the law of God, in one era in Britain, came to offering human victims; in another age fasting was reckoned along with sacraments. In both cases the extreme would seem to have been reached. The necessity of the law involves obedience and penalty.

Notwithstanding the extraordinary rigidity of the Presbyterians in this matter and their acknowledged influence, we are inclined to think their teaching has lost some of its vigor, and the result must be discouraging; that the high standard, which we take to be the most exalted of all Christian bodies repudiating Catholic authority, is not generally reached; that fasting is infrequent at best, and not seldom entirely unknown.

This is the most natural result. If the law of fasting be not organic but contributive, not permanent but optional, not binding under pain of sin, it will be obeyed or not according to the good pleasure of each individual. It will be a utilitarian measure, and original law is not the doctrine of utility. The law of nations was not derived from the Epicureans, but the Stoics. It will be obeyed as the law of marriage is obeyed: where the law of marriage is not the law of God, but of man, the natural result is that each individual observes it as it suits his purpose. We may instance societies outside the Church where Christian marriage has been enforced with all the human power that could be commanded, but with results as indifferent as in the matter of fasting. If God be not offended when a man puts away his wife and marries another, whose business is it but that of the persons concerned? It is all a matter of social and political economy. Divorce and polygamy should seem the most natural and reasonable. It is a high compliment a man pays to his reason when he rejects as an insult the arbitrary imposition of being tied to one wife or fasting on Friday. We do not see what possible scruple anyone could have about divorce and concubinage who has none about breaking the fasts.

Still, they have scruples. They abhor the manners of the wicked. Many who are far from not sinning give their voice against it. Multitudes are protesting against divorce; the same multitudes, generally, who are protesting against drunkenness. And they will continue to protest, because they are the multitudes on which Jesus Christ has compassion as he had in the days of his mortal life. They may defy the laws of God and in the vanity of their mind set up others of their own, but the time comes when they can proceed no further, for their folly is manifest to all men. They know things are wrong without knowing why; they hate the wrong, but are powerless to remove it. Divorce and drunkenness go on in bold defiance, while education and every natural virtue is appealed to in vain.

When man returns to God and submits himself to His laws—of which the law of fasting is one—that he has despised, he will become a worker together with Him who alone can re-establish the order that has been confused, the order for which the human heart, stamped with the image of God longs, longs for the holiness which was his when that law was given, the law that was given to keep him holy, the law that nothing in heaven or earth can resist, and obeying which man becomes God's instrument for good; can use those concurrent forces of education or other natural powers, and his action will be in harmony with nature and grace, will be as gentle, as silent, as irresistible as the rising sun.

Ancient Penitential Discipline.

From the beginning of the Christian Church, a fast was always observed before the Feast of the Resurrection. By the fourth century, at least, this had been settled into the fixed season of Lent, and was especially observed as a time for preparing candidates for baptism, and penitents for absolution. It appears that on Ash Wednesday all penitents—whatever time their penance was imposed, and penances were imposed at all times—appeared and shared in the general humiliation. On Maundy Thursday, those whose penances had been performed were admitted to absolution.

The regulations of the early Church for sin and sinners are calculated to startle twentieth century Christians. They show that in those days there was an appreciation of the awfulness of sin far deeper than exists to-day. This awfulness lay chiefly in the fact that sin separated the sinner from God. Since this was the real and spiritual result of sin, the Church promptly ceased giving the sinner God's blessings. What sin did to the sinner secretly and in the sight of God the Church did openly and in the sight of men. And when once a person was debarred from communion for gross sin the process of restoration was long and painful, attended by real deprivation and genuine humiliation; and an excommunication was an actual thing, published throughout all the Church. The penitential system was most rigorous when the Church was in the greatest danger from fierce persecution. At this period, idolatry, murder and impurity were sins which could not be absolved. If the sinner repented, made his public confession and humiliation, he would be commended to the mercy of God, but never again allowed to receive the Holy Communion. Later, in times of less stress, this rigor was mitigated.

[Penances for these sins lasted from five to thirty years, and others were in proportion. A detected thief did two years' penance; a girl who married without her parents' consent, three years; and false witnesses, five years. Persons with confirmed habits of profanity and children who forsook their parents under the pretext of religion were liable to excommunication. Men and women, rich and poor, were alike subject to discipline. Children under age and clergy in minor orders were not excommunicated because corporeal punishment was the accepted way to deal with them. St. Augustine tells us that not only schoolmasters and parents, but bishops in their consistories, used forty stripes save one as a corrective.]

A person desiring to be admitted a penitent had to present himself or herself, unwashed, fasting, clothed in sackcloth, with ashes upon the head, and make usually an open and public confession of the sins. In addition to the public confession, a preliminary private confession also was often required; and lesser sins were privately confessed where no public confession was demanded. Penitentiary priests were especially appointed for the precise purpose of hearing confessions and preparing penitents to receive absolution from the bishop. During the term of penance, penitents had to cut off their hair, go veiled, abstain from feasting and other innocent diversions, refrain from marriage, observe all public fasts, show great liberality to the poor, and serve the Church in burying the dead. [These penitents were divided into four classes, flentes or mourners, audientes or hearers, genuflectentes or kneelers, and consistentes or co-standers. The mourners had their place in the church porch, where they prostrated themselves and implored the prayers of the passers-by. The hearers were allowed to stand in lowest part of the church, hear the Scriptures read and the sermon preached, but were not allowed to stay for any of the prayers. The kneelers were allowed to kneel in the nave, hear themselves prayed for and receive the bishop's blessing by the laying on of his hands. The co-standers might remain throughout the mass, but could not share in the oblation or in the communion.] When the penance was completed, the penitent, still clothed in sackcloth, was publicly received by the bishop at the altar or still more publicly at the reading desk.

One remarkable thing which attracts attention in the records of those early years is this: that this penitential system was not merely an ideal; it was an actuality, and there are recorded cases in which it was strictly carried out. Such considerations may at least stir one thought in the mind—that sins to-day are not less sinful because punishment is less severe. A soul in mortal sin in the year 1903 is exactly as sinful as a similar soul in the year 250, and deserves a similar discipline. The fact that the Church now deals with such a soul with the utmost leniency, instead of the utmost severity, does not alter the nature of sin. We can learn something of that nature by studying ancient severity, although no system on earth could ever adequately represent the awfulness of that which separates a soul from God. Faithful Christians should be stirred by the Church's leniency to deeper penitence and more profound gratitude, instead of concealing their sins, and either partially or entirely rejecting the Church's penitential system.

The Priesthood.

Speaking of the Clergy of St. Alban's, Holborn, Mr. Russell says:

"Their lives may be expressed in three words—Sacerdotium est sacrificium. Men of good position, of private fortune, of university education, of abilities certainly not below the average—in some respects, which conduce to professional success, conspicuously above it—they gave to the work of the Church and the service of the poor, health, means, ease, comfort, the countenance of their ecclesiastical superiors and all hope of preferment. They made the surrender, not in a sudden gust of soon-repented enthusiasm, but by a deliberate and sustained act of calculated sacrifice. And the sacrifice was not more deliberate than complete. In youth and middle age and advancing years, at morning, at noon, at night, in summer and winter, in sickness and in health, in workdays and holiday time, in popularity and in persecution, these men gave themselves, body and mind and soul, to the work which they had undertaken."

It is a noble and deserved tribute, but they did it as a matter of course. No priest is true to his vocation who does not live in the same spirit of sacrifice. It matters not whether he is rector of a wealthy parish with an exorbitant salary or the curate of a struggling mission striving for a better-paying job, or a missionary hired and paid by a foreign board, if sacrifice is lacking, there is no fruit of his labors. It is a rare and unappreciated trait.

The ordinary parish vestry "fixes" the salary of the rector they call as the most important inducement for him to accept. They are right; it is ordinarily the controlling influence. The convention, before they elect a bishop, fixes his salary, for they are sure that otherwise they cannot get the man they want. It is all wrong and the Church can never do its work until it is changed, and instead of increasing the salaries of the clergy, they should all, bishops as well, be brought down to the lowest limit, then unworthy "worldlings" who listen to the counsel of "respectable" laymen with money will be crowded out, and sacrifice will be the test of effort. This ideal should be held up to candidates; it cannot be, of course, by bishops, who themselves do not honor it, or by professors, whose only acquaintance with it is through earnest effort to avoid it and render its experience impossible. Most of our leading clergy, apparently, have never made one act of deliberate and sustained sacrifice for the cause of the Master, and they set the pace for those who are looking forward to Holy Orders.

All Saints School, Germantown, under the care of the All Saints Sisters; a thoroughly good Church school—college preparatory—for girls. Is strongly recommended by the Clergy and others. Terms, $300 to $400 a year.

Passiontide.

Again we are to keep the Passion with Our Blessed Lord, following the event of His Holy Sufferings, that we may learn to suffer with Him. Christians trust only in the Precious Blood of the Son of God; they know no other or newer gospel and they look to Him to be saved.

There are some people who deny the necessity of His Death, who treat sin as an episode in life and see no need for repentance; such, in a very real way openly crucify the Son of God afresh and put Him to an open shame. They are more guilty than the people of Jerusalem, for these living people know what they are doing. The false judgment of Pilate and the treachery of Judas Iscariot are mild in comparison with the words and deeds of those who now scorn the Virgin Born and deny the Only Saviour. In such condition of affairs it is the duty of all who love and believe in Him to bear their witness bravely.

Good Friday Dispensation.

The Bishop of the Diocese, under date of March 4th, writes in reply to a request to permit some food and coffee to be taken in the morning: "I entirely approve the relaxation of the strict fast of Good Friday in accordance with the specifications which you named in your letter of the 2d."

Lenten Retreats.

The addresses on Ash Wednesday were very well attended and many seemed to be making the retreat with spiritual profit.

The Outer Sisters' retreat at the Mission House was made by over thirty. Rev. S. C. Hughson, O.H.C., was the conductor.

Fifty-four persons made the retreat on Sunday, March 8th, at the Mission House. Rev. E. N. Webber gave the addresses.

The retreat for men took place on Mid-Lent Sunday (March 22d).

The retreat for the members of the Guild of St. Mary will take place on Thursday in Passion Week (April 2d).

The Guild of St. Vincent will make their annual retreat on Passion Sunday.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed the evening of June 5th (being Friday in Whitsun Octave) for Confirmation at St. Clements.

Sponsors and parents are reminded of the solemn obligation resting upon them to take care that the baptized children shall be brought to the Bishop for this Sacrament as soon as such children come to years of discretion, i. e., know good from evil. Care should be taken and trouble should not be avoided that this duty be fulfilled. Names of such children and adults who have never received the Sacrament may be given to the Clergy or Sisters. Instructions will begin immediately after Easter.

Herman G. Batterson, Priest.

The interest of the Parish in Dr. Batterson arises from the fact that he was Rector of St. Clement's, March, 1869, to April, 1872. It was his brave stand for Catholic privileges that first made St. Clement's the pioneer for the true inheritance of the Church and the rallying point for Christians; ably assisted by that loyal band of devoted men of whom Father Sword told us at St. Clement's tide, 1900 (the Guild of the Holy Cross) the true faith was here taught and practiced and the consequences accepted. May God's peace dwell in his soul!

Clergy House, Twentieth and Appletree Streets.
Bell Telephone 1-41-94 A.

All Saints Mission House, Cherry and Lambert Sts.

Pew rents are due in advance, April 18th. Checks payable to St. Clement's Church may be sent by mail; renters may also pay at the vestry room, Monday, April 6th, 2 to 4 P. M.

The week-day services were transferred to the church on March 16 and immediately a better attendance was observed. Many who are not parishioners have been coming quite regularly.

The offerings on January 19th for mission work in the Diocese amounted to $69.55 and has been divided between St. Elizabeth's Church (building fund), and Church of St. John Chrysostom (current expenses).

A member of the congregation has arranged to have the South Garden made ready; this includes the trimming of trees, shrubs, etc., the sodding of space in front of new house, and planting of some hydrangea bushes, also shade trees along Appletree Street.

Persons who wish to see any of the clergy in the church will find an electrical connection direct to each study. On the right side of the middle door of the church will be found a plate with push buttons; the name is over each one, and a small buzzer above will indicate whether the priest is in the house.

The clergy of the Parish have been preaching in various places: Rev. E. N. Webber, at St. Paul's, St. Luke's, Germantown, and All Saints' School, Germantown; Rev. F. D. Ward, at St Elizabeth's, St. Michael's, Wilmington, Del.; Rev. W. A. McClenthen, at Transfiguration, Calvary, The Annunciation, St. Elizabeth's, St. Timothy's and Mount Calvary, Baltimore.

Packages of envelopes for next year have been distributed; in some cases the numbers have been changed. If anyone has been overlooked, they may easily remedy the defect, and if anyone desires a supply they may be obtained. It is a great satisfaction that for the most part those who accepted envelopes for the year past have faithfully carried out the plan and paid regularly.

It is particularly requested that all communicants fill out the cards for Easter Communion with their Christian name, residence and hour; and if at some other altar, to state it. It will be a convenience if communicants of other parishes, expecting to make their Communion here, fill out cards, that we may have an idea as to numbers. Kindly send in cards as early in Holy Week as possible.

Calvary.

Spohr's "Calvary" will be sung in the Church on Tuesday evening, March 31st, at 8 o'clock, instead of Wednesday, April 1st. The choir of St. Paul's Church, Camden, N. J., will take part. Cards of admission may be obtained by members of the congregation from the Choirmaster or Clergy and will be good for admission up to 7.40 o'clock, when others will be able to get in.

We understand that this music has only been sung once in Philadelphia, so it will be an opportunity to be taken advantage of.

Easter Offerings.

The succession of rainy Sundays has affected the income of the Parish quite considerably. A generous Easter offering for current expenses would enable us to go through the summer without any deficit. For the past eight years the Parish has not borrowed any money to meet its debts, although sometimes the balance in bank has been low. In the year ending March 24th it was difficult to make our way. We should like to have many more persons do their full share.

Easter Day.

Members of the Congregation will be admitted (for the Late Mass) through the door of the Parish Building, up to 10.30 o'clock, when the corridor doors will be opened. Communicants of the Parish are reminded of the privilege and benefit of their Easter Communions and warned to prepare themselves that they may with proper dispositions receive the Sacred Body and Blood of the Only Saviour to their soul's health and salvation.

Easter Confessions.

The hours of the Clergy during Holy Week will be as follows:

Rev. G. H. Moffett—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, 10.30-11, 4-5, 7-8; Good Friday, 3-5.30, 7-10 P. M.; Easter Even, 9-12.30, 2-5.30, 7-10.30.

Rev. C. C. Quin—Thursday, 4-5, Good Friday, 4-5, 8-9; Easter Even, 4-5, 8-10.

Rev. F. D. Ward—Thursday, 4-5, 7-8; Good Friday, 4-5; Easter Even, 3-5, 7-10.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen—Thursday, 4-5; Good Friday, 7-8; Easter Even, 4-5, 7-8.

Rev. E. N. Webber—Thursday, 7-8; Good Friday, 8-9; Easter Even, 3-4; 8-9.

It is hoped that many will take advantage of the earlier days and not put off their Confession until the last moment.

Father Benson.

We are indebted to the courtesy of the Mother Superior of All Saints' for a photograph of the founder and first Superior of the Society of St. John Evangelist. This Parish owes a great debt to him for his willingness to undertake the care at a critical time in its history and for the great privilege which it enjoyed during the period of that intimate connection. A good friend, he ever provided for the spiritual welfare of the people, and through the union privileges were enjoyed and benefits had that belong to the cherished history and have left indelible marks on the souls of the people. The photograph is enlarged from one taken, we believe, about the time that he retired from the office of Superior and began his "pilgrimage" around the world, which concluded in his years of witness in Boston, "Satan's Seat." The photograph hangs now in the library of the Clergy House.

Rev. Dr. Upjohn, Rector of St. Luke's, Germantown, sends copies of two sermons preached by him and printed by request, "The Correction of the Present Local Title of the Church." A careful reading and study cannot but help to the understanding of this matter. The ordinary layman, however, is hopelessly ignorant of spiritual things and ready to believe and to be convinced of anything except truth, as witness his letters to the press or his speeches at Diocesan or General Convention.

Easter.

Easter joy is the anticipation of that latter day when the Redeemer shall stand upon the earth; when, after worms shall have destroyed these mortal bodies of ours, we shall rise and in our flesh see God. It is the fruit of the hope that when this troubled dream of life is over and dust returns to dust as it was, the dissolving habitation of God will be guarded by Him until the great Archangel's note of doom shall call to judgment; when we shall rise as He rose, in the image of the Heavenly. A hope that is grounded on the eternal fact that the soul of the Saviour returned to the tomb and, re-entering the cold and silent body, He rose and came forth triumphant.

The Resurrection took place a long time ago and in a distant land. The report is spread throughout the world and is come down to us; the strange occurrences of that night when the Roman guard was watching round the dead Christ, peering through the mists of fear and gloom, not knowing what to expect as the hours dragged slowly on and the dismal darkness thickened. The stillness is broken by a sound like the distant rush of a coming storm; the earth heaved and trembled; the trees quivered and rustled in the darkness; and a figure of dazzling whiteness passed before them and pushed aside the stone from the grave. Recovering from their swoon of terror, they rushed away to the city and told the authorities what had happened. From that day to this, worshipers of the risen Saviour from every nation under Heaven have gone to pay their devotions there and have heard the same tale and gazed in reverence on the place where angels from Heaven came and gazed and knelt when they saw the empty tomb and the grave clothes lying that had wrapped the dead. Men walked and talked again with their Lord and God in the flesh and blood that was rent asunder by the soldier's lance, now glorified, immortal. This is the narrative we have heard, that the faithful millions down the generations have heard, that the Gospel confirms, and that an unbelieving world denies.

Geniuses of human invention have woven many fancies and believed many incredibilities—denying the Resurrection, giving the lie to Scripture, charging the Apostles with fraud and Our Saviour with connivance, and the Christian world with folly.

What they believe is not the least concern to us. It is too much to expect anyone to keep pace with a belief that changes from age to age and from Sunday to Sunday; on which could not possibly be established any Easter joy at all. No human being ever built an elaborate scheme of happiness on that which was doomed to change and vanish before it was realized. Nobody ever believed a tale in which no two reporters agreed. That which is fickle never commanded the actions nor the affections nor the belief of anybody. Its highest accomplishment is the outward conformity to the custom of Christians throughout the world—the patronage of high religious festival at this season of the year—the habit dictated by the wisdom that discerns and appropriates the serviceable—a chaos of vague, confused, fluctuating ideas, fortuitous emotions and empty feelings.

We rejoice in the definite assurance that our nature has triumphed over death and risen glorified—the nature into which was poured the treasures of holiness that constituted it the life of the world forever—the nature through which alone we have access to God and Heaven—through which alone God visits His people—by which only we are filled with grace and made one body with Him, that He may dwell in us and we in Him.

That is the solid consolation we desire now and which will remain when feeling and fancy shall have faded away and the fire of life is smouldering under the ashes of gray old age, and when the angel calls us from the business of time to the judgment of eternity.

Discipline.

"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me" was the restraint imposed on human action by Him who came to rescue a fallen world.

The unbridled gratification of desire is the history of the world's ruin. The dignity and glory of restraint is the history of its restoration. The stern, hard outline of the Cross, with its pain, death and suffering is the standard set up. It is a puzzling world, full of bright promise, but big with disappointment. Set before men duty rather than desire, self-restraint rather than self-expansion, as the master motives. We need to restore "I ought" as a formula of life instead of "I like" or "I choose." The Church ever puts before us the great necessity and the supreme dignity of discipline; it is needed at the present time. The public discipline, the merciful tribunal of penance, the healing humiliation of confession, are what the Church counsels for the struggle with sin, together with fasting and self-denial. The world has lost much in its neglect of fasting; temperance has lost its power and its meaning. The system of the Church is stern and draws down the wrath of the fanatic and the scorn of the shallow; it reaches down into the very texture of life, demands that her children conform and promises a service which is dominion and a knowledge which is life, a fullness and liberty greater than is the result of license.

The baptized child is put under discipline immediately, starts out on life pledged to give up, to believe and to do. The Church insists on a particular attitude toward some of the great forces of life. The child says, "I shall think as I like"; the Church says, "You are pledged to renounce the world, the flesh and the devil." The modern world shrinks from definite terms, decided action and a positive attitude; it accepts much of the devil's teaching. Some knowledge of the world is welcome and the flesh is pacified with the remark that a weise should try to be a man, not a monk. The Church insists on "renounce," a severe word with a note of defiance; it is protest as well as avoidance. The barriers between right and wrong are being pulled down and we are urged to accept a morality with customs not objectionable to the man of the world.

The devil, we are told, does not exist; the early scriptures are legends; there was no fall; man is getting better by self-reliance and self-development and must not waste time or calling upon an imaginary Being or going to church. Unless a man is loyal to his pledged attitude toward these three real enemies, he becomes perplexed and loses way. The world wants co-operation, does not care for fasting, alms-giving, self-denial and shudders at the bare suggestion of confession or discipline or self-restraint; it has its powers and is hard to resist.

The flesh is a foe which easily disguises itself. The child is pledged before it has been met; we have a race of informed but not educated; family life is degraded; an unholy paganism is supreme.

The Church also says you are pledged to believe all that and only that which God teaches; the form of sound words is the way of salvation. Few accept that failures to believe are as sinful as failures to obey in those who have the opportunity. The sinner's hell, punishment; the very idea of salvation, atonement, the threats and warnings of God are either ignored or openly despised. The Christian has pledged himself to give up all that God hates, to do all that God wills. Duty rises up, for conduct is not left to inclination; the relation to God and to one's neighbor is a matter of a solemn pledge; offenses against God are as serious as crimes punished by law of the land. The Church, the ministry, the doctrine of Holy Trinity, are part of God's plan and revelation. Our religious duties are not a matter of caprice. We have a duty to our fellow-men; we need discipline to restore and carry out all this. The doctrine of the Fatherhood of God is the popular one; it is a grand one if it be supported by the knowledge of a Saviour and a doctrine of grace by means of a sanctifying Spirit. With this we can go into the world which we were meant to regulate and subdue. —Condensed from article by Canon Newbolt in The Treasury, March, 1903.

Ascensiontide.

The mysteries of the Kingdom of God are not interesting or attractive to the natural man; he does not see the use of confession and absolution; he believes in committing sin and then forgetting all about it, rather than coming with contrition for forgiveness; he does not believe that Jesus is present, as He has promised in the Blessed Sacrament, and therefore he does not come into the presence of the Blessed Saviour to make his supplications, thanksgivings and intercession. It does not make any difference to him; he does not come to God's house on the great days of the Church year to testify to his loyalty to the Risen and Ascended Lord; human love, earthly gain, worldly profit control and direct his aims and motives, the heavenly delights have no influence over him. Such individuals discuss religion, criticise doctrine, discipline and worship with all the assurance of "the learned," but in practice they do little, they care less. Many Christian people neglected the Feast of the Ascension; to them it was no different from any other Thursday in the year, the fact celebrated has no meaning in their lives.

At 7 o'clock a solemn mass was sung, with a fair attendance of worshipers; the choir and acolytes had breakfast in the refectory of the clergy house. Later on the boys of the choir, under the care of the Rev. C. C. Quin and Mr. Sears and the other clergy as guests, went to Laurel Springs, N. J., for a day's outing, which, from every account, they enjoyed very much.

The alms for the Seashore Home, perhaps owing to the fact that notice was not given on the previous Sunday, only amounted to $28.05, it is hoped that those who did not have a favorable opportunity will put their donation in the box or else in an envelope properly marked.

Communicant List.

Canon XVI, § 2, of the Digest of the Diocese of Pennsylvania requires an annual report to be made as to communicants, the lapsed, the excommunicate, those lost sight of by removal. It is necessary that every parishioner, to be in good standing, must at the very least have performed their Easter duty. Those who do not take sufficient interest in their religion to attend to this only moderate obligation have not cause of complaint when some time after they learn that their names have been removed from the parish list and so reported to the Registrar of the Diocese.

Thomas Alfred Starkey, D. D.

It is eminently proper that we should take some notice of the greatly beloved Bishop of Newark, whose soul went forth into the nearer presence of Almighty God on Rogation Sunday, May 17th, not to bear any testimony to his life services or personal worth, but to ask the prayers of the faithful for the repose of his soul. The special interest arises from one fact, on November 4, 1868, his name was officially presented to the vestry for election as Rector of this Parish, and we have reason to think that he ever looked back upon this as a reason for calling forth his sympathy in its affairs. May his soul rest in peace!

Corpus Christi.

The Thursday after Trinity Sunday is always set apart for the celebration of the Feast of the Blessed Sacrament. This year it is June 11th, the Feast of St. Barnabas, Ap., which has a Collect, Epistle and Gospel, and so may not be transferred. The early masses will be of St. Barnabas. At 9 o'clock a solemn mass will be sung in honor of the Blessed Sacrament. Vespers of the C. B. S. will be sung in St. John's Chapel on Wednesday, at 5.15 P. M., and the annual meeting of St. Saviour's Ward will be held in the lower vestry immediately after.

Parish Notes.

The Tuesday Bible Class is discontinued.

The morning sermon will be at the end of High Mass.

The Catechism, the Little Catechism and Women's Bible Class is discontinued.

After Trinity Sunday there will be only a Low Mass at 9.15 on Sundays and no instruction.

A pyx made of gold, for carrying the Blessed Sacrament to the sick and dying, is being made for the Church.

It was unavoidable that the arrangement for laying the tiles in the south porch should have been made during the Rogation days; it no doubt caused some inconvenience, and for that we are sorry.

The Guild of the Holy Child had a picnic on Saturday, May 23d. A large stage took the very happy party to Bartram's Gardens, where they had a pleasant time, with ice cream, cake, etc. Some music greatly added to the delight.

The Right Rev. the Bishop Coadjutor will give the Sacrament of Confirmation on Tuesday in Whitsun Week (2d June), at 8 o'clock. The change of day and date has been made to fit in with some of his other engagements.

The vote in the Diocese Convention for the correction in the legal designation of the Holy Catholic Church in the United States of America was a strong indication that the present misleading and unfortunate nickname must be dropped, if not "at this time" yet surely "at some time."

The doors at the south porch are now finished, and the red quarry tiles have been laid in the south porch, surely furnishing a much more worthy entrance to the Church. New swing doors of oak, with leaded glass, have been ordered for the north entrance, and red quarry tiles for the north porch.

The Rogation Intercessions were well and faithfully kept by those who promised for this purpose. Many others, as they could, came and entered into the devotional act. Those who for insufficient reason neglected their duty or shirked the responsibility have added another to the many other privileges offered by our Lord in which they have taken no part. Spiritual sloth, fatigue, indifference and coldness are symptoms of a serious malady of the supernatural life of a Christian soul, one which, unless checked by suitable remedies, can only end in the death of an immortal soul.

Catechism Picnic.

The annual picnic for the children of the Catechism, their families and friends will go this year to Burlington Island Park on Saturday, June 13th.

The excursion will be made in union with the Catechism of St. Elizabeth's Parish, which will make it possible to have more in the way of entertainment. There will be ball games for the boys and music for those who enjoy it. The park is up the Delaware, opposite Bristol, and the trip on the river is especially delightful. As usual, tickets will be given to the children. Others may have them at 40 cents for adults' tickets and 20 cents for a child's. These tickets are to be gotten only from the Clergy and Sisters and not on the boats. Boats going up leave Chestnut street wharf at 8 and 9.30 A. M., 1 and 2 P. M., returning, they leave the park at 6 and 8 P. M. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may care for what promises to be a very delightful outing.

Sea Isle City.

The work is something more than the maintenance of a house at the seashore, it is the providing of spiritual privileges for all who may be sojourning at Sea Isle City during July and August that they may live like Christian men and women, not like heathen and savages. This is more important than is usually thought, it is a privilege not to be estimated by an ordinary calculation, that mass should have been said in the temporary chapel seventy-five times and, particularly, opportunity given for the performance of Sunday duty to all who would take advantage of it. The report for 1902 gives the names of 51 firms who made donations in kind, and of 85 individuals who supported the work by their subscriptions and donations. The expenses were met, but no balance for further improvements or repairs and these are needed each year; the work does not appeal to people, because it is not non-sectarian, and because there is no claim for salaries on the part of those who do the work, which is laborious, even though it is cheerfully given.

The courtesy of the Officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad in providing a special car for each party from Camden direct to the house and also on the return of each party a special car from the house to Camden was greatly appreciated, and it is hoped the same arrangement may be made this year. It is also expected that the services of the church will be provided as last year, the cost of this is defrayed from a special donation for this purpose. Brooms, brushes, dust pans, large porcelain-lined pots, knives and forks are needed, bathing suits for children five to ten years of age are also needed.

The house can only shelter a certain number, applicants can only be favorably considered for periods during which there is room available. Each year some are disappointed because they have been refused, usually for the time during which they wanted to go. There must also be an obedience to the house rules, otherwise extra trouble is given to the Sisters in charge, who make such rules as few as possible and administer them as kindly as they can.

Subscriptions and donations in money may be sent to John Douglass Brown, Esq., Treasurer, 519 Drexel Building, or to the Sister in charge All Saints' Mission House, Cherry and Lambert Streets, Philadelphia. The Parish Magazine of the Church of the Annunciation announces that a special collection would be taken on Rogation Sunday for the Home, renewing their liberal interest of last year. The amount has just been received from the Rev. Rector, $15.00. A strawberry festival was arranged to be held in St. Clement's Parish Building on Wednesday evening, May 27th, under the direction of St. Mary's Guild.

The lots at Point Pleasant are still seeking a purchaser; it is very much to be desired that they may be sold and the money so obtained applied to the betterment of the Sea Isle property.

Apparently the investment at Sea Isle was made at a very opportune time; all indications seem to point to the fact that an effort is to be made to call people's attention to the place as a desirable and healthy one for a summer's outing or residence.

Confirmation.

The provision in the Prayer Book for the preparation of candidates for Confirmation seems meagre. The Godfathers and Godmothers are charged to take care that children be brought to Confirmation so soon as they can say the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments and are instructed in the Church Catechism. The acquisition of this qualification would not require more than two or three days' schooling.

This seems insignificant compared to the three years' catechumenate of former times, into which the person was admitted if he professed a desire to be received into the Church and there were no objectionable circumstances, and he showed a satisfactory sincerity. He was then grounded by a thorough and particular practical education, ending in a more special preparation in which fasting and mortification formed a prominent part.

The conditions of receiving a sacrament are the same now as then. The Church has nothing more nor less to teach the children of one generation than of another. She has received no supernatural endowment lately which facilitates the preparation of candidates so much that she can do the work of three years in three days. The work has not changed and the faculty has not changed—for the better. And the material is no more workable. If the ancient Church had Jews and idolaters to convert it had no greater obstacles to surmount than the modern Church, it being at least as easy to convert an idolater as a person who believes nothing. It does not appear we are enjoying any advantage whatever; all the labor that was required at any time is required now.

This would lead us to look for candidates for Confirmation among the regular congregation only. The Church seems to contemplate only those who have been taught so soon as they were able to learn what their Christian profession is, and have regularly received authoritative instruction and are familiar with all things that a Christian ought to know and believe to his soul's health and have lived a godly, virtuous and sober life, realizing fully what his baptismal obligations are; to follow Christ, cleansing his soul and mortifying his affections.

But there is other material than this worked in, persons who do not offer themselves but are solicited, who give no evidence whatever of their sincerity, who do not spend three years in the Church, who probably were never inside the Church three times in their life, who are not instructed nor informed that instruction is necessary, who have never practiced the Christian religion and are entirely unaware of what they are doing. The natural observation is that this unseasoned timber is poor stuff to build a Church of and it is not improved by receiving a sacrament unworthily.

The motive of this amazing proceeding is not very clear. A more complete disowning of a sacrament could not be, not by those who reject Episcopacy. For even they respect Confirmation enough to retain a remnant of it in an actual ceremony or in a public profession of religion, or joining the Church, or by some other occasion. They regard it as a useful means of propagating the faith they believe and restraining the young from straying out of the fold.

But no such purpose is served at all by dragging persons before a Bishop, for experience has taught them, if nothing else has, that recruits from this source are rare. The prevailing result is these persons are as seldom seen in Church after they are Confirmed as before.

The fact of the matter is, where Confirmation has been robbed of the character of a sacrament it has been transmogrified into a conventicle revival.

If one could believe all the reports of conversions and confirmations the whole land would be pious indeed and an infidel would be as rare as a unicorn.

Mission in Wuchang, China.

The Rev. S. H. Littell writes, under date of April 17th, for himself and his colleague, Rev. R. E. Wood, to thank St. Clement's not only for the offering sent in January for the associate mission, but also for the interest and sympathy shown in the work.

"Now, as to the use of your gift. It comes in time to help considerably in the erection of St. Mark's Church, Wuchang. Fr. Wood is in charge and we have just completed arrangements for starting the building as soon as a suitable contractor can be found. St. Mark's, with its school, dispensary, catechist living on the ground, with its temporary chapel, its growing influence and an out-station recently opened, has come to need a more fitting church, and we plan to erect a dignified building which will accommodate 200 or 225 people. Our present Chapel can hardly hold over ninety, and is entirely inadequate. The new building, or rather, the portion we are erecting at present, is to cost about $3000 (local currency), and its erection as well as the land it is to stand on, and the present buildings all have been made possible by the kindness of friends at home. Our Bishops here have appreciated the work done at St. Mark's, St. Saviour's and St. Andrew's, Wuchang, by the associate mission through the generosity of friends. Practically all three stations have been built without calling on the Board of Missions. I beg you to ask your good people to remember us in their prayers, to pray diligently for China in her great need and for mission work here."

The Nickname "Protestant Episcopal."

Fastened upon Christian people, as a mark of supreme contempt, the title of Protestant, in its career of nearly four hundred years, has added nothing to the glory of God's people, nor achieved anything that should cause those who love the Lord to do anything to defend this term from the disgrace it merits; under all circumstances, at this and every other time church people should indignantly condemn it as unworthy of the religion of Christ, as a degrading epithet and nickname applied to His followers.

It stands for no definite religious principle nor proclaims any definite truth of the Holy Gospel. We cannot say that we believe in the Holy Catholic Church, in the solemn services of the church and go out into the streets and permit ourselves to be called "Protestants" or even "Episcopals" without great sacrifice of principle and denial of our true position. The descendants of the "signers" and of the worthies of the Colonial times and of the heroes of the Revolutionary Wars may flatter themselves that "our fathers" or "our ancestors" knew what they were about; but no one else supposes for an instant that they are examples of ecclesiastical orthodoxy to be followed in their religious ideas.

The present nickname "Protestant Episcopal" is unworthy of the Church as the "Bride of Christ," it is a term of derision, a mark of hatred almost universally disused now, except when speaking with outsiders and in some legal document; among ourselves we always speak of "the Church" and "Churchmen." If any other Christian body covets it they ought to be welcome to it. While the mischievous influence of this nickname dominated the Church, she had only the appearance of a petty, almost contemptible sect, and it has been the assertion of her claim, as entitled to the confidence and obedience of Christian men, because of her unbroken history from Christ and His Apostles, her historic Episcopate, not from "Henry VIII" or "William and Mary," but from the Lord Himself, that has won the place of respect and influence that she now occupies.

This may be a "Protestant Nation," as certain persons maintain, but that should be a cause of sorrow, not of boasting, because it means practically that the people of this country have no definite religious convictions, do not believe in the one True God and Jesus Christ whom He has sent; are not living in obedience to His revealed Will and are not seeking first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness.

The epithet "Protestant" is not sacred from associations of time, circumstances, history or people; it is hateful in itself and for what it covers and represents; as applied to ourselves, it is untrue, mischievous and absurd. The only serious reason given for its longer continuance is a twofold fear that in any change there might arise some legal difficulty about money and property, and that our sectarian friends would grieve over this further evidence of our lack of sympathy with their religious position. We are above everything else intensely respectable, and many are afraid that we would lose that particular advantage. The whole situation shows that sooner or later this inexpediency dodge and "at this time" argument must go. The Church must present herself to the world in her real and true character whether others like it or not, without compromise or fearfulness; she may be "hot" or "cold," but she may not be "lukewarm" for that is hateful to God and that is what the resolution means which has been so craftily presented to the Dioceses by a Commission of the General Convention, and which, we in this Diocese have been told, it would be "discourteous" on our part to criticise. It is not a very closely kept secret who was the author of the resolution in its present form. The Diocese of Pennsylvania by its Committee on the subject and by the action of its Convention has again been unfaithful to an opportunity for God's glory and the welfare of His Church and people.

The movement which has begun for the insertion in all documents of the true name will only end with the accomplishment of that purpose; meanwhile by private prayer, the offering of the mass, the instruction of people in the faith, worship and discipline of the Church will progress. Our friend, Rev. Herbert Parrish, has inaugurated a league with this object in view, which we commend to the attention of all who are not "lukewarm."

Laymen.

Holy Orders is an eternal gift of Christ to His Church. Without the Church as He created her, they would cease to be. The vocation is given primarily for the sake of the whole body. It is inconsistent with our Lord's gracious purpose that there should be any hostility or mistrust between the laity or clergy. Yet the first ecclesiastic quarrel was between the laity and clergy at Corinth, which St. Clement rebuked.

This spirit constantly appears in history: Investitures, supplication of beggars, Cromwell and his master, suppression of convocation, outcry at present against clericalism, efforts of politicians, lawyers, agitations to humiliate, impoverish and reduce the influence of the clergy; the cry of sacerdotalism, all these bear witness to some deep antagonism. It is not surprising; there must be a conflict between the worldly minded, those who have no king but Caesar, no world but this, no God except their own will and pleasure on the one hand, and a body of men pledged to the service of God and the spread of His kingdom. No doubt the clergy are partly to blame, but the tendency to attack a spirit of sacerdotalism rests on no true foundation; it is an attack upon the clear principles on which the ministry is based, the commission from above, the ambassadorship of Christ, the power to administer the gifts of grace and truth, the transmission of a gift and office by direct succession from the Apostles. It can only be resisted by a clear braver statement of truth without compromise. To attempt to harmonize the differences is to run the risk of being disloyal to truth. Christianity without priesthood, in so far as it is more than a mere phantom, is an actual perversion of truth.

There may be danger of a caste with feelings and interests their own and apart, but a more serious one would be for the clergy to lose faith in their office.

In the hour of need men will never turn to one who has belittled his office but to one who has magnified it and striven himself to be worthy of it.

There are some signs of the laity awakening to their duty, but first of all he must have a clear understanding of the position of the clergy, then certain responsibilities of his own will be acknowledged. If the clergy knew that their flocks expect from them more than an ordinary respectability of life and discharge of certain ministerial duties; that they look for a resolute stand for truth, a courage in meeting the laxness and dislike of religious obligation which mark the present age. Further, the serious question of vocations will solve itself. A great responsibility in this matter attaches itself to parents. Many true vocations are lost through early discouragement and lack of sympathy. Signs of vocation should be followed by prayer and hope and the readiness of self-sacrifice.

If Holy Scripture alone is considered the clergy have an inherent claim to some sort of obedience; in spite of many shortcomings they represent Christ Himself and by Christ's appointment. They are endowed with their office by the direct action of His Holy Spirit. By their means Christ still reconciles, teaches and rules mankind. Within their proper sphere, the Word, the Sacraments and His law, they have a divinely sanctioned claim to be obeyed. Those who despise them despise Christ. If there is a dread responsibility attaching to the preaching of the Gospel to absolving and blessing in Christ's name, is there not an equal responsibility attaching in their measure to those who hear?

The intense responsibility of the pastoral office is in itself a claim upon that true obedience which springs from charity. If at times the clergy seem "meddlesome," or, if they regard certain things as grave, which many consider trifles, they should be given credit of looking on human life as those who must give account for themselves and others. This sympathy will find its highest expression in prayer. The Ember seasons afford a devout opportunity for the exercise.

In the ordination service the sheep are solemnly commended to the shepherd. If to the one the words are a call to a life of devotion and holy fears, to the other they are a call to love and to prayer. "They are the sheep of Christ, which He bought with His death and for whom He shed His blood. The church and congregation whom you must serve is His Spouse and Body."

Prayer lifts all to an atmosphere too high for strife and controversy. Prayer is the voice of that charity which alone can fulfill the prayer of the Lord himself.—Condensed from "Holy Order" by Rev. A. R. Whitham (Oxford Library of Practical Theology).

Sea Isle City.

The house was ready to greet the visitors on Monday, June 29, when the first party, eager and happy, arrived, starting out with a household of 42. The continued courtesy of the Pennsylvania Railroad Officials in providing a special car for our party, which carries them from Camden to a point on the Avalon Branch directly back of the Home, and stopping for them at the same point on their return, is a great convenience; and the greatly reduced rates of fare reduces expenses; no little consideration. Friends of last year have renewed their interest and welcome. Rev. F. D. Ward went down on Tuesday, June 30, and the daily Mass was begun on July 1, and he also took the Sunday services during his stay. Not many of the people outside care for these religious privileges, but they are necessary for our own. Rev. W. A. McClenthen and Rev. G. H. Moffett shared the duty during the month.

The first party came back on Friday, July 10. They were very good, no discipline, no accidents to distress. They had a good time on the Fourth, and one day had a picnic to Stone Harbor, this with bathing, sunshine and fresh air filled their time. Some few, for good reasons, stayed over. A new set came on Monday, July 13, a household of 51, and stayed until Friday, July 24. They soon felt at home, and with their simple amusements, the sun, air and water, they soon were more than happy. The third party, arriving on July 27 for their visit, made a household of 50. Before May closed every place for the summer was asked for and promised, but as time came some were prevented by sickness or other things, but their places could be filled when known in time. Many had to be refused because unable to come at the time when there was room.

Further experience only confirms the wisdom of settling at Sea Isle, it seems so exactly suited to the purpose. The house might, for convenience and utility be larger; perhaps another year there may be $1,000 available, the sale of those Point Pleasant lots would do a good deal toward this. We would urge all who have not as yet sent in their contributions to do so, although we have to gratefully record that the generous kindness of our friends has left us encouragement for the future.

The same arrangement as last year has been made at the Hotel Colonnade for the Clergy.

Dr. Wells has been very kind in attending to the few cases of temporary illness that have occurred.

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1903.

Parish Notes.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen returned from his holiday on July 18th.

The usual Offices of the Guild of St. Mary and of the Guild of St. Vincent will be omitted in August.

It is a great help in meeting our summer expenses that the envelopes should be so carefully and regularly handed or given in.

A Requiem Mass for the repose of the soul of Thomas Connor (anniversary) was said in the Crypt Chapel on Wednesday, July 8th.

The lace donated last winter has been made ready for use on the High Altar during the summer. It is entirely worthy and very appropriate.

A piece of lace, with linen, for use on Altar of St. John Evangelist, has been given as a thank offering for recovery from sickness. M. F. F.

A Missal Desk for use at Altar of St. Katharine, made of brass with dull finish to correspond with the candlesticks, has been given as a thank offering for recovery from sickness. M. F. F.

Rev. F. D. Ward took duty at Sea Isle City from June 30th to July 14th, when he returned to Philadelphia, but left for his holiday on July 17th. He will be away until the latter part of August.

Rev. E. N. Webber spent July at Willsboro, New York, where he was able, through the courtesy of the Rev. Rector of Essex, Diocese of Albany, to minister to the All Saints' Sisters of the Poor in their house on Lake Champlain.

The Pyx, to which reference was made last month, was partly made of old gold, acknowledged a few months ago. A gold chain has been provided for it and the money needful for its making, "in honor of the Blessed Sacrament."

Some of the members of the Guild St. Vincent spent the Fourth of July and Sunday at Island Heights, New Jersey, under the charge of the Chaplain, Rev. C. C. Quin, and the Warden, Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr. They had a very enjoyable time.

Rev. Erskine Wright, formerly one of the Clergy of the Parish, spent a few days with us during the latter part of June before sailing for a tour of England and the Continent. His work in Danville seems to be in good condition with many indications of God's blessing.

Mr. Frank D. Baugher kindly sends us two photographs of Clergy House interiors, the only ones that have been taken. One taken from the library looks into the dining room, includes mantel piece and sideboard, with a corner of the library. The other looks into the library, shows table and fireplace. We are glad to have these.

Attention is called to the distraction of persons going out, coming in or changing from one pew to another during the sermon on Sunday mornings. Also to the practice of sitting at the rear of the Church when few are present, which makes necessary greater strain on the Priest who may be taking the service.

Some of the Clergy must necessarily be in the city during the summer for the services and for such calls from the sick as may come. The new house, with its conveniences and comfort, has made this less of an effort than hitherto, especially during the intense heat of the month of July. This has been evident—it fulfils, and more, our expectations.

A happy incident of the month was the visit, of a few days only, of our dear friend, Rev. Herbert Parrish, after six years' absence. He said Mass at the Church and preached on one Sunday morning. He is rector of the Church of the Advent, San Francisco, Cal., and is doing a splendid work for Catholic principles and practice on the Pacific coast.

The ivory keys of the keyboard of the organ have been in bad condition for some time past, the damp weather of June injured them beyond ordinary repair. Estimates have been obtained for renewal with guarantee. The cost will be $60. The work will take some time, so that the organ will be out of use for some weeks during August. Some needful repairs to the pedal keys, amounting to $20, will be done at the same time.

We are very much indebted to the Rev. S. H. Littell and Rev. R. E. Wood, of St. Saviour's Associate Mission, Wu Chang, China, for photographs which give a very good idea of some of the buildings. We should be glad to show these to any who are interested in the China Mission. They tell a very interesting story of the present condition and progress of the work. Rev. R. E. Wood will be remembered as being at Point Pleasant a few years ago. The pictures are the proposed plan for St. Mark's, Wu Chang; St Mark's Day School, Wu Chang (this gives the little children); St. Saviour's at Christmas, viewed from the Court, the swing doors being removed; St. Saviour's Chapel, with Chinese Christmas decorations; Church of the Holy Nativity; St. Saviour's House, the belfry; St. Saviour's, the Men's Court.

The Mission House.

The summer is not a good time to raise money, with people scattered, and yet we have already heard from several persons interested in the religious life and the Sisters' work. We are encouraged to hope that a small elevator may be installed, properly and carefully balanced, that will relieve the strain on human life and strength. We do not plead for a luxury or even a comfort, the All Saints' Sisters would never consent to that, but for a very urgent need, a real necessity. Each outer Sister, we hope, may send an offering for this, now that its cost is so nearly assured.

We desire to call attention to the following kind reference to the Parish in the Bishop's address (page 63 of the Journal):

"St. Clement's Parish has erected and paid for a new and commodious Parish House." It is one more of those gracious marks of our Bishop's gracious courtesy and kindly sympathy which have never been lacking at any time during these eight years past.

The Altar Guild.

In spite of the very few members who have worked regularly and constantly during the past season, a very considerable amount has been accomplished. The beauty of the various vestments in materials, color, design as well as in the marvelous embroidery itself, reflects great credit on those who have so long and lovingly given of their time, taste and skill.

Among the different orders and gifts that may be specially mentioned are the following: A set of blue vestments for St. John's Church, Camden, N. J., to the order of Rev. G. R. Underhill, chasuble, stole, maniple, burse and veil, the designs are worked for the most part in gold thread, very effective and beautiful.

A set of white vestments, handsome silk brocade; chasuble, with red velvet orphrey; stole, maniple, veil and burse, the designs in gold thread on blocks of red velvet. This is a gift to St. Saviour's Church, Skaguay, Alaska.

A set of white vestments, handsome silk brocade. The chasuble has an orphrey of red silk worked with design in gold thread; stole, maniple, veil and burse have designs in gold thread and silks on blocks of red silk. Alb, amice and girdle are included in this set, which is a gift to St. Saviour's Mission, Wuchang, China, from the Altar Guild. The St. Saviour's Ward C. B. S. has sent $63.50 for this same mission to purchase a chalice and paten.

A complete set of white silk vestments, formerly used at St. Clement's, were thoroughly put in order, relined, etc., and sent to St. Mark's Church, Wilmington, N. C., where the Rev. E. R. Bennett is doing a very good work among the colored people.

A green silk chalice veil and burse was made and given to All Saints' Chapel, Orris Island, Maine, where several of our own people spend the summer and are interested.

A set of black silk vestments, chasuble, stole, maniple, veil and burse, the embroidery of very beautiful and effective design, was made for the chapel at Cragsmoor, N. Y., which is so dear to many St. Clement's people. In that beautiful stone church the privilege of a daily Mass is offered to all Catholics, as well as daily Even-song. It is a spot where Christian people may find health and vigor for tired, strained bodies without acquiescing in separation from religious privileges. Some friends, mostly, we believe, of St. Clement's Parish, paid the cost of materials.

Various other things were lovingly made and generously given in various parts of the country.

The Guild, because of lack of money, for good materials cost money, was unable to respond to many appeals that were urgent and deserving. Also the few who gave their time and services limited the amount of work that could be undertaken. The work of the year has been mostly for places outside the parish.

For next year two sets of vestments are ready to be taken in hand for the parish. A violet set for low Mass is partly finished; the design, a very beautiful one, was furnished by Mr. I. Ernest Linton. It will take a long time to complete, but will be pushed ahead in the fall. A green set for low Mass; the embroidery has been designed and the colors chosen by Rev. V. B. Lucas, now of London, but many will remember his taking temporary duty in the parish several years ago. This is very elaborate.

Terminology.

Some persons are accustomed to scoff at an accurate, scientific and true terminology. These do not follow God's revelation of His Nature, Name, Kingdom and Purpose; nor do they seem to realize how particular God has ever been of the names of His servants, how careful He was of the exact name of the forerunner of His Son.

It is the same in the history of the Church. It truly takes the uninstructed imagination of a modern Protestant that any Primitive Saint, for example, could consider that the nickname under which we suffer was suitable or worthy of any part of the Church of the Living God. Fortunately no one contends that it has any propriety, except that prejudice hangs on to it because of human respect, some fear of worldly consequences. Then the use of terms, definite and full of instruction, is objected to, "Mass," "Altar," "Priest," "Purgatory," "Penance," as tending to alienate. There have always been those who oppose strong doctrine, the great victories of the Church have been gained when she has asserted the truth positively without fear or favor. The fear of the Church's positive language often covers unbelief in vital doctrines. The Trinity, Incarnation, Redemption, Resurrection sometimes leads on to denial of these and always gives comfort to the enemy as well as an opportunity for the special adversary to blaspheme.

While the discipline of the Church gains and personal piety grows from the unqualified assertion of the Church's law to keep fast and festival, to practice penance, fasting communion, regular and frequent attendance at Mass, devotion to our Lord and the Blessed Sacrament, accurate terms, definite teaching, unfaltering, unequivocal statement of truth, custom and practice, compels the attention, informs the mind, captures the will. The seventy years of the Oxford movement shows an advance in every department of the Church's life and work that is not surpassed in any other country or time. Ever the Divine order is, "Speak unto the Children of Israel that they go forward."

Summer Episodes.

The hot weather soon scatters everyone who can get away, and in every direction over the whole length and breadth of the country; letters and messages come: From Nova Scotia, the cool and pleasant coasts of Maine, Kennebunkport and Beach, York Harbor, Orr's Island, each with their own associations and pleasant individual memories. Down along the Massachusetts shore, the New Jersey beaches, along the whole length, Asbury, Point Pleasant, Bay Head, Island Heights, Beach Haven, Atlantic City, Ocean City, Sea Isle City (now with its rapidly increasing attractiveness and delight), Cape May, and from the far Pacific coast. The nearby places on the main line, New York, Media and Baltimore branches of P. R. R. From the mountain regions, the Adirondacks, Catskills, Swangunk, cool, quiet and full of tonic; the Pennsylvania ranges, with their health-giving properties; the Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina mountains, and even farther south; the Colorado mountains and springs; the beautiful Lake Champlain and the Adirondack lakes. St. Clement's people, with undiminished love and affection, their freer life not causing them to forget their spiritual duties, in their own faithfulness are examples to others with fewer privileges or suggesting through their own needs spiritual hunger and thirst to be satisfied which had never before been realized.

It is astonishing and gratifying how willing the Clergy are to furnish the opportunities, how eager, not only our own, but other Christian folk are to take advantage. In one place Holy Communion every Sunday and Saints' Day and one weekday also with good attendance. In another a five-mile drive, starting at six o'clock and all the household ready and anxious to go, the young and the older ones alike. Under such circumstances the summer holiday rest, not only invigorates the body, but the soul's strength and vigor is not sapped during the process. All this is more than encouraging. Heads of a story that will never be written.

Not only in our own and adjacent places, but far away across the ocean, England, Scotland, France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, people there eyes and ears open, minds alert for the influence of the older stories and the different life, charmed and strengthened by the sight of churches, shrines, pictures, devotion, the strange and weird attraction of places, associated with holy lives and martyr examples, God's blessings and mercies in never-to-be-forgotten incidents reviving hope and courage, increasing devotion and renewing zeal and perseverance.

What an opportunity of far-reaching influence for people thoroughly in earnest, of those who see the good that may be accomplished, the spiritual influence that may be exerted rather than the watchful eagerness of those who delight to complain, the impatient anxiety of those whose selfish, grumbling spirit finds enjoyment only in what displeases and reaches after happiness only through dissatisfaction with what falls short of its ideal.

The letters of our people tell the tale of the wonderful progress of true Catholic privileges, not in a few favored places but wherever God's Truth, Law and Worship are maintained and where people's hearts beat responsive to His Revelation and Love, there is the mark of that wonderful Oxford movement, the evidence of Catholic custom and life upon our Communion.

Another thought must carry its grate-
